DEAR SIR,—While I think that farmers cannot mind their own business too much, I think also that we show too much indifference to the interests of others. We hold our tongue on questions of general importance, when a few lines in the local paper, (where every farmer should see it) giving our experience, or information we possess, would greatly assist in the selection of implements, seeds, trees, stock, etc., and the management of them when we have them. At the present there is no question before the farmer affecting his interests more, both in the present and future, than the selection of a sire horse, and with so many fine animals in the field it is difficult to come to a decision. While horse owners and their friends give us plenty of advice, there are many of their statements that lack one important point, namely, being founded on fact, and I am sorry to say that some farmers are not much better. There is one assertion in particular that I know is wrong and would like to correct, that is, that Lord Derby's stock in the past has been very inferior, and is made by men who know no more about Lord Derby's stock than the stock knows about them. Not being satisfied on this point myself, and being well acquainted in Peel county, I wrote early in the season to an old friend, J. F. Quinn, V. S., of Brampton, for Derby's record. He replied, "I have known Lord Derby since Jackson got him. We have never had a horse here that has done as much to improve the stock as Derby. (will notice here that that is high praise for any horse, as they had a fine class of heavy horses there before Derby was foaled, and have had many first-rate stallions to breed to.) "I think I handle more colts than any other man in this county and the Derby are second to none; they all come, good color, with plenty of bone and hair. You may rely on what I say, if you have a good mare don't hesitate to breed to Derby." Now, brother farmers, understand this is no advertising puff, has not been asked for by any horse buyer and is reliable. Concerning Derby's stock, it is the opinion of a practical, successful veterinary surgeon, the letter from which these facts are is the candid advice of friend to friend and is worth more to me as evidence of Derby's stock-getting powers than all the owners of Derby could tell me in a month. I give it to you to throw some light on a vexed question; just take it at its value.

Yours respectfully,
JAMES HANSON,
Artemesia.

ROCKLYN, Jan. 11th, 1886.

BEAR SCARE.—Last Friday the citizens of this place were startled by the appearance of a large bear which would weigh about 300 pounds. Mr. Tim Braidner gave the alarm, when J. E. Richards darted out at lightning speed armed with a whitewash brush; Hugh Currie, our genial blacksmith, followed close behind with a seven inch file as a weapon of war; Messrs. Braidner and Falls, each with a shot gun, brought up the rear, and a mighty chase they made, but bruin made good his escape, and his would-be captors returned weary and without a trophy except some small game including a number of mosquitoes.

Yours truly,
F. F. & M. S.

Fleshcrton.

From our own correspondent.

Rev. Mr. Avers preached a very interesting sermon in the Presbyterian church here, on Sabbath afternoon last.

The Methodist and Presbyterian Sabbath schools of this place purpose holding a union picnic in the Beaver meadow adjoining the village, on the afternoon of Wednesday, 23rd inst. A happy and enjoyable time is anticipated.

Quite a large crowd assembled in the East Grey agricultural grounds here on Monday afternoon last to witness the first game of the season here, being a lacrosse match between the Victorias of Meaford, and the Pioneers of Flesherton. The game was keenly contested by our boys, being the first match played with any other team, but resulting this time in a victory for the Victorias.

The brick work on the new Baptist church is being rapidly pushed forward. The anniversary services of the Presbyterian church is to be held in that church here on the last Sunday in this month. Particulars later.

Your correspondent has just received information of a death by drowning to another of the unfortunate citizens of our sister village, Priceville. Mr. Walker, a tailor by trade, an old gentleman living by himself, was first missed on Sunday morning. The evening of the same day it was discovered he had committed suicide, by tying his own tailor's "goose" and throwing himself into the mill pond. The body was found in about three feet of water.

Our brass band was out on Monday evening in good style, and serenaded three of our respected citizens—A. Munshaw, J. W. Armstrong and S. Damude. All three after enjoying several choice selections from the band, contributed liberally to the band fund by each placing a V in the leader's hand. The new uniforms forms for the band are now under way and are expected to be ready and in good trim for Dominion Day here, which, with the various games and amusements through the day and the grand procession and the grand oratorio of "Queen Esther" in the afternoon and evening, it is looked forward to as being the most interesting holiday ever spent in this place.

Holland Council.

Council met for the transaction of business on June 7th.

Reeve in the chair, members all present.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that the Clerk be instructed to notify the County Treasurer to erase the taxes charged against lot 3rd div. of 26, con. 1 E. G. R., being an error in assessment, and charge the amount against lot 3d div. of 26, E. G. R.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, that By-law No. 5 for the appointment of pathmasters, poundkeepers, and fenceviewers be read a first, second and third times and engrossed on the minutes.

A petition signed by Geo. Murray and 13 others with regard to getting some relief for Ronald McInnis. In due regard to the parties signing the above mentioned petition, the council do not feel inclined to entertain the same.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, the Clerk notify Marshal Ward to remove the fence off 50 sideroad that he has placed there immediately, otherwise steps will be taken to have it removed at his expense.

Moved by Mr. Williscroft, seconded by Mr. Howey, that the Reeve be instructed to get legal advice in the case of Marshal Ward, in the matter of putting fence across 50 sideroad, and that he take proceedings accordance with the advice.

Moved by Mr. Galbraith, seconded by Mr. Howey, that we build bridge across the river at the mill in Holland Centre, and that the job be let by public competition, the Deputy Reeve superintend the job.

Money for roads apportioned as follows: No. 1, $75; No. 2, $85; No. 3, $70; No. 4, $85; No. 5, $70. Road Commissioners the same as last year.

Moved and seconded that this Council adjourn till the 10th July.

CARSON PRICE, Clerk.

When you subscribe for a newspaper remember you will find things in it that you don't like, and other items of no particular interest to you. But the items will interst some one who has as much claim on the paper as you have. We were pleased to receive a call from Mr. P. Bruce who narrowly escaped death at the recent fatal fire in Owen Sound. Although very badly burned about the face and body, Mr. Bruce is rapidly getting around and not disfigured, as was at first supposed. We are glad to see him recovering so rapidly and hope soon to see him again doing a thriving business in Owen Sound.—[Chatsworth News.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparingand using. Send by mail by addressing with stamp naming this paper, W. A. NOYES, 149 Power's Block, Rochester N. Y.

COMMON SALT.—Half a teaspoonful of common table dissolved in a little cold water and drink, will instantly relieve heart-burn or dyspepsia. If taken every morning, increase the quantity gradually to a teaspoonful of salt and a tumbler of water, it will, in a few days, cure any ordinary case of dyspepsia, if, at the same time due attention is paid to the diet. There is no better remedy than the above for constipation. As a gargle for sore throat it is equal to chlorate of potash and is entirely safe. It may be used as often as desired, and, if a little is swallowed each time, it will have beneficial effect on the throat by cleasing it and by allaying the irritation. In doses of one to four teaspoonful in half a pint to a pint of tepid water it acts promptly as an emetic, and in case of poisoning is always at hand. It is an excellent remedy for bites and stings of insects. —[Cottage Hearth.

A peculiar Parisian fashion which has grown rapidly within the past few years is the custom for women to go bareheaded out of doors. The cap once worn by the laboring woman is now seldom seen.

George Holyland, of Fork, Md., was shearing a sheep the other day, when the animal kicked and drove one of the blades of the sharp shears into George's abdomen, inflicting a wound from which he soon died.

"Mosquitoes have seldom been thicker in Virginia than this spring," says the Milford Chronicle, and it goes on to tell of an ewe that was literally bled to death the other night, the pests attacking its udder, which was distended with milk.

Streator, Ill., has a cat that delights in killing snakes; but she nearly met her match the other day when she tackled a big garter snake. It coiled about her body, and the two rolled around on the ground until the teeth and claws of the cat got her the victory.

A darky did a big business selling eggs in Osborne the other day, at 60 cents a dozen. He was able to sell a good many at this figure by offering, as an inducement to buy, the privilege to the buyer of throwing them at his head thrust through a hole in a canvas.

The ten-year old Nancy Taylor of Grant, Iowa, reads with the book upside down, and writes with inverted characters, beginning at the right side of paper or slate. She says that everything within three feet of her eyes seems upside down. At a greater distance her sight is normal.

C. C. West, of Butler, Ga., went fishing two weeks ago, and wore an old vest. After getting home he hung it up. On Wednesday Mrs. West was feeling in the pockets for a match when a rattlesnake two feet long dropped from the torn lining. It must have got there the day Mr. West went fishing.

A barn was burned in Rockingham, Vt., not long ago, and a valuable horse was supposed to have been burned too; but the other day he was found in the possession of a milkman of a neighboring town, who had put his own old horse in the barn, stolen the good horse, and set fire to the building to conceal the theft.

A Kingston family moved from their house a month ago, and recently, the little girl of the family and her mother went to call on the lady who occupied the house they vacated. While there the child saw a very small baby that had arrived but a few days before. She looked at it carefully, and then said: "Mamma, we moved to soon: we'd have got that baby if we had stayed here."

Mr. A. H. Dayton of Springfield, Ohio, bought a chicken—so-called—for a recent Sunday dinner. The cook dressed it, and found within three shelless eggs. They were put into the frying pan along with the fowl, and in a moment there were three separate explosions like pistol shots, each egg was violently dashed against the ceiling, and the cook was badly burned. It is suggested that the hen had been feeding on dynamite.

Four years ago John Twombly went from Maine to Orange City, Fla., arriving there with seven dollars in his pocket. He set up a peanut stand, and in six months added fruit and cigars to his stock. Within a year tobacco, candy, and cider, and a few groceries were added. Out of this business John has paid several hundred dollars for old debts, bought a lot in a good locality, and on it built one of the best buildings in the town.

Mrs. Gollemame, with her three children, has just made the journey from Hamburg to San Jose, Cal. While they were journeying through Nebraska one of the little ones fell from the car window when the train was at full speed. The train was stopped after some delay, and the frantic mother and others hurried back to pick up the mangled remains. They found the youngster quite unhurt, playing with pebbles alongside of the track.

For sixteen years Margaret Jacobsen, known as "Crazy Maggie," has lived in a shanty in Chicago. Her only companions were dogs, and she subsisted by begging. One day last week she was arrested as insane. She resisted the policemen, and when overcome insisted that there was money in her shanty. There was. In a satchel was $661 in silver change; in stockings were gold and greenbacks. Over $1,000 was found, and they are looking for more.

The last ring story comes to hand as usual. This time the scene is laid in Kentucky, where five years ago William Howe Moorefield lost his sister's ring while fishing in a pond. Not long ago he went shooting bull frogs in the same pond, and while cutting off the hind legs of a big one that he had shot, what should he see protruding from the bullet wound in the side of the victim but his sister's long-lost ring, with the identifying inscription still quite legible.

Policeman O'Donnell of Cleveland attempted to arrest Andrew Zeuch, a saloon keeper, in whose place a lot of his countrymen were making a disturbance. The gang pitched on the policeman while he attempted to draw his revolver. One of his assailants grabbed it, and it looked bad for O'Donnell. Just then Charley Harris, a bootblack, rushed in, snatched the revolver, levelled it and yelled: "I'll shoot the first bloke what lays a hand on de cop!" The crowd fell back and the policeman took Zeuch to the lockup.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

One Good Turn Deserves Another.

It was only a little cottage standing behind a clump of bushes and shrubbery, and surrounded by a low stone wall, that stood basking in the sunshine on a beautiful summer's day in the heat of August. The way leading to "Peach Blossom Cottage," as it was called, was through a long arbor, from which hung delicious grapes as if ready to be plucked. On this day of which I speak a stranger entered the little village, and after brushing away the sweat from his brow, he proceeded to seek a place to rest himself from the long and tiresome journey. Glancing at him one would certainly term him a tramp, so dusty and travel-worn was he. As he passed one after another, and found nothing in the way of wooden stools and rustic benches, he almost despaired. When nearly dropping with fatigue he came in sight of "Peach Blossom Cottage"; he could not refrain from stepping over the wall, and seating himself upon an inviting bench under the arbor. Scarcely had he seated himself when a little child, of perhaps ten years, approached him with tears of sympathy in her soft blue eyes. As soon as she caught sight of him she ran into the cottage, and immediately reappeared with a soft white pillow, which she laid under his head. As the child prepared to go, his sad face beamed with a smile that spoke volumes of thanks. Presently he fell into a long and refreshing slumber that lasted until midnight, when he was awakened by the loud ringing of fire bells, which clanged out on the still night air. He rubbed his eyes and looked around him; then grasping the situation, he ran around to the side wing of the house, which was enveloped in flames. Already a large crowd had collected to note the progress of the flames. And after Farmer Brown, the owner of the cottage, looked around him to see that all was safe, a terrible thought occurred to him. His face grew pale as ashes, as his trembling words reached the heart of the multitude: "My daughter! my daughter! Oh, where is my daughter?" as his eyes sought the burning building. A ladder was quickly placed against it. Then, as Farmer Brown offered all his possessions for the recovery of his child, the traveller of the afternoon stepped forward amid the wonder of the people. As he placed his foot firmly upon the ladder, a shout rent the air; the multitued watched with eager eyes as he ascended the ladder and gained the top. All was still as the unknown man disappeared through the window. Once more a shout was raised, twice as noisy as the first, as the man appeared on the top bearing the almost suffocated child in his arms; just as he reached the ground, and everybody was rejoicing, the ladder caught fire and burned to the ground. Then Farmer Brown offered the hero what he had promised to give; but the good stranger answered, as he pursued his way, "Surely one good turn deserves another."

A Burmese Fairy Story.

Fairy tales are popular among the Burmese, and there is one which comes from over the border in Siam, which was told us by a Siamese. The exaggerations all hang together artistically, and are in the same key as it were: "There was once a king who heard that there was an enormous giant in a far country, and he declared that he should never rest until he had a hair of the giant's head. So he sent his fleet, and they sailed and they sailed and they sailed for weeks and weeks and weeks, and at last one day in the afternoon it became suddenly dark, and they stuck fast and could get neither forward nor backward. Now, the fact was that they got inside of a hole in a sort of carrot, the smallest vegetable in the giant's kingdom. And behold, the next morning the giant's children went out to fish, and as they went they picked up two or three elephants on their way for bait, but they were only able to catch a few of the very smallest fishes in the country—'something equivalent to your minnows,' said the narrator. And as they were going back they saw a carrot growing by the water's edge, and pulled it up to put it into the curry, and inside it was the whole fleet. After they got home the giant threw the fish and the carrot into the pot in order to boil them, when the fleet rose out of the root to the top of the water with all the men in it. 'What are those curious insects?' said the giant peering down into the pot. Then came a good deal more which the narrator had forgotten. The man tried to shout to the giant and tell him what it was they wanted, but their voices were too weak, and he could not hear a word they said. At length he lifted them up to his ear in his hand and a whole boat's crew marched in at the hole, and went over such a long way up inside, and then they all shouted together and told him they had come from their king to ask him for a hair of his head. So at last he was able to hear what even then seemed to him only a whisper. Unlike his kind, the giant was apparently as good-natured as he was big—he gave the hair, lifted them back to the sea, where the hair, when put on board the fleet, nearly sank it, after which he puffed out his cheeks and gave a tremendous blow, which carried the fleet straight home hundreds of miles at one go."

A Judge's Opinion.

While Judge Walton was at work in his chamber one day, many years ago, drawing up an opinion in a knotty case, a certain lawyer came in. This lawyer, who has since died, was a thin, toothpickish, dudish sort of man, whom the judge did not like very well, and than whom he had rather have seen Daniel Pratt himself walking into his chamber.

"Well, Brother Lightweight, what can I do for you this morning?" asked Judge Walton, hoping to get rid of the fellow.

"Nothing," he replied. "I only came in to make you a call."

After a disagreeable silence the judge looked up again and asked:

"Brother Lightweight, why don't you get married?"

"Because I can't afford it. How much do you suppose it costs me to live now?"

The judge said he wouldn't guess.

"Well, it costs me $6000 a year for just my own living."

An expression of surprise came on the judge's face.

"Lightweight," said he, "I wouldn't pay it. It isn't worth it."

Rowing on the Erie.

Uncle Pete Dugan is one of the oldest engineers on the Erie Railroad. He has followed boating and railroading from boyhood and is as ignorant of the country and its ways as if he had never been outside of a city street. During the past week business has been dull on the road and Uncle Pete has been enjoying a short vacation with his family. Tommy has a very fine yoke of oxen, and is as expert in driving them as his father is in managing a locomotive. On the day after his father's arrival Tommy yoked up his oxen for the purpose of drawing a load of wood. Uncle Pete was anxious to go with him and learn the process of "running the bullgines." The woods were about half a mile from the house, and up a steep hill. The up trip passed very pleasantly and Uncle Pete praised Tommy very highly on his skill as a driver. When they were ready to return Tommy fixed a secure seat for his father on the load, where he could hold on to one of the binding chains and a stake to steady himself. As soon as they were fairly headed for home, Tom gave the oxen a sharp cut with the whip, and sent them scrambling down the road at a lively gait.

"Easy, Tom, easy," said the old man, hugging closer to the load.

"Git up, Bright, git up Buck!" shouted Tom, giving them another cut.

"Easy, Tom. Drop 'em in easy, I tell you, or you'll ditch us as sure as thunder."

But Tom kept on plying the whip until they were dashing down the hill at a full canter.

"Slack up! slack up!" cried the old man, pulling at the binding chain as if giving the signal for down brakes.

"Can't slack 'em," shouted Tom. "Hang hard and you're all right"

They were now within a few rods of the woodshed, and the old man, accustomed to the guidance of the iron rails, saw no escape from mashing into the building.

Tom was still swinging the whip and shouting at the top of his voice. Uncle Pete became frantic. Catching Tom by the arm he cried out:

"Tom, you break-neck villain, throw 'em over; for Heaven's sake reverse 'em or we're gone to smash."

Tom brought up at the door of the woodshed with the oxen panting and blowing like volcanoes. The old man clambered down from his perilous seat, walked around the oxen, eyed them suspiciously, and then confronting his son, said:

"Tom, these machines may be all right for light grades and short runs, but if you have got the pluck to ride 'em over such roads as these without reverse or brake, you beat the old man, that's all."

Pride Comes Before a Fall.

A lump of clay and the end of a wax candle found themselves, by some strange chance, side by side one summer day, on a dust-heap. "I wonder you have the assurance to lie so close to me!" said the dainty wax, sneeringly: "a great, common lump of clay! and I have been on a fine lady's dressing-table" "Ah!" said the clay, humbly; "we are fellow sufferers in adversity; we must make the best we can of it. I ought properly to have been in yonder brick field." "What a come-down for me!" moaned the candle. "It does not signify what becomes of you." The clay wisely held his tongue. And the strangely-assorted companions in misfortune dropped into silence. "I wish it was a little warmer," said the clay to himself. "Dear me, how hot it is getting?" grumbled the wax candle. Presently the sun grew hotter and hotter, and the piece of wax candle gradually melted away. But the clay only became harder and firmer than ever. Thus it is, the hopeful and self reliant, when tried by the heat of adversity, come out of the fire the stronger and firmer But the weak and worthless pass into obscurity, and are no more heard of.

Thought Marriage Might Sober him Up.

Doosenberry was so full when he went to get married that he wanted to whip the minister, and offered to bet that he could pull one of the pillars from under the church roof and bring the whole structure tumbling in on them, a la Samson.

Minister to weeping bride—"Did you know this man drank when you accepted him?"

Weeping bride—"Y-y-yes, sir."

Minister—"Did you ever see him full before?"

Weeping bride—"Y-y yes, sir."

Minister—"Then why do you want to marry him?"

Weeping bride—"I thought may be that marriage might sober him up."

Minister—"Well, marriage does usually sober a man up. But in this case it seems to have made him all the drunker. What is he worth?"

Weeping bride (with alacrity)—"Forty thousand dollars."

Minister—"Oh, that makes a difference. Here, Deacon Williams, hold the groom up until I get through with this ceremony."

Each to His Taste.

"I am going to the seaside," said the milkman blithe and gay;
"For I love the ocean breezes, and love the dashing spray.
Yes, I love the glorious sunset, love the calm and love the squall—
But I think I love the water, in my business, best of all."

"That's the difference between us," said the grocer at his side,
"Though the ocean breeze is bracing, and I love the rolling tide;
Though I dearly love the billows, yet I can't forget the land,
And I think my young affection most is centered in the sand."

No Highfalutin' About Little Brother.

"I wonder why I can't make my kite fly?" wailed the little brother of the High School girl.

"It looks to me," replied Mildred, as though its caudal appendage were disproportionate to its superficial area."

"I don't think that's it," said Jim; "I think its tail is too light."

At the recent Presiding Elders' Convention in New York, a member related a tale of two boys in his district: A donkey was passing by. Said one boy to another, "Do you know what that is?" "Why, yes," the other answered; "that is a donkey. I have seen lots of them in the theological gardens."

MURDERED BY HIS SONS.

Swain Anderson Shot Down in Cold Blood—The Murderers Confess.

On Sunday morning, May 23, Swain Anderson, a well-to-do farmer of Mountain Grove, Mo., was found murdered within a mile and a half of the village. Despatches from Mountain Grove say that he attended the Masonic lodge Saturday night, leaving the hall about 11½ P. M., and started for his home afoot, two and a half miles north of town. He was found lying on his back, with a terrible wound in his throat and chest, caused by a shotgun. All day Monday and Tuesday the inquest went on, and on Wednesday the two sons of the dead man, Ed. and Henry Anderson, and a companion named Ewing Sanders confessed to the horrible crime. The confessions of the three were voluntary, and brought out at Coroner's inquest. One of the boys partially gave the thing away in his testimony, and the other contradicted it, and they turned against each other until the whole mystery was unravelled. They finally concluded it was best to confess all.

Ewing Sanders made a full confession. "The plan," he said, "was laid about two months ago. Ed. came to where I was at work in the field and proposed that I help him kill the old man. I said I didn't like to, but then and afterwards he kept persuading me, and I finally yielded. Ed. told me he had laid a plan to kill him once before when he went to salt the cattle by knocking the old devil in the head with an axe and then letting the wagon run over him, but one of the little boys was along. I agreed to his plan about two or three weeks ago, and since then everything was perfected. Ed. begged and begged me until I didn't know what I was about. It was my gun, a muzzle loader. I got the ammunition last Wednesday night. The plan was to have Fred Archer stay all night to keep down suspicion.

"I hid the gun about 300 yards from where he was shot, and we got it about 12 o'clock at night and waited for him. He came along between 1 and 2 walking fast, all unconscious of danger. Ed. lifted the gun and fired, and he dropped and uttered 'Oh,' and instantly expired. We didn't go up to the body, but ran away home to Mr. Cox's and put the gun away, and went to the kitchen and got something to eat and went to bed."

Here the enormity of his crime seemed to occur for the first time to the murderer, and he broke down completely, crying, "O, God, what have I done? Oh, boys, Ed and Henry, you have got me into this! Oh, horrible, horrible! They were to pay me $50 and give me work as long as I wanted it. The old lady and Jennie didn't know anything of it. Oh, Ed, Ed, why did you persuade me to go into it, and Oh! to think my poor old mother raised me better. It will kill her. O, God! O, God."

The story of the Anderson boys is as follows:

"We worked it up together how to kill father. The first time we failed. The last time proved successful. There were other parties—W. S. Campbell—who worked for us who first put it in our minds, and who got mad at father about one year ago, and said to us in the field that it would be a blessed thing if the old fool was dead—meaning father. We began to meditate about it from that time, and others put it also in our minds, among whom were Joe Lee and Price Byers. Joe told me if it was him in our place that he (father) would be a dead man in less than twenty-four hours. If it had not been for them this awful murder would not have happened. It was worked on our minds. Ed was to do the shooting, as Henry said he would not help shoot him. About three or four years ago, on Sunday morning, father and Ed had trouble about Mr. Archer's horses, which had come to our house. Father picked up a rail and made for Ed, and said he would knock his brains out. That was the beginning of our bad trouble, and it has worked on us since, and has got worse and worse, until we planned to kill him. He always worked against our going to church and school, and that worked on us. We never really thought about what would follow after the killing. We did it in a worked up passion. We shot him with a musket shotgun. We got scared and ran and got separated, but finally got together and went direct to Mr. Cox's. Father came angrily to us, and we shot and nearly missed him."

Mrs. Anderson, the mother of the boys, was also arrested. An impression prevails that she knew of the crime. It is said that there has been a continual war between husband and wife for years, and that the boys took their mother's part

So strong was the lynching sentiment that, the prisoners were removed to Springfield Mo., for safe keeping. They will be taken back in a week or so for the preliminary examination.

A Frenchman in a Fix.

"Ah," said a recently arrived Frenchman to his friend Sniffin, "my sweetheart has given me de mitten."

"Indeed, how did that happen?"

"Vell, I thought I must go to make her von vizit before I leave town; so I step in de side of de room and dere I beheld her beautiful pairson stretch out on ven lasy."

"A lounge, you mean."

"Ah, yes, ven lounge. And den I make von polite bow, and I say I was vere sure she would be rotten, if I did not come to see her before I—"

"You said what?"

"I said she would be rotten if—"

"That's enough; you have put your foot in it to be sure."

"No, sare, I put my foot out of it; for she says she would call her sacre big brother and kick me out, begar. I had proposed to say mortified, but I could not think of de word, and mortify and rot is all de same in my dictionaire."

Forty rods make one rood, but one rod will often make one child, especially in the case of the small boy.

He was a wheelman. He had called at a farmhouse for a glass of water, but the farmer's pretty daughter had offered him a glass of milk instead. "Won't you have another glass?" she asked, as he drained the tumbler with a sigh and appeared to be taking in emptiness with both eyes. "You are very good," he replied, "but I am afraid I shall rob you." "Oh, no," with emphasis. "We have so much more than the family can use that we're feeding it to the calves all the time!"

BELLE STARR, THE OUTLAW.

The Adventures of a Female Desperado in the Northwest.

One of the attractions of Fort Smith, Ark., last week was Belle Starr, who was in the town to answer two bills of indictment in the Federal Court; first for horse stealing, in the stealing of a fine mare, the property of Braiden by the notorious John Middleton, who, it will be remembered, he was drowned in the Potomac River about thirty-five miles above that city, in May, 1865; and second, on a charge of receiving stolen property, which it is claimed that Belle, disguised in male attire, led a party of three men who murdered and robbed an old man named Ferrell and his wife and three sons, some forty miles north of Fort Smith, in the Cherokee Nation.

The case was adjourned to August next, and after the examination, Belle mounted her horse, Winchester to the saddle, buckled a pair of revolver around her, and, mounting her horse, set out for her home on the Canadian River. Before leaving she purchased a fine pair of 45-calibre revolvers, latest pattern, with black rubber handles and short barrels, for which she paid $20. She showed them to a friend with the remark: "Next to a fine horse I admire a fine pistol. Don't you think these beauties?"

Belle says she anticipates no trouble in establishing her innocence in the case against her, but thinks it is terribly annoying to have to spend her time and money down here to court five and six times a year.

Belle attracts considerable attention wherever she goes, being a dashing looking woman and exceedingly graceful in the saddle. She dresses plainly, and wears a broad-brimmed white man's hat, surrounded by a wide black plush band with silver ers and ornaments, which in very becoming to her. She is of medium size, well formed, a dark brunette, with bright and laughing black eyes.

Being asked for a brief sketch of her career, she said in substance that she was born at Carthage, Mo., and was 32 years old last February. In 1863 her father, a Confederate, removed with his family to Texas where he continued to reside until the close of the war. After the surrender Quantrell's men came to the locality, and were at all times welcome guests at her father's home.

When less than 15 years of age she fell in love with one of the dashing guerrillas whose name she said it was not necessary for her to give. Her father objected to the marriage and she ran away with her lover, being married on horseback in the presence of about twenty of her husband's companions. John Fisher, one of the most noted outlaws in the State of Texas, held the horse while the ceremony was performed, her wedding attire being a black velvet riding habit.

About three weeks after the marriage her husband was forced to flee from the country, and he went to Missouri, leaving her in Texas. Her father learned of his hasty departure, and in order to induce her to return home, sent her a message that her mother was dangerously ill and her presence was required in haste. She immediately went home, but found that she had been duped, as her mother was not sick at all, and it was then she experienced her captivity, for the old gentleman locked her up and kept her in confinement for about two weeks, after which he gave her choice of going to school in San Antonio or to a smaller place in Parker county. She was placed in school at the latter place and remained there for some time, but she was not allowed to communicate with any one outside of her family.

While there her husband again came to Texas, and after considerable trouble located where she was and came after her.

By this time her admiration for him had become somewhat impaired, and at first she refused to go with him, but after considerable persuasion borrowed a horse from a young fellow who was attending the same school, ostensibly to take a short ride, and meeting her husband after dark, they struck out for Missouri, where her husband purchased a farm and made an effort to settle down and lead an upright life. He was harrassed by enemies to such an extent that he could not live in peace, and finally they killed his brother, and in return he killed two of them, after which they again fled to Texas, and from there went to Los Angeles, Col., and remained in that State for some time. From there they again went to Texas, and her husband was killed. How she followed the fortunes of an outlaw thus far she has since been true to his friends and comrades, and she has continued to associate with men of his calling, having lived among the Indians nearly ever since, with the exception of two years spent in Nebraska. She has spent some of the time with the wild tribes.

When at home, her companions are her daughter, Pearl (whom she calls the "Canadian Lily"), her horse and her two trusty revolvers, which she calls her "babies." The horse she rides she has owned for nearly five years, and no one ever feeds or handles him but herself, and it would be risky business for anyone else to attempt to ride him. She says she has been offered $300 for him time and again, but that $500 would not get him. He is a small sorrel horse, and when in good condition is a beautiful animal. Belle is a crack shot, and handles her pistol with as much dexterity as any frontiersman. No man enters Younger's Bend without first giving a thorough account of himself before he gets out.

In winding up the interview she said: "You can just say that I am a friend to any brave and gallant outlaw, but have no use for that sneaking, coward class of thieves who can be found in any locality, and who would betray a friend or comrade for the sake of his own gain. There are three or four jolly good fellows on the dodge north of my section, and when they come to my house they are welcome, for they are my friends, and would lay down their lives in my defence at any time the occasion demanded it, and go their full strength to serve me in any way."

Why is a bald-headed man like a pup hound? Because he makes a little hair go a great way.

Consternation filled every breast in Shamtown when the left-fielder of the second nine shouted from the enclosure where the ball had been battered: "Yer'll have to call der game, fellys. Finnerty's pig has swallowed the ball!"

In that year a ...structive frost occurred on the 7th of Sep... ...mber, and in consequence a considerable ...antity of wheat became unmarketable ...the following year, a premature frost oc... ...ring early in the same month did con... ...erable damage to the wheat crop, and ...t year frosts again appeared and did much ...mage to the standing crops. The recur... ...nce of these frosts is a matter for scientific ...vestigation. The record of temperature ...within the Province, kept for a number of ...ars, shows that white frosts are sure to ...cur in the second week in September, and ...eir occurrence, even in the first week, is a ...ntingency against which the farmer can ...rovide. The summer season is very short, ...nd the wheat grower must address himself ...to the problem of early sowing and harvest... ...ng. On an average, the wheat harvesting ...egins in Manitoba about the 20th of August, ...and the grain raiser has begun to address ...himself to the problem of economizing ...time.

It will be necessary for him to sow ...earlier, and be more expedient in harvest... ...ng than he has heretofore been. This may ...be supplemented by obtaining an earlier ...variety of wheat than even Red Fyfe is, ...but it is probable that the quality of hard... ...ness will be sacrificed for the sake of earli... ...ness in the experiment, for it has been as... ...certained in some cases that these varieties ...which mature the earliest are not the hard... ...est. However this may be, it is indisput... ...able that the soil in Manitoba is admirably ...adapted to the growing of wheat, but that ...there are certain problems the solution of ...which are all important before the fullest ...success can be realized.

The frosts to which I have referred, oc... ...curred somewhat earlier during the last ...three years than was their occurrence in ...previous years. Though it is not in the ...power of human ingenuity to prevent these ...frosts, yet is within the reach of the grain ...raiser to evade them, so long as they occur ...in the early part of September. Two of the ...solutions I have already alluded to; others ...no doubt, will be suggested from time to ...time, as the experiments proceed. In spite ...of these drawbacks, wheat raising in the ...Province of Manitoba and the Canadian ...North-west promises to assume vast pro... ...portions. The progress that it has made in ...a few years, as I have shown by the figures ...furnished in this article, is a mere step ...compared with the rapid strides which grain ...raising must make during the next few years ...in the Canadian North-west.—An Agricul... ...turist.

Our Agricultural Display at the Colonial.

Everyone one pretends to any knowledge of Canada, and especially its newer regions, has read Macoun's "Manitoba and the Great North-West." For while even's march with almost unparalleled rapidity in these western countries, yet so complete is this work, that it still remains a standard authority. The writer, Professor John Macoun, is now in London in connection with the botanical and natural history section of Canada's display. He has travelled, as but very few others have done, from Nova Scotia's extremest limit to the very western shores of Vancouver Island, and one may therefore go to him with no little confidence to learn something of Canada's recent development in matters agricultural.

"Well, Mr. Macoun," remarked our representative on meeting the professor in the agricultural court, "what do you think of Canada's agricultural display?"

"It is unquestionably the display from the Dominion. The trophy here is a marvel to visitors, and well it may be, for after all there is nothing of which Canada can justly be so proud as the progress of its agriculture. The grasses and grains are excellent. You will see here some first-rate samples of the hard wheats of the North-West And people should know why they are hard. It is not due to the variety but entirely to climatic influences. If you sow a soft variety of wheat in the North-West, you will find it turn a flinty grain, for the absence of moisture and general dryness of the autumn necessarily make it so. You will notice also in the North West samples as many as three and four grains to the fascicle, and if we had samples from as far north-west as latitutes 56 to 59 you would find five and six to the fascicle. In Ontario samples you will find but two. Hence in the North-West the wheat yield of a fair field rises to so high an average. Ontario, Nova Scotia, Eastern Canada generally, and British Columbia, have also a good collection of their wheats on exhibit. Some of the Quebec samples—especially those from Little Metis—you will find wonderfully like the wheat growth of Manitoba; indeed I find that the wheat grown in Nova Scotia and Northern Quebec much more largely partakes of North-Western characteristics than the growth of Ontario. Then we have good winter wheat from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and Ontario, but not from the North-West, for practically none is grown there."

A telegram from Cape Coast Castle says: "Captain Firminger has returned to the river Prah from Becquah and Adansi, where he has been engaged in investigating the causes of the recent disturbances. He has, however, been unable to effect an improvement in the state of things. The Adansis were friendly, but the Becquahs, numbering about 10,000 strong, refused to allow any interference. They informed Captain Firminger that they intended to retake the four towns captured from them in the war of 1874, and given by Lord Wolseley to Adansis. An important engagement was expected to be fought on the 21st inst. A party of forty-five German traders, surprised by the Becquahs, have been put to death, after being horribly tortured. Prisoners were tortured on both sides. Both the Becquahs and the Adansis expressed great dissatisfaction at the refusal of the governor to intervene. The governor was asked to mediate some months ago, when both sides were willing to accept his good offices; and had his excellency then consented it is thought that the present trouble might have been averted. It is expected that the Adansis, being the weaker party, will be driven across the Prah. The present state of affairs is most seriously injuring the commerce of the country, trade being completely stopped, and all the roads being closed. Part of a detachment of the West India regiment was landed here from the troopship Tyne on the 19th May."

A Good Substitute

Lately, while an auctioneer was holding forth upon the merits of a piece of cloth, one of the company expressed a desire to have the goods measured, and to his request he of the hammer replied: "Ladies and gentlemen, I trust you will excuse me in this matter, as my yard-stick has been mislaid to-night." At this point, however, an elderly matron was heard to remark to a friend: "The man might use his tongue instead."

An exchange says lead is an animal production, because it is found in "pigs."

HEALTH.

How To Ventilate a Home.

This is the season of the year when many homes are in course of construction, and the following suggestions respecting the ventilation of homes may be found useful:—

In the construction of a dwelling, attention should be given to ample provision for the adequate supply of fresh and pure air. It should be recollected that each person requires not less than forty to sixty cubic feet of pure, fresh air per minute, or 2 400 to 3 600 cubic feet per hour. To secure this amount of air requires for each person an opening not less than one-sixth of a square foot in area, and absolute safety requires a still larger area. Some fresh air will find its way in through cracks, between window-sash, under and around doors, and even through brick walls; but this is an uncertain and inadequate supply, and openings should be provided at convenient places for this purpose.

If provision for the proper ventilation of a house is made at the time of its construction, very little expense need be involved; hence the importance of giving this matter attention when planning a dwelling. The following is a brief summary of the principles of correct ventilation, which ought to be familiar to every one, whether interested in house-building or not:—

1. For efficient ventilation of each room in a building, two openings are necessary, one for entrance of fresh air, and one for egress of foul air.

2 When the fresh air enters a room warm, as when furnaces are used for heating, the foul air opening should be at the bottom, as the oldest air in the room, and consequently the most impure, will be that which has been in the room the longest, and has been gradually cooled by contact with outside walls and window surfaces. When a room is heated by stoves, the foul air opening should be near the ceiling.

The size of openings depends upon the number of persons to be supplied with air. It may be laid down as a general rule that an opening of twenty-four square inches' space in both inlet and outlet is required for each individual in a room. The openings should be of sufficient size to allow a passage of at least three thousand cubic feet of air per hour without creating too perceptible drafts. Air cannot travel through a room more rapidly than five feet a second without a current's being perceptible. A sick-room needs two or three times the ordinary amount of ventilation.

The foul-air openings of rooms should connect with heated ventilating shafts. Cold-air shafts are uncertain ventilators. They are not to be relied upon. The amount of draft in the shaft depends upon the height of the shaft and the amount of heat in it, Various methods of heating the ventilating shaft may be adopted. In a building heated by steam, steam-pipes may be employed. In ordinary dwellings, the waste heat of smoke-pipes or chimneys may be utilized for the purpose. An oil-stove or a gas-jet may be used for heating small shafts in dwellings; or a small stove may be used to accomplish the same purpose in larger shafts.

5. Rooms on different stories should not open into the same ventilating shaft, as the upper rooms are likely, under various circumstances, to receive the foul air from the rooms below.

In constructing a dwelling-house with reference to health in the matter of heating and ventilation, we know of no better plan than to provide an improved form of furnace as a means of supplying warm, pure air, and a grate for every room or suite of rooms as a means of ventilation. In very cold weather, the draft in open grates will be sufficiently strong to secure ample ventilation, if the flues are in inside walls, even without heat; but in spring and fall, a little fire will often be needed to create a draft in the grate flue.

Careful of His Health.

"See here," said the bartender to a stranger who was making sad havoc at the free lunch counter, "aint you going to buy anything to drink?"

"Nop, I guess not," replied the stranger, with his mouth full of cold slaw and pickled beets. "It was only this morning I was reading in the paper that liquor effects the coating of the stomach and eventually destroys one's appetite. I don't propose to get dyspepsia settled on me, if I can help it.

Creased trousers are fashionable among the swells. Now, if they will only put the seal of approval on baggy knees, they can count us in with them.

Rev. Thos. Grandy left last week, being stationed at Bellwood, near Fergus. Rev. Robt. Hosking is his successor. The latter is a young man with an enviable reputation as a christian worker. Was married this week, we believe, and will be on hand next week.

We hope Holland and Glenelg township councils will see after that dangerous and notorious piece of road known as Allen's sink hole. Better spend something in the shape of making a permanent job than to have to pay heavy damages for life or property.

It Pays to Buy the Best.—The Oshawa harvest tools are acknowleged by all to be the only reliable harvest tool in the market. Haskett Bros. say they can and will sell them at a less price that you can puy inferior articles, usually kept by other dealers. Call and see for yourselves.

Tenders will be received for the erection of a dwelling house on a vacant lot in rear of Revere Hotel, Markdale, up to July the 20th. Plans and specifications can be seen by applying to the undersigned. The lowest or any tender not necessarily accepted. DANIEL BLANEY, Markdale.

We are gratified to be able to announce that Rev. Jas. Ward is so far recovered as to resume his work. He is a vigorous, systematic and efficient pastoral worker, and it is a great pleasure and satisfaction to his numerous friends to see him so soon on duty after his serious accident, and almost miraculous escape from death.

Quite a number have been enquiring if Rev. Geo. H. Cornish, successor to Rev. W. Casson, is not an aged man, being superannuated. This idea has doubtless arisen from the Mail's report of the stations, putting him down as superannuated instead of superintendent. Mr. Cornish is a vigorous man in the prime of life, a little over middle age.

Mr. G. S. Bowes has opened an office in Haskett's block, where he will do conveyancing in all its branches, also general fire and life insurance. He is commissioner in B. A. for Grey county; agent for the celebrated Doherty organ, and will do a general land agency business. We bespeak for Mr. Bowes a good share of publis patronage, as he is well and favorable known.

Another Sunday will close the pastorate of Rev. W. Casson in Markdale, and it is with deep regret that his many friends and congregation give the farewell greeting. Mr. Casson's term has been one of peace and prosperity; his sermons far above the average, securing throughout large and appreciative audiences. His better half, whose cheerful self-sacrificing disposition and untiring energy and zeal for the church, rendering her a most valuable help-meet, will be greatly missed, while their family are justly respected and esteemed by all. We wish them every success in their new field of labor.

United.—Mr. Robt Mercer of Artemesia and Miss Mary Stinson of Euphrasia, two of our most respected young people, entered into partnership "for better for worse" on Wednesday last. About 35 couple were present on the occasion. The evening was gorgeous, the moon full, and the whole party adjourned to the open air where the marriage ceremony was performed. We wish the happy couple a joyous and prosperous journey through life.

Lamp Light.—We had the pleasure of visiting W. H. Harvey's lamp factory in Toronto last week, and was both surprised and delighted at the great success of the "Harvey Lamp." Mr. H. visited Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, St. Louis, Louisville and Cincinnati recently, taking orders for 100,000 lamps for this season's manufacture. He has also a standing order for 500 dozen per month from a firm in New South Wales, and has sold the patent for England to Hinks & Son of Birmingham, the largest wholesale lamp firm in England. Mr. Harvey has facilities for the manufacture of a large quantity, and is taxed to its utmost capacity. The "Harvey Safety Lamp" is downing everything and is certainly meeting with the success it justly deserves. Factory and office, 169 Queen St. East, Toronto.

Providence Chuch S. S., New England, held their 18th anniversary last Thnrsday. The weather was somewhat variable, but a very pleasant time was spent. The edibles were abundant and of a superior quality, and were served in the bush, where several swings were also up for the amusement of the young. Owing to a shower the company adjourned to the church where Mr. Hicks, the superintendent, took the chair, and a program was gone through consisting of music by the school, assisted by Messrs. W. A. Brown and G. S. Bowes of Markdale, dialogues and recitations by the children and short addresses by Messrs. C. W. Rutledge, W. A. Brown, G. S. Bowes and Geo. Steer of this village. The latter gave a very able and appropriate address which was listened to with great attention. Thus closed this pleasant anniversary.

The Glorious 12th.—As far as we can learn, there is to be about thirty lodges of Orangemen celebrate the coming 12th in Markdale. This will mean at least 5,000 people in our town on that day. Now, it will be very desirable that the best possible accommodation be provided, and that the multitude are not allowed to "go hungry away." On a former occasion of a similar character there followed serious complaints owing to the inadequate provision made for visitors, in the proper supply of the wants of the inner man. We trust this will not be repeated, and from what we learn there will be no danger. The hotels are making immense preparations, Mrs. Caswell is preparing a gorgeous dinner; Mrs. Hollingshead will serve dinner in the Agricultural Hall, and will no doubt be largely patronized, and others will entertain guests, so that we think there need be no fear that all will be abundantly served.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. YOUNG FOLKS.

Some Remarkable Parrots.

History and tradition tell us of some most remarkable parrots. In the seventeenth century, during the government of Prince Maurice in Brazil, he had heard of an old parrot that was much celebrated for answering like a rational creature many common questions. The parrot was at a great distance from his residence, but so much had been said about it that the prince's curiosity was aroused, and he directed the bird to be sent for. When pretty Poll was introduced into the room where the prince was sitting in company with several Dutchmen, the bird immediately exclaimed in the Brazilian language,

"What a company of white men are here!"

They asked, "Who is that man?" pointing to the prince.

The parrot answered, "Some general or other."

The prince was ignorant of the language, and when the attendants carried the bird to him, he asked it through the medium of an interpreter,

"To whom do you belong?"

The parrot answered, "To a Portuguese."

He asked again, "What do you there?"

The bird answered, "I look after chickens."

The prince laughed, and exclaimed, "You look after chickens?"

The parrot in answer said, "Yes, I, and I know well enough how to do it!' clucking at the same time in imitation of the hen to call together her young.

Early in the present century, there died the celebrated parrot of Colonel O'Kelly, who lived in Half Moon Street, Piccadilly, London. This wonderful parrot sang a number of songs in perfect time and tune. She could express her wants and give her orders very much like a human being. She could repeat a number of sentences and answer many questions put to her. When singing she beat time with all the appearance of science, and she would often correct her mistakes in singing. This parrot died at the age of thirty years. Parrots frequently live to the age of one hundred.

In a bird-store once upon a time, the keeper of the shop taught his birds to say cute things, and when a young lady called to buy a prrrot he brought out a green parrot that was small and meek-looking. The dealer asked the bird to "Say something sweet to the pretty lady." The bird, to the surprise of all, rolled one eye knowingly and croaked out, "I ain't as green as I look."

A common gray parrot having been brought from Guinea by a sailor with a coarse, rough voice, and afflicted with a cough, the parrot learned to imitate the exact tones of his master, even to the cough, so closely that the sound of his voice was often mistaken for that of the sailor. The bird was afterward taken in hand by another instructor and taught a softer tone, but it never forgot the harsh voice of its former master, and often amused by-standers by relapsing into sea-slang, interspersed with the cough of the sailor.

While Dean Stanley was a canon at Canterbury, a gentleman who had been invited to breakfast with him found all the servants assembled in the garden, where the master's parrot was at large in a tree. The master came out at that moment. The parrot looked down at him, and said, in a low but distinct voice—exactly like the dean's—"Let us not pray." The bird was eventually captured by the aid of a fishing-rod.

A grey parrot was stationed in a nursery, where his greatest delight was to see the baby bathed. The child becoming ill, the parrot was removed to the kitchen. There after a time he set up a terrible cry: "The baby! the dear baby!" All the family rushed down to find the parrot in a state of the wildest excitement watching the roasting of a sucking pig.

A gentleman in Yorkshire was attacked with a fever about Christmas time, and his parrot was removed from the dining-room to the kitchen, where its voice was less likely to disturb its master. It remained there for several weeks, during which time it stole the raisins intended for a plum pudding. The cook in anger threw some hot grease at it, and scalded its head. When the gentleman got better the parrot was removed to the dining-room. The master came in with his head newly shaved, whereupon the parrot turned one eye upon him, and slowly said, "You bald-headed ruffian! So you stole the cook's plums, did you?"

A parrot belonging to a hotel in Philadelphia walked about on the window ledge one night. The window was open and the bird lost her balance and fell on the pavement below. A policeman picked up the bird, and as he carried Polly into the hotel, she said,

"Polly's sick."

Blood trickled from its green feathered head, and as the officer handed it to the clerk the bird said again, as it closed its eyes,

"Polly's sick."

While its wounded head was being washed and bathed, the parrot repeated several times,

"Polly's sick."

For an hour it lay perfectly quiet with its eyes closed, and then suddenly repeated again,

"Polly's sick."

A moment later the parrot fell ever dead.

For stuffing purposes pine shavings are now largely used, there being at Pesth, in Hungary, an extensive factory devoted exclusively to the production of such shavings, and these, by the aid of machinery, are reduced to such a degree of fineness that the product closely resembles tow. Shavings of this kind are superior, it is asserted, to every other substitute for horse hair in connection with upholstering purposes, alike as regards elasticity, softness, and durability; for bedding they are recommended on account of the resin contained in the wood being an effectual preventive of vermin, the utility of the material in this line, especially for hospital and barrack purposes, having been satisfactorily tested by the German Government. After having been used as stuffing for some five or six years, the shavings can be renovated by being exposed to the sun or a heightened temperature.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Great Spring Medicine 50cts.

The Dread of Man by Animals.

Anthrophobia, the dread of man, has reached such a degree in some fellow-creatures of "God's Vice-regent on Earth" that they seem to fear the risks of captivity more than the certainty of annihilation. The stories about the mountain sheep breaking the force of a fall by dropping on their horns are totally fabulous; the shock would react on their necks and break their vetebræ at any distance exceeding forty feet of perpendicular fall. But it is true that their cloven hoofs and stout feet break the speed of a descent from anything but an overhanging cliff; a troop of big-horns will scramble down the steepest slopes as a bear slides down a tree, and reach the bottom amidst a clouds of dust and tumbling stones, but with unbroken limbs. The Osage Indians have a curious tradition about the cimmaron; at the time of the great flood (which, after all, must have been something more than a freshet of the Indus), when the pouring rains drove all other animals to the shelter of the caves, the big-horn sheep took refuge among the clouds and guided the Indian Adam to a place of safety. The mountain sheep has certainly a marvelous faculty for roughing out bad weather. Even in midwinter they stick to their highest haunts. In 1849 a caravan of Mormon refugees attempted to cross the Wahsatch range in a snow-storm, and were on the point of perishing with cold, when they were saved by the discovery of a "cimmaron camp," a snug cove in the pine woods, where a herd of wild sheep had stamped down the snow and browsed off the branches as high as they could reach—"A tabernacle in the wilderness," as Elder Millard described it, and in stress of storms, perhaps, a more desirable shelter than the dreary pens of an Indian wigwam could have offered to the necessitous saints. Now and then, though, the cimmaron may be doomed to share the experience of the Swiss chamois, that occasionally find their graves in such winter-quarters by remaining snow-bound till they succumb to frost and hunger. Ordinary storms the American mountain sheep weather as easily as a frog would survive a flood. No whirlstorm short of a tornado can dislodge them from a vantage-ground in the rocks, and their thick fur-coats ward off blasts that knock the mercury a good way below zero.

Anglicized Chili.

The Chilians call their country the "England of South America." If a native makes a promise, and wishes it to appear unusually binding, he says, "On the word of an Englishman." Should he desire an appointment to be kept on the minute, he says, "Be as punctual as an Englishman."

The traveller discovers that wherever he goes in Chili the highest respect and warmest friendship are entertained towards England. The explanation of these feelings is to be found in the fact that when the young republic was struggling to throw off the Spanish yoke, many Englishmen served her with as much ardor as they would have served their native country.

The upper classes of Chili imitate the English aristocracy. Like them, they are reserved, fond of a good joke, appreciate wit, cherish family pride, and make "society" strict and exclusive.

The women of this class imitate the better sort of English women, and never dress for church as if they expected to go from it to a "reception." They dress in plain black, with a black mantilla over the head, and their example is followed by the women of all classes.

This custom of wearing a plain dress for church is such an excellent one that it might be adopted in this country with advantage to purse and piety. The following story, which narrates a fact, illustrates that the poorest women among us are not disposed to imitate the richest women of Chili in respect to dress.

A pastor in a New England town, whose congregation was made up from the "common people," noticed that one woman, a church member, had absented herself from the meeting-house for several Sundays.

Calling upon her to learn the cause, he found her at the wash-tub—she supported herself by washing. Her answer to his question was,—

"Well, sir, I have not a dress fit to go to church in, and I'm waiting until I lay by money enough to buy a black silk. When I get it, you'll find me at church every Sunday, if I am well, and it don't rain."

On the West Coast of Africa.

My voyage along the coast and visits to all the principal places have astonished me profoundly. I looked forward with pleasure to a study of the influence which a century of contact with civilisation has effected in the barbarous tribes of the seaboard. The result has been unspeakably disappointing. Leaving out of consideration the towns of Sierra Leone and Lagos, where the conditions have been abnormal, the tendency has been everywhere in the line of deterioration. There is absolutely not a single place, where the natives are left to their own free will, in which there is the slightest evidence of a desire for better things. The worst vices and diseases of Europe have found a congenial soil, and the taste for spirits has risen out of all proportion to their desire for clothes—the criterion with many of growth in grace. . . . In these villages men, women, and children, with scarcely a rag upon their persons, follow you about beseeching for a little gin or tobacco. Eternally gin, tobbacco, or gunpowder! These are the sole wants aroused by a century of trade and of contact with Europeans! And yet how is this region represented in England? Why, as a field "white unto harvest." The African is described as looking to our Government for a more settled rule; as crying to the Churches, "Come over and help us;" to our merchants, "We have oil, and rubber, and ivory; give us in exchange your cloth and your cutlery." "Ye see us naked, and ye clothe us not;" to the philanthropist, "We are able and willing to work, only come and shew us the way." Pray banish all such rubbish from your minds. It is simply myth.—Joseph Thomson, F. R. G. S.

A Wedding Present

Of practical importance would be a bottle of the only sure-pop corn cure—Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—which can be had at any drug store. A continuation of the honeymoon and the removal of corns both assured by its use. Beware of imitations.

Florida, "The Land of Flowers," is a paradise for the invalid, and the "Fountain of Youth" was one thought to be hid in one of its forest glades. It is now the haven of many consumptives, who find benefit in her genial warmth and fragrant flowers. The consumptive invalid need not necessarily go so far from home and friends to get relief. For if not in the last stages of the disease, Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will restore to perfect health. For all chronic, bronchial and lung diseases it is a most reliable specific. By druggists.

The lady teacher of the infant class in one of our Sunday schools brought a fancy Japanese bowl to take up the collection in. Upon his arrival home one little kid was asked what he did with his penny. "I put it in the spit-box," was the paralyzing reply.

Mother's Smiles are the Sunlight of Home.

There would be fewer clouds and brighter sunshine in many households if every dispirited suffering woman realized what a boon Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" is for all weaknesses and maladies to which her sex is liable. No lady who gives this wonderful remedy a trial will be disappointed by the result. It not only acts promptly upon all functional derangements, but by its rare nervine and tonic properties strengthens and repairs the whole feminine system. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

More than four thousand devices for coupling have been patented, and yet thousands of bachelors and maidens go it alone in this country.

It outrivals all—Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Cork Irishmen.

The diet of the Irishmen in this part of the country is, of course, potatoes and milk. As he himself puts it, he has potatoes 21 times a week. In the event of a blight, such as the historical one, the results in certain parts of Ireland could scarcely be less disastrous than at any former period. If one may judge by the physique of its consumers, the diet requires no recommendation of the medical faculty, for a more athwart race it would be difficult to find. In this corner of the country, so long "preserved," we should expect to find the natural Irishman, and we certainly found him. The native Irish is almost universally spoken, but at the same time the majority of the younger generation speak English with a brogue of the most exquisite flavor. Here, also, we have the Irishmen in the typical attire to which caricaturists have accustomed us. To the visiter from the other island it is a ludicrous picture to see him in tall hat, blue tailed coat and knee-breeches at work in his wretched plot, like a philosopher out for a little recreation. It is not so much the style of his garments, however, that makes their picturesqueness; it is their positively miraculous raggedness. We feel that this raggedness has quite passed the stage of disreputability, and has actually become ornamentation. But it is above all the hat that fixes the attention. We have often closely inspected it, and our wonder never ceased how, in the course of a single life, any hat, however weather-beaten and however brutally used, could attain that preadamite look. It is the great charm of travel in Ireland that one can become acquainted with its people in so short a time and on such easy terms. The Irishman is the most approachable of human beings, and as the very Irishman the stranger wishes to know is in most cases his own lord and master, intercourse is thus made doubly easy. If in the course of a solitary walk you should desire the solace of a little conversation you have but to take your seat on one of the turf walls that form the fences in these parts of the country. If you are a smoker and produce your pipe, you will present an additional inducement. Before you are well seated you will be saluted with "A fine day, sir, God be praised!" and a careless figure will be seen approaching with spade and pickax over his shoulder. Sharing your tobacco with him it will remain with yourself to conclude the interview. Before ten minutes have passed you will have had the outlines of his family history, and his views on things in general, not even excepting his priest. At the end of as many hours' conversation as you please, he will speed you on your way with a fervent "God preserve you long!" and part with you as if you had been his lifelong friend.

The Boy to Succeed.

A few years ago, a large drug firm in New York advertised for a boy. Next day the store was crammed with applicants, among them a queer-looking little fellow, accompanied by a woman who proved to be his aunt, in lieu of faithless parents, by whom he had been abandoned. Looking at the little waif, the merchant in the store promptly said: "Can't take him: places full; besides he is too small." "I know he's small," said the woman, "but he is willing and faithful." There was a twinkle in the boy's eyes that made the merchant look again. A partner in the firm volunteered to remark that he "did not see what they wanted of such a boy—he wasn't bigger than a pint of cider." But after consultation the boy was set to work. A few days later a call was made on the boys in the store for some one to stay all night. The prompt response of the little fellow contrasted well with the reluctance of others. In the middle of the night the merchant looked in to see if all was right in the store and presently discovered his youthful protege busy scissoring labels. "What are you doing?" said he. "I did not tell you to work nights." "I knew you did not tell me so, but I thought I might as well be doing something." In the morning the cashier got orders to "double that boys wages" for he is willing. Only a few weeks elapsed before a show of wild beasts passed through the streets, and, very naturally, all hands in the store hushed to witness the spectacle. A thief saw his opportunity, and entered at the rear door to seize something, but in a twinkling found himself firmly clutched by the diminutive clerk aforesaid and after a struggle was captured. Not only was a robbery prevented, but valuable articles taken from other stores were recovered. When asked by the merchant why he staid behind to watch when others quit their work, the reply was, "You told me never to leave the store when others were absent, and I thought I'd stay." Orders were immediately given once more: "Double that boy's wages he is willing and faithful." To-day that boy is getting a salary of $5,000, and next January will become a partner of the firm. Young men, imitate his example.

A Tragedy of the Far West.

A dispute arose in an Indian camp near Rockton Hill, Arizona, recently, and before it ended a buck named Pizzur with his Winchester rifle shot and killed Ah Quinthe and his squaw, a daughter of Chief Leve-ve, mortally wounded another buck and another daughter of the chief, and slightly wounded two other Indians. Then the murderer fled, pursued by mounted braves. And Chief Surrum arrived at the camp soon after, and his first order was to kill all the relatives of the murderer. The squaws and pappooses hurried to the miners' camp near by, and begged hiding places in their cabins, and this aroused the miners, who told the chief that he could not carry out his bloody plan, and that he must countermand his order. He reluctantly complied, but issued fresh orders to bring Pizzur in at any cost.

In the mean time the avengers were riding fast after the fleeing murderer, and followed his trail into the Wallapai Valley until darkness put an end to the pursuit. The very next morning they took up the trail, and after riding twelve miles, they came upon the dead bodies of the murderer and his horse. It was apparent that after riding his horse until he gave out the Indian killed him, and then, putting the muzzle of the Winchester to his right eye, pulled the trigger, and cheated his pursuers of their anticipated vengeance.

A feature of a meeting of the Salvation Army the other night in Washington was an address by a converted dude. The army prayed vociferously for all poor dudes yet unconverted.

A 3-year-old girl fell from the balcony on the fourth floor of a Hartford house the other day, but struck squarely across a clothes line stretched from the third floor, and the rebound threw her into a balcony there, almost unhurt.

A lot of little boys in Adams, Oregon, played at lynching the other day, and Charlie Springler agreed to be the victim. He was swinging gracefully from the limb of a tree and quite black in the face when a neighbor discovered him and cut him down.

A dweller on the banks of the Cedorus, ties short lines with baited fishhooks to the legs of his geese and drives them into the water. The fish bite and jerk the lines, and then the frightened geese hurry to shore, dragging the fish after them.

A California farmer sent $5 to a man in the East in exchange for six gourd seeds warranted to produce gourds of the capacity of 60 gallons. After waiting long for the seeds to sprout, he investigated and found that they were artistically carved out of basswood.

Augustus Fulton, the only colored student ever sent from the United States to the Propaganda in Rome, has been ordained, and will return to American to take charge of a colored Catholic Church in New Orleans.

There are "smart" men outside of Yankeeland. A deeply scientific German not long ago invented a new feed for cattle, which he advertised as strength food, and which soon had a large sale. It has recently been analyzed and was found to consist of 88 per cent. of vegetable ivory turnings and 12 per cent. of common salt.

A small boy was detected by a stingy farmer in one of his cherry trees. The farmer made the boy come down, and talked very seriously to him about the sinfulness of stealing. The boy answered indignantly: "Now, you just count them cherries over again and see if there is one of them missing before you insinuate that I took any."

James Warder, of Nokesville, Va., insists that the following is a true snake story: "My wife's old turkey hen was sitting beside the garden fence on thirteen eggs. About a week ago a large black snake came along and ate the turkey, curled himself on the eggs, and stayed there until they hatched out, and then ate the whole brood at once."

From the Hartford Courant: The Canaan News tells of a man who began work on a barn 30 years ago and who finally got the frame raised on Thursday. For 30 years it has been a conundrum often asked: "When is Tompkin's barn going to be raised?" and for 30 years the invariable answer has been: "Next Thursday afternoon."

Several years ago Louis Renneberg was found dead in his bed at Monongahela City, and buried. But he wasn't dead after all, for he turned up the other day at his old employer's and asked for work. He says that he revived after being buried and dug out of the grave; but it is thought that he was resurrected by medical students, who, finding him alive, paid him to quit town and keep quiet.

As an illustration of the trivial causes which sometimes bring about a severance of the pastoral relation, the Presbyterian Banner tells of a pastor who had to resign his charge because the Sunday School superintendent objected to his using a plum-colored silk handkerchief in the pulpit, and the Herald and Presbyter mentions another good man to whom objection was made because of his wearing an unbecoming moustache and the practice of rolling up his trousers in wet weather.

The citizens of Greenville, Mich., are talking about the remarkable fate of Mrs. Lyons. Eight years ago Abraham Van Horn bought a farm off her. He doubted the clearness of the title, and she was indignant and said: "If I am trying to cheat you I hope God will strike me dead." The trade was made, and Van Horn remained on the farm until recently, when another man laid claim to it, saying that he had a clear title. Van Horn at once went to Mrs. Lyons and demanded that she secure him from loss. She heard him make his request, attempted to speak, and fell dead. The neighbors say that her prayer has been answered.

Wonderful Instinct of Flies.

"You are a telegraphist, Herr Maier, I presume?"

"Certainly."

"When out walking to-day I noticed that whole myriads of flies covered the telegraph wires for a considerable distance. How do you explain this?"

"At what time was it?"

"About four o'clock."

"Just then we had a message conveying the last quotations in sugar and molasses."

A Morning Call.

Male guest—"I'd like to be called at four to-morrow morning; I'm going fishing."

Female domestic (stupidly)—"Eh?"

Male guest (desperately)—"I'm going fishing to-morrow morning, and I wish to be called early; not later than four."

Female domestic (stolidly)—"Will you ring?"

AN HISTORICAL TREE.

A Silent Witness of the Terrible Massacre of British Soldiers.

The obliteration of a landmark in the history of Detroit and the northwest has been commenced on the property of the Michigan stove company, on Jefferson avenue. Tradition says that the old whitewood tree was a silent witness to the terrible massacre by Pontiac's Indians on July 31, 1763. Pontiac was carrying out his great conspiracy against the whites, which was agreed to at a council of Ottawas, Pottawatomies and Hurons, held at Ecorse on April 27, 1763. His first movement, to massacre the garrison, was betrayed to Maj Gladwin, the British commander, by an Indian girl, on May 9, and, with his braves, he was ordered out of the stockade. The fort was afterwards invested, Pontiac hoping to starve out the garrison. He captured supply boats and trains, and the garrison retaliated with several sorties. On July 29, Captain Dalyell arrived with 22 barges and 280 soldiers of the Fifty fifth and Eightieth regiments, and 20 rangers commanded by Major Robert Rogers, of New Hampshire, with cannons and provisions—all under Dalyell's orders.

The latter, who had been an officer, under the daring Putman, besought permission to lead an expedition against Pontiac, and was finally given that privilege. He started before daylight on the morning of June 31, 1763. Dalyell marched up the river road with three detachments, and supported by two batteries armed with swivel guns, on the river. The wily Pontiac had been informed of the sortie, and was lying on the banks of Bloody Run, then called Parent's Creek. As the British forces neared the bridge the Indians poured in a withering volley. The soldiers charged across, but the enemy was invisible, and their numbers melted away under the terrible fire. The troops retreated, and Dalyell, while trying to save a wounded soldier, was shot dead. The British loss was: Killed, 17; captured, 3; wounded, 38.

Detroit was virtually besieged by Pontiac's forces till that great warrior signed a treaty of peace, Aug. 17, 1786. Detroit was the only western post that held out against the Indians under his command.

Old residents in the city tell that hundreds of British and Indian bullets entered the tree, and that the cutting of them out was one of their juvenile pastimes half a century ago.

Getting Into Bed Without Awakening Her.

On a certain occasion Ferguson was wending his uncertain way homeward, sorely troubled in his mind over the curtain lecture he knew was in store for him, and casting about for some means of evading it. Suddenly a bright idea was evolved from his befuddled brain. He would slip quietly into the house and get into bed without awakening his wife. Accordingly he carefully undressed in the lower hall, stole gently upstairs and crept into bed, with his face turned toward the outside. He mentally congratulated himself upon his success thus far and went to sleep. When he awoke in the morning he dared not look at his wife, and after lying still for a few minutes, and not hearing any noise from her, he concluded she was still asleep. He then determined to arise very quietly, carry his clothes into the hall, dress there, and go down town to business without waiting for breakfast. He was successful in this, and meeting the colored servant girl downstairs, he said:

"Eliza, you can tell your mistress I expect to be very busy to-day, and therefore I didn't stop to eat breakfast this morning."

"Law sakes, Mr. Ferguson!" said Eliza. "missus done gone 'way yesterday morning, and said she wouldn't be back till dis evening."

A New Line of Railway.

A party of wealthy Canadians visited Buffalo recently to arrange for the building of a line of railroad from Table Rock, on the Canadian Park reservation, to Queenstown, Ont. They exhibited a special charter (granted by the Dominion Government), and claimed they had secured the co-operation of the Canadian Reservation Commission. The road is to run close to the river bank and will be connected by an inclined railroad at Table Rock with the Michigan Central. A grand hotel at that point is an important feature in the scheme. At Queenstown they propose to connect with the steamer Chicora and the Michigan Central Railroad. They claim they are to be given free right of way over Government property, as their road will help to make the Canadian reservation attractive. This is a different view from that taken by Commissioner Dorsheimer, of the New York State reservation, who recently urged that a bill be passed preventing the Niagara Fall & Whirlpool Company, chartered to build a road on the American bank, from crossing the State's property. The officials of this corporation, however, feel good over the bill Governor Hill has just signed, which allows them to charge passengers ten cents a mile.

Two Kinds of Suspense.

A murderer under sentence of death had a number of influential friends who were exerting themselves to secure a respite from the Governor. The Sheriff believed in capital punishment, but he was a charitably disposed man and had been doing a good deal of running around for his doomed guest. One morning he returned from such a trip and went to the prisoner.

"Well," said the man eagerly, "what did the Governor say?"

"My dear sir, he hasn't said anything yet; he wants time to think."

"Great heavens, man! This suspense is terrible," exclaimed the criminal, dramatically.

"Don't mention it," responded the Sheriff in a cheerful tone; "it ain't anything to what it will be if the Governor doesn't interfere."

A superstitious subscriber, who found a spider in his paper, wants to know if it is considered a bad omen. Nothing of the kind. The spider was merely looking over the columns of the paper to see what merchant was not advertising, so that it could spin its web across his store door and be free from disturbance.

PERSONAL.

Mr. Jules Ferry is described as just now "robust, robust, affable and ambitious, and as full of tortuous political schemes as ever."

The Queen Regent of Spain will maintain and educate at her private expense the children of those who perished in the recent tornado at Madrid.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley is now in Paris; to some extent, as the guest of Mr. James Gordon Bennett. He is considering a United States visit in next December.

The wedding present of the Countess of Paris to her daughter, new Crown Princess of Portugal, was a white morocco prayer book, costing about a hundred dollars.

The late James Smith, of Falkirk, Scotland, who introduced American cooking-stoves into Great Britain, was a brother of that Colonel Robert Smith, who was killed in the assault upon Fort Craig, and was also such a warm personal friend of Jefferson Davis.

Frank D. Stockton, the story writer, denies the published statement that he is "almost blind." "On the contrary," he writes, "my eyes are every good. I dictate all my stories, it is true, but this method of composition is so satisfactory to me that under no circumstances would I employ any other."

The balance of the sum raised by popular subscription for the statue of Sir Robert Peel at the western end of Cheapside, is to be used for endowing a "Peel scholarship." It has lain idle for some years, and amounts to $3,150. The scholarship will be for political economy.

Wendell Phillips was buried on the spot he selected for his grave many years ago—a wooded rise of ground at Milton, Mass. Phillips is laid beside her husband, and their names are inscribed just as he used to like to write them—"Anna and Wendell Phillips."

Parson Gray, who is at the head of a congregation of colored folks in Denver, has been preaching sermons that reflected severely on the morals of some of his people. James Hawkins thought the coat fitted him, and not only put it on but talked back savagely to the pastor. Then Parson Gray got a pistol and put it in his pocket, and the next time he and Hawkins met there were more high words and the pistol went off and Hawkins was hurt. And now the pastor is on trial, charged with assault against this black sheep.

While Bismarck, in a recent debate in the German Reichstag, was speaking with his accustomed vehemence, the president of the Berlin Academy, Herr von Werner, was smuggled in among the members, and rapidly sketched him in the heat of oration. The Prince caught sight of the artist, and the moment he had finish his speech, made straight for Herr von Werner. Various wary members, however, buttonholed him on his way and closed about him. The artist had safely retreated before the Prince could catch him.

A lest dispatch of General Gordon has just been found on the person of a spy newly-escaped from captivity. It is dated Dec. 29th, 1884, and addressed to the "Sovereigns of the Powers." It concludes pathetically: "During the twelve months that I have been here these two Powers [Great Britain and Turkey] the one remarkable for her wealth and the other for military force, have remained unaffected by my situation—perhaps relying too much on the news sent by Hussein Pacha Khalifa, who surrendered of his own accord. Although I personally am too insignificant to be taken into account, the Powers were bound, nevertheless, to fulfil the engagement upon which my appointment was based, so as to shield the honor of the Governments. What I have gone through I cannot describe. The Almighty God will help me."

Russia, France, and Germany.

Speaking of the attitude of Russia in the event of a war between France and Germany, the Novoje Vrjemia of St. Petersburg says:

"There is no doubt that, in any case, it would not be proper for us to lend our support to either one of the belligerent powers to the detriment of any one of them. But at the same time it would be a mistake to imagine that Russia would necessarily remain neutral in case one of the two powers interested should attempt to weaken the other. Such an indifference upon her part would be a gross political error. The intervention of Prince Gortchakoff, in 1875, in the Franco-German difficulty—an intervention which made Germany give up her intention to finally crush France—will always be counted as one of the most important services that the Chancellor rendered to Russia. The same considerations which governed him then ought to guide us to-day. But these considerations ought not in any manner to hinder the consolidation of the most friendly relations with Germany, because such relations respond on all points at present to the interests of Russia. More, over, from a Government point of view-Germany is more closely allied to Russia than Republican France is. On the other hand, it must not be forgotten that the sympathies of the Russian people are rather for France than for Germany, and that, in a normal development of policy, our interests might not be in disaccord with those of France. It is, therefore, natural that the country should be of great importance to us as a political factor. Germany represents for us the present; France the future; and, since we need both the present and the future, it would not be for our interest that one of these factors should absorb or weaken the other."

Newspapers.

No newspaper ever published pleased everybody, and every sensible taker of a paper, in passing judgment upon it decides the matter upon the whole appearance of the publication from week to week, not condemning it because he finds something printed therein that displeases him, or considering it infallible because it expresses, from week to week, his exact views. Otherwise the only successful newspaper would be the one which was neutral upon all subjects, or one which never expressed any views on a point of interest, confining itself to mere items of news. These two classes of papers were never known to exist in an intelligent community, after being conducted upon that principle for any length of time, for a community is judged by the outside world by the newspapers which it supports.

LATE HOME NEWS.

Residents of Belleville complain of letter collectors reading postcards.

Diphtheria is very bad at Ancaster. Three and four persons are ill in some families.

Battleford has established a Protestant Public School district and elected trustees.

During the last week of May the thermometer registered 90 degrees in the shade at Battleford.

The Jews at the Jewish colony in the North-west are threatened with starvation. Relief measures are being taken.

A party of forty police have left Battleford by the Cypress trail with a month's forage and provisions for patrol duty.

It is alleged that some Ottawa youths, who insulted young ladies at a Saved Army meeting in Kemptville, were soundly thrashed by incensed young men of the village.

The Calgary Tribune reports that "Cariboo" Cameron, who made $150,000 in the Cariboo mines, is at present "broke," and has gone to the Big Bend to repair his fortunes.

Reports from Yale, B. C., represent the Fraser River to be higher than ever before at this date. It is only ten feet below the highest point reached in the great freshet of 1882, and old settlers predict that the high water mark of that year will be exceeded.

A young man has been arrested at Montreal for stealing half a ton of iron from the Canadian Pacific Railway yards. He and a companion, who is still at large, are alleged to have succeeded in stealing this large amount in small quantities before they were detected.

While Mr. O. E. Howell, of Jerseyville, was teaming logs into the mill yard of Mr. Obed Howell's in some way one of the legs he had on the trucks slid and caught him. When found the leg was lying on his breast and he was unconscious. It is thought he will recover.

Battleford has had an exhibition of contractor's beef in the raw. Last week a herd of cattle, alleged to be milch cows, intended for the Indian Department, were delivered at that place, but the agent refused to receive them, and the men in charge turned them loose to take their chance upon the prairie.

It is estimated that five miles of shedding will have to be built on the C. P. R. in the Selkirks, that the cost will be about $1,200,000, and that the sheds will be completed by the first of December. A great number of men are now employed in taking out square timber, driving piles, and running the lumber mills.

Mr. Andrew Stapleton, of Jerseyville, had been missing for some days, and his wife becoming alarmed about him proceeded on Friday with her son over the path he usually takes to his work at Abram Vansickle's, and found him lying against a tree dead. He was taken to a house and buried the same evening. It is supposed he had a fit.

Farewell, the new divisional centre on the C. P. R., is situated on the high banks of the Columbia River, on a loamy flat, and has water communication with Spokane Falls and with Colville, in Washington Territory. Vegetation is quite far advanced, and garden products, such as lettuce, radishes, and onions, are fit for table use. A number of prospectors have already gone into the mines and have a tunnel many feet in depth from which they are taking gold, although they have not yet reached bed-rock. They are busy preparing sluice-boxes, and seem quite confident of results. Already $4,000 has been expended on the claim.

THIRTY-THREE YEARS.

The Length of Time Vian Must Spend in Penitentiary.

Louis Vian's trial is ended. Late the other afternoon he was found guilty of having endeavored to escape, and the Clerk of the Court then read to him the third indictment of having escaped from the penitentiary. Vian admitted that he had escaped, but said that it had been with the aid of the guards. They had opened doors for him, and he had simply walked away. The clerk again said guilty or not guilty, and he replied, "I am guilty, I got out, but as everybody knows," he added with a smile, "I was recaptured."

The Clerk of the Peace then asked Vian if he had anything to say why sentence should not be passed upon him.

"Well," said the prisoner, "I have this much to say; I have NOT HAD A FAIR TRIAL!

I should have enjoyed rights similar to those of other prisoners. I have not had fair treatment, and as a proof look here!"

Vian here raised his foot over the dock and exhibited the manacle chained to his leg. "This ball," he said, "weighs eleven pounds, and I have never been free from it for one moment since my case has been going on." He then complained bitterly of the meagre diet to which he had been subjected since his attempt to escape, which had the effect of injuring his health, and that he had not long to live at any rate.

His Honor, the Chief Justice, then proceeded to sentence the prisoner. It was useless, said he, to urge him to do better. He had been a criminal almost from childhood and he had no hope that he would ever improve. He would therefore sentence him to on the first indictment of feloniously shooting with intent to murder Guard Chartrand, while sentence on the other indictment was suspended.

When his Honor had finished speaking, all eyes turned towards Vian to see what impression the knowledge of having to spend so many years of his life imprisoned between four stone walls would make upon him, and to everyone's astonishment he was seen to smile and without a word turn round and leave the dock. Then, with a deep scowl, he whispered to a guard: "I will be free in less than three months or again standing in this very dock!"

He was driven back to the penitentiary shortly afterwards.

Vian is now thirty-three years of age. He had eight years to spend in the penitentiary and this additional sentence has increased his term to thirty-three years. When he is allowed to breath the air of liberty again he will be an old man of sixty-six.

The Standard.

MARKDALE JUNE 24 1886

"IN THE MIDST OF LIFE WE ARE IN DEATH."

In a little over a week, death has claimed three victims in our village. On the 12th inst., James William, son of Rev. A. Wilson, passed away at the age of 8 years. Deceased was a strong vigorous and very promising boy. He recently recovered a severe attack of inflammation of the bowels, but had a relapse, which hastened him to a premature grave.

Then Lottie Mann, a girl of 15 summers, amiable and forbearing in her disposition, and a favorite of all who knew her, was called to her reward on the morning of the 17th. Lottie has been in poor health for some time but nothing serious was anticipated until a few days before her demise. She was the eldest of the family and upon her rested, in a great measure, the care of her mother, who has been an invalid for several months and whose recovery is very doubtful.

Then on Friday last we were surprised to learn of the sudden and serious illness of another citizen of more mature years, Mr. Michael Sullivan, who was stricken down with inflammation of the lungs, and died on Monday morning, aged 45 years. Deceased has been for some 33 years a respected and well-to-do farmer in Artemesia, but the last four years has resided in Markdale. He leaves a wife and three children with a large circle of friends to mourn his premature death. We extend to the bereaved, in each case, our condolence.

MARKDALE SPRING SHOW.

This show promises to develop into a permanent annual affair, and for the satisfaction of those concerned we give below a synopsis of the financial standing. The show was gotten up by private individuals at their own expense, and we trust the enterprise will have the support of our business men generally in years to come.

Notice.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

Dear Sir,—I have to ask for a space in your valuable paper to show your readers that there is a mistake about me putting a fence across 50 sideroad. I placed a fence across a disputed deviation, and I also deny of them taking proceedings at my expense, I am inclined to think that it is at the ratepayers expense liko all others mistakes.

I notified the Holland Council that if they had a proper title, to come and stake out the deviation and I would build my fence in the proper place at once. I don't think they have either plan or specifictrion, they cannot however be found recorded, and I hope this will end my writing in the matter, if not, I shall be very apt to jog their memory.

Marshall Ward,

Feversham.

From a Correspondent.

Quite a number of our boys went to Eugenia on Saturday to witness a baseball match between Kimberley and Eugenia.

Mr. A. McGirr has gone to Owen Sound to attend County Council.

Mr. Joseph Henderson is away to Belle Island, Lake Simcoe, to attend S. A. camp meeting. The S. A. Captain and Mrs. Poole have gone also.

David Wood, our popular shoemaker, is adding improvements to our village by building a new house. Mr. J. Linley has the contract.

W. H. Campsigne is shipping daily, quantities of hardwood lumber to Toronto.

R. T. McGirr has been around purchasing potatoes this last week. Bob is paying good prices I believe.

Mr. Magee, of Parry Sound, paid our town a flying visit last week.

Mr. A. H. will have to be careful when driving through town with that wild horse, especially when he has some of the fair sex with him, in case another accident happens him.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The township fathers had quite a lively time Saturday last in the Town Hall adjusting the assessments of a large number of ratepayers in this township.

The news has just reached us while writing of the death of an old pioneer in this county, Mr. Richard Campbell, sr., who lived on his farm adjoining this village for a number of years, died at his daughter's residence, Collingwood, on Monday last. His remains are to be brought here and interred in the family burying plot, Flesherton cemetery, on Wednesday, the 23rd.

Extensive preparations and constant practice still goes on here in preparation for the rendering of "Queen Esther Oratorio" on Dominion Day evening here. The drillshed is now platformed for the performers, and the large company are practicing there every night this week. Magnificent costumes have been secured in Toronto for the occasion.

The Presbyterian congregation of this place purpose holding their church anniversary services (D.V.) on Sabbath next. The Rev. Mr. Colter, of Meaford, will preach in the morning at 10:30 and in the evening at 6:30. On the Monday evening following, the annual festival will be held, we understand. Several prominent ministers will be present to speak on that occasion.

The Rev. Mr. McIntyre, of Berkeley, preached a very practical and interesting sermon in the Presbyterian church here Sabbath afternoon last.

The genial editor of the Advance returned on Saturday last from his holiday tour as pleasant, happy and if anything better looking than ever.

The Dinwoody Bros., of Stayner, are spending a few holidays with their parents and friends in this locality.

John Bannan, Esq.. formerly of this village, is at present rusticating in this locality having returned home from Toronto where he has been pursuing his studies in medicine.

Maxwell.

(From our correspondent.)

It is really too bad that our village is not any better represented in your valued paper, so I give you a few items.

Mr. Cyrus M. Field, who is now in Mr. R. J. Sproule's establishment, Flesherton, was out here on a visit over last Sunday. His sister, Mrs. Wright, of Kleinburg, is now on a visit to her parents and friends.

Last Wednesday the barn of Thomas Gamey, Esq., was raised. There were over one hundred present, and things were lively for a while.

I understand that the Presbyterians of Maxwell, Feversham and McIntyre intend having a picnic on Dominion Day, but the place of meeting is not yet determined.

The Sons of Temperance, I believe, will also have a picnic at Heron's Mill on the same day. No doubt a pleasant time will be spent at each, and all friends will be welcome.

A number of Flesherton's young men are spending a short time camping out at Heron's Mill. We suppose they use their fishline for trout, and their firearms to kill the mosquitoes. Don't know what else they can exterminate.

According to last draft of stations of the Toronto Methodist Conference, we see Rev. S. A. Arkels is to be removed from this field of labor. Mr. Arkels has been here for only a year, and is universally well liked. From what I can hear his removal was altogether uncalled for, and the church authorities here will do their utmost to prevent it. Mr. Arkels is now on a visit to his father and mother in Belleville.

Mentor.

Holland Centre.

From our own correspondent.

Thos. Shea has the job of building a bridge across the Sauble here.

The township fathers are having trouble owing to loosely done business in the past.

Lyman Anderson is erecting another fine dwelling.

Mr. Timson, a boy of 82 summers, is building a house, and doing the carpenter work himself.

Mr. Jas. Fester has been up for selling liquor without license; second offence.

Mr. Joseph Fanning lost two valuable mares with their colts, with inflammation.

Speare & Neelands are rushing the stoning machine and carriage biz.

VICTOR

Roller Mills.

PLEWES' FULL PROCESS ROLLER MILL CROWDED BEYOND ITS UTMOST CAPACITY—RUNNING NIGHT AND DAY, AND YET CAN'T CATCH UP, SO GREAT IS THE DEMAND FOR VICTOR ROLLER MILL FLOUR

For the first time in a milling experience of eighteen years we find ourselves so crowded with work that it looks almost impossible for us to catch up with it. We emphatically and unhesitatingly declare that we thank our friends the ladies for this, and we are proud and pleased to learn from them in so decided and practical a way that we are giving them satisfaction in the flour they get from us. We say we give the ladies the credit! Why? Because seldom a day passes but some new customer tells us the woman sent him. or some old one that he has mills near hand, but the woman won't hear of him going anywhere else now.

We were satisfied at the outset that if we could do anything that would improve the quality of the flour used in this country, and so relieve our women from part of the toil and worry baking, or even if we could not lighten the work, but could only give them a flour that would be sure, after their work with it, to always make good bread, that we would not only earn but receive the hearty thanks and earnest support of every woman in the county, and that very few men would get much rest or satisfaction until they had been at our mill or got some of our flour.

We are glad to know that the great expense of building and furnishing latest and most approved roller process machinery has been crowned with success. and that we make a flour that not only always makes good bread, but what pleases us fully as much is, that it also lightens the womans house work, for it dont require half the kneading or attention of the old style flour. Any one who comes to our mill and see the crowd there every day and the amount of work we have to do can judge for himself that our confidence in the gratitude of the woman of this county was not misplaced, and we may say at once that they have ressonded far beyond our most sanguine expectations, and to such an extent that we fear we will yet have to enlarge our grinding capacity. In return we have to assure you, ladies, that we will continue to do our very best to please you and give you the best article of flour that can be made. We will spare no expense to keep our mill to the front rank, judge by the quantity of its work, and we want you to know the feeling that we appreciate your hearty and unanimous response to the effort we make to lighten your home work and relieve you from the worry and announce of ever having in your house that article most productive of growlings and grumblings in men—bad bread.

While we are so crowded with work that we can't give all the attention to customers we would like we trust no one will feel slighted, but bear with us under present circumstances, and if any mistake occurs kindly let us know at once, so that we maw rectify it.

Flour $3.50 to $4.50 per brl cash.

COUNTERFEITER CAPTURED.

An Owen Sound Soda Water Factory Contained.

A COUPLE OF DETECTIVES RAID THE PLACE AND FIND A FULL SET OF COUNTERFEITING APPARATUS AND INCRIMINATING LETTERS.

Owen Sound, June 17.—Detectives Mowan and O'Leary made a raid on a counterfeiting establishment in this Sound, and secured the implements and a quantity of unfinished

On Monday night last Detective Mowan well known here in connection with the Kepple murder case, arrived here in company with Detective O'Lardy, of Ottawa, and at once communicated with the town police. Up to a late hour last night nothing leaked this morning their movements were an entire secret. About 4 o'clock yesterday the detectives, in company with Police Constables Spence and Daley, went to the residence of Jno. Smart who runs a soda water factory, and commenced a and found ladles, punches, counter-feiting dies, blocks, metal, and other articles used in making counterfeit money. They had just finished the search when Smart came in and was at once placed under arrest. The detective and police left the place, and locked smart in the lock-up. The work of securing the molds and other articles now had to be done. Detective McGowan and believed there was more to be found out by putting up a little job on the arrested parties a further seizure of articles was made as they were being carried away to be destroyed. To your corresbondent visiting Detective McGowan's room this morning almost a complete mint was fonnd. Moulds and queer looking machines a quantity of unfinished coin quarters and fifty cent pieces in various stages of completion were lying over the bed and dressing case, making it look like a workshop. The tools were evidently of home manufacture, and much of the work was cleverly done. Letters were also found in Smart's possession connecting him with this business, and placed things still more clearly. On coming before Police Magistrate Spencer this morning, the case was adjourned till the Crown Attorney was ready to proceed. Great credit is to be attached to the conduct of the detective in this job. Detective McGowan was well known and no doubt watched, but he managed very cleverly to till the time for action arrived. Suspicion has been attracted to this place for years, which, till now, has baffled all efforts at discovery, and everybody was astonished at the case being so quickly terminated. It may be stated that Detective McGowan has had an open eye toward this town since he was here on the Kepple murder case from having then seen some counterfeit money. Detective O'Leary, who is here for the Dominion Government, is greatly elated over the success of the capture, and Constable Spence and Daley are highly complimented for their work and especially in connection with the search of the premises and the working up of the clues.

SEARCH OF THE PREMISES,

LAID A LITTLE PLAN,

ALLAY ALL SUSPICION

THE EMPIRE HORSE AND FOOD CONDIMENT,

The Original Thorley Food.

During the season of exceptionally hard work, too much cannot be said in reference to keeping the working animal in proper condition. To meet the increase demand made upon them the spring work often leaves the stock run down, and they have scarcely time to recover before the harvest is full upon them; therefore if you want to get your animal quickly into condition use the Empire Food Condiment.

MORTGAGE SALE!

Of Valuable Farm Property in the Township of Holland, County of Grey.

Under power of sale contained in a mortgage, which will be produced at the time of sale, there will be offered for sale, by Public Auction, by Geo. Noble, Auctioneer, at the Village of Markdale in the County of Grey, on Tuesday, 29th day of June, 1886, at the hour of two o'clock P. M. that certain parcel of land in the township of Holland, containing 100 acres, composed of Lots Nos. 72 and 73, Concession 2, South-West of the Toronto and Sydenham road

The property is one of the best grain farms in the township of Holland, about 90 acres being cleared, the balance a good hardwood bush except 2 acres of cedar swamp, and the soil limestone loam, is in a good state of cultivation, well watered by a good well and creek running through the property.

The buildings on the property consist of a small log house and log barn.

There is an orchard of about one acre. The lots are fairly fenced, with rail fences, and are situated about 4 miles from the Village of Markdale and about 2 miles from Berkeley station, which places are easily accessible by good roads, and afford a good market for farm produce. A Church and School are situated about one mile from the said property. The Vendor reserves the right to bid.

Terms:—Ten per cent. of purchase money at time of sale, to be paid to the Vendor or his Solicitors, and the balance in one month thereafter, without interest. For farther particulars and conditions of sale, apply to

CREASOR & MORRISON, Vendors' Solicitors, Owen Sound or W. J. McFARLAND Esq., Date, 1st June, 1886 Markdale.

HEALTH.

Corpulence.

A correspondent, who, without any known organic or functional trouble, is greatly incommoded by superfluous fat,—he wrongly calls it flesh,—requests an article on the subject.

The condition is known as corpulence, or obesity. It consists in a tendency to the formation and deposit of fat. A certain amount of this deposit is normal. It is an element of beauty, rounding out the form. It lessens the effect of sudden changes of temperature. It is a reserve of nutriment, to be drawn upon in emergencies, thus saving the muscles and other tissues.

Some persons inherit a tendency to it. Some races are more liable to it than others. Women are more so than men. Both sexes are more inclined to it after the age of forty. There are individual cases of extreme obesity. A boy at the age of three weighed one hundred and twenty-four pounds; a girl, one hundred and eighty-two at twelve. A woman, who was thin and delicate at eighteen, died at forty-one with some eight inches of fat around her body. The famous Daniel Lambert's maximum weight was seven hundred and thirty-nine pounds. Much the largest part of the body in these persons was pure fat.

In all cases of obesity, there is a deficiency of oxygen in the blood, either absolutely, or relatively to the amount of food. Excess of food tends to produce it, and yet some are corpulent on a spare diet. Lack of exercise favors it, by lessening the oxidation of the tissues. It is also produced by diseases which diminish the number of the red blood corpuscles. It is the latter that absorb oxygen from the inspired air and convey it to the tissues.

According to Quain, very corpulent people have large hearts and small lungs. This may help to explain the deficiency of oxygen. It has also quite recently been proved that women have fewer, by many millions, of red blood corpuscles than men. This, too, may be one reason for their greater tendency to corpulence.

As the muscles become infiltrated with fat, they are weakened. Hence corpulent persons are apt to be indisposed to active exercise. For the same reason, the heart is rendered feeble and is easily disturbed. The deficiency of oxygen tends to the formation of uric acid, and hence to the production of gout. The very corpulent are specially liable to various forms of congestion, and acute diseases are apt to have an unfavorable course.

In treating the corpulent, regard must be had to the fact that their heart is weak. The main reliance for reducing the obesity is on diet and exercise. The latter increases the power of the blood to take up oxygen. The more oxygen one can receive, the better, if kept well within the person's strength and the capacity of a weakened heart. The diet should contain but little fatty or starchy food, and much animal food—lean meats, fish, but not the richer kinds, also fresh fruits, vegetables, and bread with only a moderate allowance of butter. Alkaline water is believed to be helpful.

How to Disinfect.

To disinfect a sick-room, burn three pounds of sulphur for every thousand cubic feet of air. Place an iron kettle on some bricks in the room, put the sulphur in the kettle, then add some live coals from a coal fire. Or, pour on a little alcohol, and light with a bit of burning paper dropped into it. Shut the room up tight, and allow the sulphur fumes to remain in the room over night; afterward air the room three or four days with doors and windows wide open.

To disinfect solid or liquid matter, a solution of copperas or green vitriol, two pounds dissolved in a gallon of hot water, is an efficient agent. The solution should be applied to decomposing matter which needs disinfection, and will destroy any offensive oder and stop the putrefactive process. Sulphate of zinc, a pound to the gallon of water, is better for disinfecting clothing, as it does not stain or injure the fabric.

Heat is a good disinfectant. Clothing subjected to a temperature of 240° in an oven for two or three hours will be disinfected. This is the time of the year when it is important to give attention to matters of this sort, and whoever has not already made a tour of his premises with a view to a thorough cleaning up and disinfection, should at once give attention to this important matter.

Teaching Deaf-Mutes to Read.

Instruction is conveyed to deaf-mutes in most instances by the use of sign language, or the manual alphabet. The foundation maxim of the methods used is "first ideas, then words." The mind must be aroused to activity, and, as the foundations of knowledge which other children acquire by the aid of hearing are here wanting, progress is, of course, very slow at first. Usually, instruction is begun by the word method, words being connected with the objects they represent. For instance, the child is shown some common object, or a picture of an animal, and the printed name of the object or animal is shown him at the same time. He is thus taught to connect names with their objects and to recognize printed words. When a few words have been learned, sentences are framed, and the child is taught to recognize these as units embodying a complete idea. The printed and the sign alphabets are taught together and, when these are mastered, instruction in spelling is not difficult. After names of objects, their obvious properties, with numerals and verbs of action, are next taught. The adjectives first brought forward are those of size and color, then prepositions of locality. The simple tenses are exemplified by calling attention to a series of actions. Much use is made of contrast of ideas. A child of 10 or 12 years of age, if possessed of ordinary intelligence, can usually, at the end of a year, construct for himself simple sentences about every-day affairs. During the first two or three years text-books prepared especially for deaf-mutes are used, after that any text-books will serve.

THE WATER FEAST.

A Strange and Ludicrous Festival in Upper Burmah.

The Burmese year 1248 commenced on the 15th of last month. On the three preceding days the Water Feast, the great annual festival, which is observed throughout all Burmah, was celebrated with the customary formalities and with usual boisterous merriment. It is needless to give any lengthened description of the Water Feast. Every writer on Burmah or the Burmese has devoted some space to discussing the meaning and origin of and to describing the festivities with which the Water Feast is celebrated and the new year ushered in. In both Lower and Upper Burmah during the three days preceding the new year the towns and villages are filled with and young men engaged in throwing water over each other and the passers-by. The children are armed with large syringes, which they use with great accuracy. Under Burmese rule it was scarcely safe for Europeans to be seen in the streets of Mandalay during the three days the Water Feast lasted. They ran great risks of being drenched with the filthiest water that could be found, although among themselves the Burmese only use the purest water available. Many a grudge was paid off during the Water Feast, and it was impossible to obtain any redress. On the present occasion the Burmese did not throw water on Europeans until they had asked and received leave to do so; permission was usually freely given, especially by the European soldiers. Tommy Atkins appeared to thoroughly enter into the spirit of the thing and to enjoy engaging in a watery combat with half a dozen Burmese girls. On the other hand, the Sepoys did not appear to at all relish the attentions with which they were favored. During the Water Feast it is advisable for Europeans who do not understand Burmese well to observe considerable caution in replying to any questions which may be addressed to them. An affirmative reply given to a question in the belief that it is or some similar request, will not improbably result in your having a few bowls of water thrown over you by the person who addressed you and by the bystanders, the question having been a request for leave to throw water on you. I experienced this fate myself. All the principal pagodas are redecorated and the images of Gautama in them are regilded during the Water Feast. Enormous sums are spent in this way. One of the most interesting sights in Mandalay during the new year's festivities was a visit to the Arrakan Pagoda. The great brass Gautama there, weighing 14 tons, was, with the exception of the face, plastered all over with thin layers of gold, brought by devout worshippers who visited it from all parts of Burmah.

CROWDS OF LAUGHING GIRLS

A DEMAND FOR CHARITY,

Strange Weapons.

Many of the weapons of strange shape and character to be found in India deserve special notice on account of their appropriateness to the district in which they have originated, their historical associations, or their individual peculiarity of shape and quality. The kukri, the national weapon of Nepal, is about 19 inches in total length, with an unguarded hilt. Its blade, generally of bright steel, is incurved, heavy, and widening toward the point. It has more the qualities of a good bill hook than anything else, and this, indeed, was its original function, for the Gorkha required it not only for fighting purposes, but also to clear his way through the jungles of the Teral. In his practised hands the kukri is the handiest of tools and the most formidable of weapons—how formidable those who have been in action with the Gorkha battalions in our service can well testify. Like the kukri of the Gorkhs, the big knife of the Coorg mountaineer derived its shape from the daily necessities of life in dense jungles. The tremendous monsoon rains which break on the mountains of the west coast of India develop an extraordinary luxuriant vegetation in the district, and the inhabitants found the constant want of an implement to open their way through the thick underwood and clumps of bamboo. The Coorg knife, the ayda katti, is about the same length as the kukri also with blade incurved, but still wider and heavier. One of its most remarkable characteristics is that it has no sheath, but it is carried, slung naked, across the hips, through a slit in a metal belt. The belt is called a todunga, and is made generally in either brass or silver, of a solid plate behind, fastening in front with massive and handsome chains. A spike projects to the rear from the centre of this plate at the back. This spike has no apparent definite use, but it was remarked at the imperial assemblage at Delhi that the Coorg chiefs who were there in the costume and wearing the arms of their native country were not incommoded by any crowd pressing on them from behind.

A Young Woman Dies of a Rattler's Bite.

About a month ago Miss Gertrude Martin, a lovely and accomplished society young lady of Fort Hallry, went on a visit to a married sister in Tatnall county. One Tuesday evening Miss Martin, accompanied by her sister and a young lady, went to a blackberry patch about half a mile from the house to pick blackberries. About sundown, just as the party was ready to return home, Miss Martin cried out that she was bitten by a snake. Her sister ran to her, and, pulling off the shoe and stocking of the wounded limb, saw only a slight scratch, as if made by a pin. She at once applied her mouth to the bite and tried to suck out the poison, but the limb began swelling at a rapid rate. She stopped sucking, and taking her handkerchief tied it around the leg just below the knee. In the mean time the young lady had gone to the house for assistance. In about an hour Miss Martin was taken to the house, where all that was possible was done to relieve her. The swelling continued until her entire body was swollen out of all proportion, and in five hours after the snake had fastened its fang into her flesh she was a corpse. Her death was a horrible one, and yet she was conscious up to the last moment.

Speaking of flies, a base ball player says: "They come high, but we must have them."

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Removal of Spots and Stains.

The following concise rules are extracted from a German journal:

Matter Adhering Mechanically—Beating, bruising, and currents of water, either on the upper or under side.

Gum, Sugar, Jelly, etc.—Simply washing with water at a hand heat.

Grease—White goods, wash with soap or alkaline lyes. Colored cottons, wash with French chalk or fuller's earth, and dissolve away with benzine or ether.

Oil Colors, Varnish, and Resins—On white or colored linens, cottons, or woolens, use rectified oil of turpentine, alcohol lye, and their soap. On silks, use benzine, ether, and mild soap, very cautiously.

Stearine—In all cases, strong, pure alcohol.

Vegetable Colors, Fruit, Red Wine, and Red Ink—on white goods, sulphur fumes or chlorine water; colored cottons or woolens, wash with lukewarm soap lye or ammonia; silks the same but more cautiously.

Alizarine Inks—White goods, tartaric acid, the more concentrated the older are the spots; on colored cottons and woolens and on silks, dilute tartaric acid is applied cautiously.

Blood and Albuminoid Matter—Steeping in lukewarm water. If pepsin or the juice of carica papaya can be procured the spots are first softened with lukewarm water, and then either of these substances are applied.

Iron Spots and Black Ink—White goods, hot oxalic acid, dilute muriatic acid, with little fragments of tin. On fast-dyed cottons and woolens citric acid is cautiously and repeatedly applied. Silks, impossible.

Lime and Alkalies—White goods, simple washing. Colored cottons, woolens, and silks are moistened, and very carefully dilute citric acid is applied with the finger-end.

Acids, Vinegar, Sour Wine, Must, Sour Fruits—White goods, simple washing, followed up by chlorine water if a fruit color accompanies the acid. Colored cottons, woolens, and silks are very carefully moistened with dilute ammonia with the finger-end. In case of delicate colors it will be found preferable to make some prepared chalk into a thin paste with water and apply it to the spots.

Tanning from Chestnuts, Green Walnuts, etc., or Leather—White goods, hot chlorine water and concentrated tartaric acid. Colored cottons, woolens, and silks, apply dilute chlorine water cautiously to the spot, washing it away and reapplying it several times.

Tar, Cart-Wheel Grease, Mixtures of Fat, Resin and Acetic Acid—On white goods, soap and oil of turpentine, alternating with streams of water. Colored cottons and woolens, rub in with lard, let lie; soap, let lie again, and treat alternately with oil of turpentine and water. Silks the same, more carefully, using benzine instead of the oil of turpentine.

Scorching—White goods, rub well with linen rags dipped in chlorine water. Colored cottons, re-dye, if possible, or in woolen raise a new surface. Silks, no remedy.

Hints.

An improvement on making rag carpet: Measure your strips exactly the length of the room, then take to the sewing machine and stitch through the middle of each rag until you have stitched through four rags in succession. Then cut between the middle stitching. It will not require binding, and saves work and carpet and looks so much neater.

If one ounce of powdered gum tragacanth be mixed in the white of six eggs, well beaten, and applied to a window, it will prevent the rays of the sun from penetrating.

Articles of a delicate blue that must be washed are often ruined in the process; this may be avoided by adding an ounce of sugar of lead to a pailful of water and letting the article lie in this for an hour and a half or even for two hours; let it dry then, after which it may be washed without injury. This is said to be a perfect remedy for the trouble referred to.

Never put a particle of soap about your silver if you would have it retain its original luster. When it wants polishing take a piece of soft leather and whiting and rub hard. The proprietor of one of the oldest silver establishments in the city of Philadelphia says that "housekeepers ruin their silver by washing it in soap suds, as it makes it look like pewter."

A little borax put in the water in which scarlet napkins and red-bordered towels are to be washed will prevent them from fading.

To remove ink stains, wash the cloth thoroughly in milk, then in hot water with soap, and the stains will disappear.

A Panther's Revenge.

The panther of India seldom attacks a man unless provoked, driven to bay, or wounded. If the man lets him alone, he will not trouble the man; but should the man wound him, then the powerful animal becomes a more dangerous beast to cope with than the tiger, for he can climb a tree, and the tiger cannot.

Several years ago, an English officer, in India, located himself in a tree, with a native hunter, and waited for game. A panther happened to pass below, and the officer fired.

Unfortunately for himself, he wounded instead of killing the animal. The panther turned, sprang up the trunk of the tree, seized the officer, dragged him to the ground, and mauled him so that he died.

The frightened native remained in the tree, unable to help his master. When the panther had satisfied himself that the white man was harmless, he ascended the tree a second time, and killed the native.

Made to Order.

Alderman—"You are charged with entering the complainant's tent, while camping out, with purposes of stealing. What have you to say?"

Prisoner—"I didn't intend to steal, your Honor. I only went to see if there was anything I could do for him."

"Oh, yes; then you admit that you were found in the complainant's tent?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then it is for the Court I sentence you to sixty days."

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

When the lights had been turned up strong, and Elder Toots had coughed a peanut shuck out of his throat, Brother Gardner arose and said:

"I find hush on my desk a heap of mottoes, watchwords and maxims which hev bin gathered together by de Committee on Judiciary wid a view of replacin' de stock now hangin, on de walls. I has bin fearfully considerin' de matter in my mind fur a week pas', an' I dean' like de ideah of a change. De pusson who can't stick to one motto fur mo' dan six months can't be depended on to stick by a job fur me' dan one.

"If I was out o' cash, friendless, laid up in a garret wid a sore heel an' a carbuncle, an' spectin' ebery day to be toted off to de peo' house, I dean' know but I might furnish de world wid some watchwords an' sayin's, but it would hev to be under some sich circumstances. About a month ago I begun tradin' wid a butcher who had hung up in his shop de motto: 'Live and Let Live.' It struck me dat de ideah was a good one. He wanted his dues, an' he would grant de same to edders. In about a week he slipped a plugged quarter into my change; two days later my two pounds of beef was short three ounces; de nex' week he charged me up wid forty-eight cents' worf of pork which I nebber had. I dean' trade dere any mo', an' my respeck fur his motto has dropped fifteen pegs.

"A naybur o' mine took in a motto 'bout a y'ar ago. It was: 'Da Airly Burd Cotches de Worm.' In a leetle time I missed my hoe. Dan the buck-saw went. Den edder naybors' loose property begun to go. We get a policeman up dar' to watch, an' when he caught de thief it proved to be de man wid de motto. He was de airliest burd on dat hull street, an' de way he took de worms was sad fur us.

"If dar' am any members of dis club who can't keep to work widout some motto 'bout industry behind 'em—who can't pay deir honest debts widout some matte 'bout honesty above 'em—who can't be good husbands an' fathers widout some scriptural quotashun pasted in deir hats, such pussons had better sever deir connexun to once."

BOUNCED.

The Committee on the Interior, through the Chairman, Judge Chowse, then reported back the case of Prof. Ashfoot Smith, an honorary member residing in Milwaukee. He had been charged with being an Anarchist, and an investigation had resulted in the discovery that he believed in and contended for:

"No taxation."

"Death to the rich."

"Equal division of all property."

"Neither laws nor prisons."

The committee were unanimous in recommending that his name be stricken from the rolls.

"Which the same will be did to once," said the President, "an' it may be set down as de sentiments of dis club dat de gov'ment should take sich akshun as will prevent conspirators, Nihilists and criminals from Yurup findin' a safe asylum in de United States."

NOT INFORMED.

Giveadam Jones arose for information. He would like to be informed whether any correspondence has passed between the Lime-Kiln Club and Congress in reference to the summer adjournment. He had understood that neither body proposed to adjourn unless the other followed suit.

"I kin inform de member," answered the President, "dat dar' am no late correspondence to be submitted. While dar' am no direct coldness between dis club and Congress, we dean' waste much postage writin' to each odder. It am my opinyun, however, dat we shall boaf take a vacashun deerin' July and August. Many of our members will be away durin' dose two months, an' de occashun will probably be seized to make some necessary repairs to Paradise Hall. If dis program am carried out sich of us as remain will meet in de Library once a week fur muchal improvement. I has been axed to deliver a series of eight or ten short lecktures to sich as gather, an' hev partly promised to do so."

PROBABLY DOES.

Some time since the following query from Toronto was respectfully submitted: "Does our mental progress keep pace with that of other nations?" The query was given to the Committee on Social Science for investigation, and Prof. Hackensack Johnson, Chairman, now begged leave to report. The committee had kept their eyes open and their tongues going. They had discovered that where one work on history or science was sold 10,000 fly sheets of some new love story were thrown upon the doorsteps of as many houses and eagerly read by the mother and her daughters. They had found that for every one book of solid reading carried home by an adult 20,000 boys purchased dime novels relating to Indian slayers or "Old Sleuth" detectives. For every schoolbook in America there were five novels. Where one woman reads her Bible 100 read a story paper. The committee were therefore of the opinion that "she does," and they asked to be discharged from further consideration of the subject.

NOT THAT FAR.

Shindig Watkins also desired information. He wanted to ask how far the fraternal feelings of a member of the Lime-Kiln Club should carry him. He expected to lend his coffee-mill, his hoe and his lawn mower to a brother member, but was there a point where the line must be drawn?

"Dar' am," answered Brother Gardner, "an' dat pint am reached when you conclude to give a leetle party at your cabin an' hev ice cream an' strawberries fur refreshments. At sich an epoch as dat a pussen am supposed to pick his own company, an' a member of dis club livin' next doah must not lay up any hard feelin's bekase he am not invited."

The Calgary Tribune says that among the men hired in Toronto recently for work on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the mountains, was to all appearances a boy of about eighteen years of age, who found employment in the cooking establishment. It was soon discovered, however, that the supposed boy was a female, and she assumed her proper clothing, announced herself to be a member of the Salvation Army, and in addition to retaining her place and discharging her usual duties, she now conducts fashionable Army services in the evening.

"After all, Adam couldn't get on long without an Eve; though she brought him nothing but trouble when he got her. I wonder if I shall fare better! Doubtless, yes, having had a surfeit of the fair fickle sex already? But oh, ye gods of sleep and silence, what a glorious night!"

At his feet as he paused, the limpid water of the stream, level with the grassy turf, murmured drowsily. The whole landscape lay hushed in tender repose, while in the west, still bright with memories of day, one large star glittered like a jewel. Afar, embowered in darkness, the nightingale sang, and now and then a wakeful thrush sent its clear whistle across the meadows. Truly it was a glorious night! The young poet's sensitive spirit acknowledged its holy influence, growing hushed and calm beneath it. Cecil Graham felt like a child kneeling at its mother's knee when evening has come, and this, his mother Nature, seemed to look tenderly into his face with her starry eyes, murmuring, "Pray!" But to pray was one of the few things that Cecil Graham had never learned, and only in sore strait and sorrow, which was the very Valley of the Shadow of Death, did the knowledge come to him.

Beautiful was the morning when Cecil Graham sauntered out to find some quiet nook wherein, free from fear of intrusion, he might revel in "the light that never was on sea or shore"—a nook wherein the heaven-born muse might choose to fold her wings, and sit by his side through the long sweet hours.

Attired in a suit of gray tweed, with a wide-awake on his closely-cropped head, the young man strolled down the gravelled path between the laburnums, to the meadow beyond. His brow—such of it as could be seen beneath the large hat,—was square; his mouth, a trifle too thin-lipped, was shaded by a slight moustache; his nose was large and aquiline; and his eyes, rather deeply set, were singularly dark and lustrous, full of changing restless light, expressive of every emotion of his mind. They were beautiful but never yet had they been softened by the pathos of loss, sorrow or love. For, though his feelings were easily excited, and all his emotions near the surface, his heart was exceedingly difficult to reach. So at least decided many a lovely maiden, as she gazed at her face in her mirror, wondering how he could remain blind to charms like hers—how one so susceptible to the influence of female beauty, so quick to admire, and so enthusiastic in its description, should be so loath to love.

Meanwhile Cecil wandered along by the river, now sparkling in the sunshine, until its level banks rose shelving and rocky to a considerable height, crowned by a belt of pines. In every crevice of the rocks, long thick mosses, ferns, and wild flowers grew untouched, and over whose petals butterflies fluttered. The stream here widened and foamed over variecoloured granite blocks tumultuously.

"You scarce could see the grass for flowers,"

"'Not a sign of man's existence,
Not a glimpse of man's abode;
But the church-spire in the distance Links the solitude with God,'" quoted Cecil,. "Ah, this is the place for me!"

In an ecstasy of enjoyment he threw himself full length upon the grass, and, lying with his arms folded above his head, he gazed up through emerald leaves at the exquisite sapphire of the sky, whence came the liquid notes of the lark, though the songster was invisible, drowned in light. From the deep slumberous reverie into which he had fallen the poet was roused by the shrill notes of a voice singing—

"'Twas near that streamlet's murmur
I passed my happy youth."

Looking up with a quick movement of annoyance, he beheld coming round a corner of the rocks a small girlish figure in a holland dress and bright scarlet petticoat. The girl did not see him, so he surveyed her leisurely, his anneyance giving way to amusement and admiration.

The girl wore a large straw hat adorned with poppies, and coquettishly turned up at one side, which partly shaded the rich pomegranate hues of cheek and lips, the arched dark brows, the hazel eyes, and the short boyish curls clustering round her head. In one hand she swung a basket half full of ferns, and, as she came along, her round dimpled face well up, she lilted out at the top of her not very musical voice the old ballad. She would have stepped on Cecil's recumbent form had he not jumped up. He raised his hat and courteously expressed his regret for being in the way. The girl started aside with a suppressed scream, deep blushes suffusing her face at this most unexpected encounter; and she looked at Cecil with frightened eyes.

"I fear I have alarmed you," he said, smiling reassuringly. "I ought to have moved before, but I did not apprehend any danger until you came so near."

Recovering her composure she laughed joyously.

"Danger!" she echoed, with the merest soupcon of Blankshire accent, and in a shrill childish voice. "But only think how I should have felt if I had really trodden on you!" And she laughed again, Cecil joining in heartily.

"And only think how I should have felt too! You must always look where you are going, you know"—with a paternal air; "but you were so engrossed by your song."

She blushed again at the recollection of her singing.

"May I not hear the end of it?" said Cecil. "I was listening with great pleasure, I assure you."

"No, no!" she murmured, greatly confused. "And indeed I must go now. Good morning."

"If you must," returned Cecil languidly, again raising his hat, "then good morning."

He threw himself down again upon the grass.

"Some sort of an Eve in my Paradise," he mused. "But not a dangerous one—oh, no! A pretty child though; innocent as a daisy and as fresh. I wonder who she is, and how she has found out these outlandish parts. Surely my peace is not going to be disturbed by that awful phantom, the British tourist, in any form or shape! But begone dull care!

"'He is but a landscape painter,
And a village maiden she.'"

And he drew forth his little M.S. book and pencil and began to write, the silver-tongued river setting his words to sweetest music.

Great was Cecil Graham's astonishment when, seated at his early tea-table that afternoon, he beheld fluttering among the flowers in the garden the fair heroine of his morning's adventure.

"Some friend or relative perhaps of Mrs. Mill," he told himself. "What a pretty picture it is!" And he paused in the act of helping himself to a large plateful of cold ham to contemplate it.

Robed in blue muslin, the hue of the sky, the girl passed in and out among the trees, plucking a blossom here and there, caressing with small fingers the golden clusters of the laburnum, burying her round face in sweetbriar, her long dress sweeping the buttercups in the grass, and the light wind ruffing her dark silken curls. There was a native child-like grace in every movement which charmed the poet's eye. Presently he saw Mrs. Mill appear on the scene, in stiff old-fashioned gown and spotless folded kerchief. She said something to the girl in low tones. He saw the girl give a quick glance towards his window, blush like a rose, and disappear from view with his landlady.

"Now I must find out what that's all about," pondered the young man. I believe the old dame was bullying her. I won't have the child turned out of the garden like that; it amuses me to see her. Such a haunter of my solitude is very different from the fashionable lady or inquisitive snob I dread. This girl is like a fairy or a butterfly; the flowers seem to miss her now she's gone. I'll have her back; she doesn't disturb me at all. Now I say, Mrs. Mill," as his landlady entered to remove the tea equipage "why have you been turning that young lady out of the garden, eh?"

The suddenness of this attack quite gave Mrs. Mill "a turn," to use her own expression.

"Well, Mr. Graham, sir, I—I thought as you'd maybe be coming out presently, and I—I thought Nellie'd better not be in the way; there's plenty o' blooms at the back o' the house if she must needs be allays a-gathering on 'em."

"Well, when you sent her away, you deprived me of a pleasure, Mrs. Mill. I beg you will allow her to be as much in the garden as she likes, or she will regard me in the light of a regular ogre!"

Mrs. Mill always confessed that she was unable to tell what Mr. Graham was driving at, and never half understood him; but she replied with dignity—

"I'm much obliged, I'm sure, sir; but young gells like her is better out o' young gentleman's ways sometimes."

"Upon my word, Mrs. Mill," laughed Cecil, "if I am an ogre, you are a dragon!" and he began to sing—

"'A lake and a fairy boat,
To sail in the moonlight clear;
And merrily we would float
From the dragons that guard us here.'"

He laughed again at the end so heartily that Mrs. Mill was fain to join in with the laugh.

"You must let her come when I am out then," he said: "that will suit all parties. By-the-bye, might I ask is she your daughter?"

"No, sir, she's my niece—my husband's brother's only daughter. She's an orphan, and is like our own, seeing we've neither chick nor child beside. She've been well brought up," said Mrs. Mill, with pardonable pride. "An' a good girl in the main, but a trifle flighty, according to my ideas, you know, sir."

Cecil did not know that the good woman's ideas of correct girlish behavior consisted in sitting upright, never speaking except when spoken to, dressing with quakerish simplicity, and doing "useful" work all hours of the day. Still he guessed they would be different enough from modern ones, and he laughed lightly.

"Youth cannot possess the wisdom of age," he said. "However, I am sure you will make the very best of duennas!"

Gravely wondering what a "duenna" could be, the landlady retired to her own apartments, where she warned the blushing Nellie solemnly against the folly and vanity and beauty of youth; and dwelt upon the awful impropriety of speaking to, or attracting the attention of, young men in general, and her lodger in particular; until, in the eyes of the young girl, Mr. Graham's room possessed all the charm and fascination of a Bluebeard's chamber, and a degree of interest in him was excited in her simple soul which nothing could ever have convinced Mrs. Mill was the result of her own injudicious remarks.

CHAPTER II.

For two or three days afterwards Cecil Graham never saw the "butterfly," as he called Nellie, and she was gradually passing from his memory, when an event occurred which brought about their meeting.

One unusually warm afternoon he walked towards the ruins of an ancient abbey standing on the borders of a forest, about four miles from Mill's Farm, and two miles from the scattered village of Easthore—the town of these benighted regions—boasting its tiny Anglican church, its lawyer, its doctor, and one or two mansions of aristocratic pretension. Cecil did not notice, until the sun had disappeared, that the sky had become overcast with black clouds, while the dead silence seemed to portend some dread event. However, being near the Abbey, he pressed on—sure of shelter there if the storm should burst.

Darkly defined against the forest the old walls stood revealed, severe and beautiful, as he approached. Long grass waved over a few forgotten graves and massive fallen blocks. Dank mosses coated the stones, and amid the exquisite tracery of the east window hung wreaths of ivy, while the wallflower opened its rich sweet blossoms among the cloister arches.

"There is ever something sad and weird about a ruin," thought Cecil. "Ghosts of the past seem to sit brooding in the roofless aisles. The owl's cry from the empty windows and dismantled turrets sound like the lament of some unresting spirit hovering over its tomb."

The electric state of the atmosphere had also its effects upon his sensitive nerves; and he turned pale as he heard a loud scream quite near him. The next moment he laughed at himself for his foolishness; and, hurrying to the spot whence the sound proceeded, he found Miss Nellie Mill, who had fallen back on a block of stone, apparently half-fainting.

"My dear child, what is the matter? Has any one frightened you? Now, you're not to faint; for I shan't know what on earth to do with you if you do!' he questioned and rebuked, touching the hand lying on her knee.

A faint blush replaced the pallor of the girl's face, and she smiled.

"Oh, dear! I am very silly—but it was a snake. "Oh"—shuddering irrepressibly—"it did frighten me so!"

"A snake? Where is it?"—with interest. "I'll do for it!"

"It's gone—through the grass—it reared itself up and hissed at me! Oh, dear, I thought it was going to sting me!"

"I dare say it was as much frightened as you were, and nearly as harmless, returned Mr. Graham reassuringly. "But are you here alone? It is a long walk for you, is it not?"

"Oh, no! I could walk ever so much farther. I often come here; I like to bring a book and read," responded Nellie, quite forgetting her aunt's lessons on propriety, and smiling up into the young man's face in a way that would have horrified that good lady.

"Ah, do you?"—looking at her curiously. "May I ask what books you read? Scientific works, no doubt."

"Oh, no!" she said, blushing with pretty confusion. "I—I don't think I could understand them."

"You needn't wish to; you're too young to bother your head with such stuff. Poetry then, eh?"

"No'—looking more and more ashamed. "Generally—that is often—a—a novel, sir."

"A novel? Well, well, so long as it is a good one! But don't call me 'sir,' my dear."

"And do not call me 'my dear;'"—and she spoke with spirit.

"I beg your pardon, Miss Mill," he said, raising his hat. "You see you are so very young."

"I am not so very young!" she interrupted indignantly. "I am eighteen; that is, I shall be soon."

"I am putting my foot in it again," said Cecil, smiling. "Just like me."

The words had hardly left his lips when a vivid flash of lightning darted from the clouds overhead, followed almost immediately by an ear-splitting crash of thunder, while, like a cataract, down came the rain. White with terror, and trembling in every limb, Nellie Mill clung to her companion's arm.

"Don't be frightened! We can take shelter here," he said soothingly, drawing her into the cloisters near, and putting his arm round her with an instinct of protection; for she was so small and child-like, and her dimpled face was pale with fear.

Close to the inner wall he espied the fragment of a bench. Placing her gently on it, he remained standing beside her. It grew darker every moment. The sky was now black with angry-looking clouds, which were rent from time to time by the lightning the blue flashes of which lighted up the landscape with a ghastly glare. The battle of the elements raged furiously; but presently the rain ceased, and a silence more appalling than the thunder followed every long reverberating roll.

Never had Cecil Graham witnessed a scene so sublimely grand; and, absorbed in the spectacle, he almost forgot his companion's presence, until one forked dart split up the trunk of a tree just in front of the arch beneath which they cowered, scattering leaves and branches, and upheaving the turf. It was followed by a clap so frightful that even Cecil was aghast, and Nellie, wildly shrieking, started from her seat. But firmly, albeit tenderly, he put her back, while she, scarcely knowing what she did, hid her face on his breast as he knelt by her side. A feeling of pity and tenderness stirred in Cecil's heart for the weak creature looking to him for protection. Her hat had long since fallen off, and he stroked her dark tossed curls with womanly softness. Even in her wild terror, and amid the unabated fury of the tempest, Nellie felt and owned the influence of the man's stronger nature, and she became gradually, if not calm, at least perfectly quiet.

"At last! Look up, my child," he said gently; and, looking up—the tears she had been shedding glistening on the long curled lashes—Nellie saw a bright golden burst of sunshine streaming down from the parting clouds, bathing leaf and grass in its splendour, while every tiny blade glistened.

Swiftly the lurid clouds fled from the fair face of heaven, and the earth seemed to gain life and gladness every moment. The swallows darted gaily about the ruined walls, shaking glistening rain drops from the ivy, and thrushes and larks sang as if they had never sung before.

"It is like Heaven," said the girl, speaking in a hushed tone, as they emerged from their retreat.

"Like Heaven after a horrible death," added Cecil. "But, really, that lightning was magnificent! What a split it has made here"—moving towards the shattered tree.

"Oh, don't go near!" cried Nellie, taking his hand in her own small one, and holding it fast.

"Why not? Do you think it is possessed by an evil spirit?" he asked, laughing heartily. Nevertheless he obeyed that soft grasp; and, taking the little hand, he drew it within his arm.

The two found Mrs. Mill looking out for them in the greatest anxiety.

"Oh, Nellie, eh, my darling," she cried, almost sobbing, "where have you been? I have been terribly upset. I could not think where you'd been and got to; and such a hawful storm as we've had! And Mr. Graham—ay, but I'm right glad to see you safe, sir. And not wet, child? Where have you been?"

"Sheltering at Easthore Abbey," laughed Cecil; "and a sad fright your niece has had. I am afraid that she too is 'terribly upset.'"

Nellie did not speak; but her glowing face, radiant with smiles, belied this conjecture.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The managing editor looked at the applicant sadly, for he was an earnest young man. "I am sorry," he said at last, "but there is really no place vacant that would pay you any salary." "O," said the applicant hopefully, "I don't expect a salary. I am willing to work on shares." And then the manager knew he had turned away the leading American humorist.

SUMMER SMILES.

Two heads are better than one on a freak in a dime museum.

Jachie has been put to work in the laundry. There is a sad irony about this.

The Anarchist movement appears to be composed principally of bombs and bums.

"Why, Mary, have you come back to be a hired girl again? I thought you left us to get married and have a house of your own?" "So I did, mum." "Well what have you come back for?" "Well, you see, mum, John's done purty well, an' we kep' a hired girl, too, an' I'm kind av tired o' the way o' life. I thought I'd like to come back an' be boss again fur a while."

"Amanda, I wish you to put the large Bible in a prominent place on the centre of the table, and place three or four hymn books carelessly around on the sofas. I have advertised for a young man to board in a Christian family, and I tell you what, if you girls don't manage, either one of you to take him in, why I'll never try anything again, for I'm tired out."

Lawyer—"May it please the Court, the defence does not care to cross-examine the witness as testimony coming from him is not worthy of belief." Judge—"Has the witness ever been convicted of any criminal offense?" Lawyer—"Not that I know of, your Honor." Judge—"Has he the reputation of being a falsifier?" Lawyer—"Not exactly that, your Honor; but he has been employed two seasons as a baseball umpire." Judge—"Ah! (To the witness) You can step down, sir. (To the clerk) Call the next witness."

"Fannie," he said to her, "I love you with my whole heart, and I want you to be my wife. It is true I'm only a department clerk with $1,400 a year; but, Fannie, money does not buy happiness. Do you love me, darling?" "Oo-ee," she cooed, nestlinfi her head on his new coat front. "And you do love me?" he exclaimed, with confidence. "You love me with your whole soul and being?" "May be not quite that much," she gurgled, "but I love you $1,400 worth, George, and that's $400 more than I ever loved any living man."

No Wonder the Shippers Kick.

"Do you know, I never until recently felt the iron hand of a gigantic monopoly close on my throat, and so realized how slowly it was tightening its constricting folds, like the deadening upas tree, over whose blighted valley there flies no living bird and comparatively few dead ones, as it were, upon the life of the nation? (Applause, and loud cries of 'go on.') Needless is it to say that I refer to the railroad. I live in a small village on the line of the Pennsylvania Railway. We have no competing line. We lie at the feet of the monopoly that haul's us in and out of town; we are passive and helpless. The other day I had two boxes of freight to send west by this monopoly. I went crouching into the office of the freight agent. When I told him I had two boxes of stuff to send to Chicago, a distance of about 800 miles, I saw his eyes light up with the keen glare of savage greed. He said he would ask Harrisburg for rates, which I knew was a mere subterfuge to gain time while he could guess how much money I could raise this side of the grave, and then the grasping tool of a soulless corporation charged me 69 cents for carrying two big boxes 800 miles. What's more he made me pay it. It's no wonder that shippers kick. I am only surprised that they don't boycott the railroads. Let us return to the days and the quiet ways of our good old fathers, when, by paying only one-half of the price of the boat, I could have sent my boxes to Buffalo by canal and the rest of the way by lake boat, and get them through to Chicago or the bottom the same year."

He Didn't Know the Difference.

In the ladies waiting-room of the central depot the other day were a newly-married couple from Charlotte. They had been visiting in the city two or three days, and were then ready to go home. They sat side by side, of course, his arm around her waist and her head on his shoulder. A long-waisted stranger from the east, having sore eyes and a big heart, walked in, saw them thus seated, and in about a minute he asked of the husband:

"Has that woman got the toothache?"

The husband looked up in surprise but made no answer. After two or three minutes the long-waisted man again remarked:

"If that woman has got the toothache, I've got a bottle of peppermint in my satchel here."

The bride rolled her big white eyes around and the husband looked somewhat embarrassed. The man from down east unlocked his satchel, fumbled among his shirts and collars, and brought up four ounces of peppermint essence. He uncorked it touched the contents of the bottle against his big, red tongue, and handing it forward toward the husband feelingly said:

"Just have her sop some on a rag and rub her gooms with it. We've used it in our family for——"

The bride's eyes threw out sparks as she lifted her head from its loving position, and, striking at the bottle she snarled out:

"Tuthache, you fule! If you don't know the difference between true love and tuthache, you'd better pick grass with the geese!"

"Jeroosh!" gasped the man, and he evaporated like a tender steak before a boarder.

Too Sarcastic.

First Dude—"Ole fellah, what do you think of Miss Commencemse?"

Second Dude—"Well, ma deah boy, me opinion of her is not vewy fwattering."

First Dude—"Thath bad. Wat's the weason you don't wike her?"

Second Dude—"Too deuced sahcastic, don't ye know. W'y, the other day we were out widing, she and I, and we passed by one of these donkeys, a mizwable animal, you unnerstan, and I asked her the difference between that beast and myself. I thwought she would say she didn't know, and I would tell her that the donkey dwew loads and I dwew picturs. You know I am a sewt of an ahtist, and that would be a fwine joke, hah Jove."

First Dude—"And what did she say?"

THE prolonged cloudy weather in June with copious showers about the 25th, has made a most desirable improvement in all crops and pastures, giving both husbandman and country a more hopeful appearance. The prospects of a good average crop is now very flattering.

WE took a run through McNea's new planing factory last week, which is now in full blast. The building is a strong frame 47 x 51 feet on stone foundation and will be vaneered with brick this month. The machinery is all new and of the most modern and approved kind. On the first flat is the office, large planer and matcher combined, drying room, boiler room; and upper flat, a tennoning machine, buzz planer, sticker, shaper, large power mortice and boring machine combined, band saw, jig saw, sandpaper machine, laithe, rip and cut-off saw, and shaft of six emery wheels all running at once. Everything is in first-class order and complete in every department, nothing approaching it in this county. The public can depend on being well served, and the constantly growing demand for building material can be supplied in the best possible manner without going abroad.

Good Advice.

—If you your lips would keep from slips,
Five things observe with care,
Of whom you speak, of whom you speak,
Of how, and when and where.

A MIDNIGHT ALARM.

There is scarcely any fright more alarming to a mother than the ominous sound of croup—so liable at the hour of night. When Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam (for the throat and lungs) is at hand, croup and distressing coughs lose half their terrors. It cures coughs, asthma and bronchitis.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

News a little scarce, and your correspondent very busy this week.

Extensive preparations are being made here for the large crowd of visitors we hope to see present in our town on the coming holiday.

Mr. D. S. Munroe is sparing no pains nor time to make the oratorio of "Queen Esther," of which he is manager and dirdctor, one of the grandest and most interesting entertainments ever given in this part of the country.

The anniversary services just passed, in connection with the Presbyterian church here, was pleasant, profitable and fairly successful. On Sabbath last, morning and evening, the Rev. Mr. Colter, of Meaford, preached two very interesting and impressive sermons. On Monday evening a strawberry festival was held. After all had partaken of the good things, an interesting program was gone through; brief and pithy addresses were delivered by Revs. Watson, Ayers, McLeod, Mr. Richardson, and the pastor, Mr. Wilson. The entertainment was commenced by a very choice selection from our Flesherton Glee Club; solos each by Miss Maud Richardson, Miss Armstrong, Miss Ayers and Miss Christoe, were exceedingly well rendered and duly appreciated by all present; also a closing duet by Misses Ayers and Christoe brought forth loud applause. The turn out was not as large as we usually see at our Flesherton entertainments, we suppose largely owing to the fact of it being in such close proximity to the entertainment on Dominion Day, but a very pleasant evening was spent in the church.

The brick work is now about completed on the new Baptist church.

The plans and specifications for the new school house to be erected here this summer, are now to hand and in the hands of the trustees. We suppose tenders for the work will be asked for at once.

Mr. W. J. Bellamy's new dwelling is being rapidly pushed forward.

The stone work on the foundatation of W. W. Trimble's new dwelling will soon be completed. Mr. Trimble, we think, has the prettiest building site in Flesherton. We hope to see him erect a handsome dwelling.

The brass band's new uniform is now about completed. We hope to see them all in good shape and in their new attire on Dominion Day.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. R. Wright's new frame barn was raised on the 12th inst. The old stagers, Cooey and Shaw, were the captains. It was a close call for victory. Cooey's men claim that their men came out best, but taking the completion of the work into consideration they had nothing to boast of. The barn is 54x40, with stone stables underneath.

Mr. E. Brodie has a field of barley out in head.

Mr. Thos. Gilbert has burnt a kiln of lime.

Mr. Colwell Carson is putting up a new brick house. Mr. Fred Lyder is doing the brick work, and Mr. R. Buchanan the carpenter work.

Several of the natives were up to the Owen Sound Liberal Demonstration.

The crops look as if a rain was badly needed.

Road work commences next week.

Hop Bitters.

To 1 gallon of water put 2 handsful of hops tied in a muslin bag, boil slowly for 2 hours then add 1½ lbs coarse brown sugar boil another half hour turn into a crock and when luke warm add ½ cup fresh yeast & let stand near the fire to brew for 2 days strain and bottle cork tightly and set away in a cool place, take a glassful between meals and before going to bed This is a sure cure for Neuralgia insomnia & dyspepsia.—MRS. CASSON.

A HEAVY BURDEN.

Mr, George Russell, of Aurora, Ont., says he was a great sufferer from a running sore of the worst discription, which baffled the best medical skill, and his life was a burden. He was cured by B. B. B. to his great joy and surprise of his friends.

THE FARM.

Seasoned and Penned.

Do not make gloomy dungeons of your stables.

When a plant has ripened its seed its mission is ended and it is ready to die.

The association between the sons and daughters and the hired man or woman is more intimate on the farm than in other kinds of business and therefore there is more need of care in the character of the "help."

Dr. Hoskins claims that on hundreds of farms where there are no barn cellars the soil under the floors where the cattle stand is worth as much or nearly as much per ton as the fertilizers of commerce.

One important reason why clover is so valuable a manurial plant is because it has a long or tap root by which materials far beneath the surface are brought into a valuable shape for plant use.

Mr. J. S. Woodward holds that no man has a moral, nor should he have a legal right, to permit his orchard to be a breeding ground for canker worms, codling moths, &c. He should be compelled to destroy the insects or to cut down the trees.

When it is understood that if allowed to ripen seed perfectly the grass loses all its rich juices and becomes mere dry straw—woody fibre, a little silicate of potash, and a very trifling quantity of vegetable extractive matter—the importance of cutting it at the right time will be apparent.

Farmers, whose whole information relative to their business is bounded by the narrow experience of themselves and neighbors, and which may be radically erroneous and ruinous in practice, are often found so convinced of their own wisdom and so dogmatic in their opinions as to be wholly unimpregnable to teaching.

If a farmer wishes to educate his boys that they may become good and contented followers of his own calling, his first step should be to educate himself. In order that he may make successful farmers of them he must himself have a just understanding of the possibilities of his vocation, and a genuine love for farm work.

Hard and steady work must be done to get a bountiful harvest, but we raise a word of caution about over-work. It is not necessary for farmers to work themselves to death in order that they may reap abundantly. Is it still necessary for farmers to continue as their forefathers did and work from sun to sun? We do not hold that a system of eight hours of labor a day can be successfully inaugurated on the farm, but we are sure that the days can be much shortened in many instances without detriment and even with good results.

A market gardener has a very fine cow that was milked week after week by hired men. He observed that the amount of butter he carried to market weighed about a pound more each alternate week. He watched the men and tried the cow after they had finished milking, but always found that there was no milk left in the teats. He finally asked the Scotch girl who took care of the milk if she could account for the difference. "Why, yes," she said, "When Jim milks he says to the old cow, 'So! my pretty muley, so!' But when Sam milks he hits her on the edge of the pail and says, 'Hist you old brute!"

The Kansas Farmer asserts that dairy farming adds one dollar per acre to the value of the land, while it saves one dollar per acre of the value of the land as against grain farming, this is two dollars per acre—good rent. Twenty of the poorest milch cows in the country, that two men can milk in one hour and a half in the morning, and the same at evening will pay the wages of the two hired hands and furnish groceries for a good-sized family, by selling cream at ten cents a gauge. The skim milk will raise twenty hogs that will be worth $6 each, $120, and to this may be added $3000 worth of calves, as a clear profit over and above the crop raised by the two hired men.

WORDS OF WISDOM.

Inquisitive people are the funerals of conversation; they do not take in anything for their own use, but merely to pass it to another.

Those men who destroy a healthful constitution of body by intemperance, do as manifestly kill themselves, as those who hang, or poison, or drown themselves.

Were we as eloquent as angels, we should please some more by listening than by talking.

Good manners, is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse; whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy, is the best bred man in company.

Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with design to be each other's mutual comfort and entertainment, have in that action bound themselves to be good-humored, affable, discreet, forgiving, patient and joyful with respect to each other's frailties and imperfections to the end of their lives.

The real difference between men is energy. A strong will, a settled purpose and invincible determination can accomplish almost anything; and on this lies the distinction between great men and little men.

"How," said one to Sir Walter Raleigh, of whom it was said he "could tell terribly"—"how do you accomplish so much and in so short a time?" "When I have anything to do I go and do it," was the reply.

For drunkenness, drink cold water; for health, rise early; to be happy, be honest; to please all, mind your own business.

The Learned Societies

Through their members have testified to the great efficacy of Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It provokes no line of demarcation, securing alike the good will of the highest and the most humble, and with strict impartiality, removing with equal celerity the corns of each. Try Putnam's Corn Extractor.

ITEMS OF INTEREST.

There is a woman in Union Point, Ga., with a beautiful beard nearly a foot long. She is well to do, and thus escapes the direful results.

Mrs. Jennie Wright, of Indianapolis, has brought suit to recover the value of her sewing machine, which her worthless husband carried to a liquor saloon and raffled off.

Tornadoes have so scared the citizens of Meriden, Ill., that they talk of building a huge "cyclone cellar," where the whole town can take refuge when a wind storm comes along.

Georgia is likely to be known as the Mother of Evangelists. The Rev. J. H. Munday is her latest product in this line, and he is said to be doing a great work at Columbia, Tenn.

Tommy Perry, aged 14, was ploughing near Bettsford, Ga., when lightning struck his head, passed down his arms through the plough handles, and along the plough to the mule, killing both the boy and the animal.

The venerable Joseph Kleinfeldt of Utica recently died at the residence of his son, Alderman Littlefield of Detroit. Since the death notice appeared the Alderman has been busy explaining that his name is simply his father's name translated into English.

A young colored woman in Lakeview, N. J., while carrying a kettle of boiling water, suddenly fainted and fell. She kept tight hold of the kettle, and thus succeeded in pouring its entire contents over her legs, scalding herself terribly.

John Coulter, of Richmond, attempted to hive a swarm of bees the other day, and they lighted upon him and nearly stung him to death. It was thought that he would surely die, but he managed to pull through and is now very sore but convalescent.

Charley Sheehan, 13 years old, of Lafayette, went in bathing accompanied by his dog. The boy could not swim, and while paddling about in water nearly up to his neck, the dog got on his back and pushed down. As fast as he came up the dog push him under and the boy was drowned.

Stephen Gleason, of Fall River, is 100 years and six months old, attends church every Sunday, walking unaided to and from the church; takes a long walk daily, has excellent sight and hearing, and unimpaired memory. Mrs. Gleason is nearly ninety years old, and likewise well preserved.

G. A. Barclay, of Edinburgh, told a Chicago reporter that he had been by night through the slums of his own city, of Glasgow, Liverpool, London, Paris, Rome, and Naples, and that, except in Naples he had never seen anything so bad in the way of drinking, and vice as he had seen in Chicago.

Accounts begin to come in of girls who kill themselves jumping the rope. The eleven-year-old daughter of Andrew Bessemer of Louisville has just died after matching herself against some playmates at a picnic. She jumped until she brought on heart palpitation that could not be controlled.

A writer in the Bee Journal says that bees have a strong antipathy to dark-colored objects. A breed of chickens ran about his hives. The bees stung one of the dark ones to death, and did not molest the light-colored ones. He says that a man with a black plug hat rarely gets stung, the bees devoting their entire attention to shooting the hat.

Three years ago, after a tornado had devastated the farm of a Georgia farmer, he found a two-year-old boy among the shrubbery of his garden. No one claiming the waif the farmer took him and cared for him. Last summer the farmer took the boy with him into Mississippi, and then another tornado took the child, and he has never been heard of since.

There is a cave about four miles from Houston, Texas, about 100 feet long, 60 feet broad, and, from 4 to sixteen feet in height where numberless bats roost by day. It is said that there are so many that it takes them nearly an hour to get into the cave each morning and in the rush hundreds are killed. It is proposed to form a company to collect and utilize batsking.

John Carothers, while burning brush near Akron, Ohio, caught his foot in a brush heap, and was in danger of being burned to death. His yells brought a man, who said: "Pay me the $5 you owe me, and I'll help you out." Carothers insisted that he didn't owe any $5. "All right, then, burn," said the man, and he walked away. Carothers then by frantic efforts released himself, but not before he was badly scorched.

Herman Reedle was digging a well at McAlister, I. T. He arranged a charge for blasting, lighted the fuse, and was hoisted towards the surface forty feet above. When half way up the rope broke, and he fell to the bottom. He tried to grasp and extinguish the fuse, but was too late. The charge exploded, Herman was blown nearly to the top of the well, and fell back dead with every bone in his body broken.

A dignified pug in the arms of its mistress was riding on the front seat of an open London street car the other day. The horses were tired, and the driver used his whip freely. The dog watched him closely, and, each he struck the weary steeds, howled dismally in sympathy with the suffering animals. He kept it up so vigorously that, for peace sake, the driver had to put up the whip, and then the pug seemed quite relieved.

Strength and Diet.

The Roman soldiers, who built such wonderful roads and carried a weight of armor and luggage that would crush the average farm hand, lived on coarse brown bread and sour wine. They were temperate in diet, regular and constant in exercise. The Spanish peasant works every day and dances half the night, yet eats only his black bread, onion and watermelon. The Smyrna porter eats only a little fruit and some olives. He eats no beef, pork or mutton, yet he walks off with his load of 800 pounds. The coolie, fed on rice, is more active and can endure more than the negro fed on fat meat. The heavy work of the world is not done by men who eat the greatest quantity. The fastest or longest-winded horse is not the biggest eater. Moderation in diet seems to be the prerequisite for endurance.

Guarded [illegible]

The private service for the protection of the Vanderbilts, Astors and Gould was established three years ago, and is entirely separate for each family, although the men who defend the Vanderbilts and Astors are governed by the same establishment and practically work together. Regular patrol duty is done night and day, and twenty detectives are exclusively employed for the purpose. There are four Astor residences and five belonging to the Vanderbilts, all in or close to Fifth avenue, between Twenty-third and Fifty-second streets. The spies are on duty eight hours each per day, and the beats are so arranged that the nine hourly rounds be approached unseen by by one or more of the guardsmen. Wm. H. Vanderbilt was the originator of this system, and he was incited to it by the large number of cranky letters he received. He professed to have no fear of rational evil-doers, but was apprehensive that maniacs might attack him or some member of his family. Since his death the mails have been laden with all sorts of appeals, demands and threats directed to his sons.

Jay Gould's self-protection is more secret and characteristic. He does not intrust it to a detective agency, but hires his own bodyguard. For years he has always been accompanied by a stalwart young fellow. But that is a safeguard against Wall street enemies. Cranks who might cut up capers in or around his home are under the view of spies whose quarters are in a room of the Windsor Hotel across the way. This is additional to patrol duty done by a separate set of men. The employes of the millionaire families, whose names are poor people's synonyms for wealth, are kept informed as to every new demonstration by a crank, and they are alert to descry and drive off the monomaniacs who attempt any exploits. During the Western strikes Jay Gould has made the trips between his home and office in a cab, instead of elevated cars as formerly, and it was observed that a ring at his bell brings a sauntering watchman to the foot of the steps about as quickly as it does the servant to the top. One of the defenses in Gould's case is against those who would write antagonistic sentiments with chalk on his sidewalk and steps. Men and boys are frequently caught at it and compelled to desist. A specimen of that class of revolutionists seemed to be a poet, and a wild one, judging by the description of him. His chalk was bright red, and he rapidly wrote:

The rich may think,
The poor must work,

Before he was collared; and then, as though determined that at least the terminal rhymes of his verse should be emblazoned, he added at what would have been the end of the third line, "labor," and right underneath "neighbor." The rest remains unknown.

The Salt of the Earth.

If the salt formations of Nevada were in railroad communication there would be no market in this country for the foreign article. In Lincoln county, on the Rio Virgin, there is a deposit of pure rock salt which is exposed for a length of two miles, a width of half a mile, and is of unknown depth. In places cannons are cut through it to a depth of sixty feet. It is of ancient formation, being covered in some places by basaltic rock and volcanic tufa. The deposit has traced on the surface for a distance of nine miles. It is so solid that it must be blasted like rock, so pure and transparent that print can be read through blocks of it a foot thick. At Sand Springs, in Churchill county, there is a deposit of rock salt fourteen feet in depth, free from any particle of foreign substance, which can be quarried at the rate of five tons a day to the man. The great Humboldt salt field is about fifteen miles long by six wide. When the summer heats have evaporated the surface water, salt to the depth of several inches may be scraped up and underneath is a stratum of pure rock salt, of unknown depth. Soda, borax and other valuable minerals also exist in large quantities near these localities, and branch railroads will sooner or later bring them into market. A considerable business in gathering borax is already established on the line of the Carson and Colorado railroad. If Nevada will cut down her working expenses and develope her natural resources, she will be above the necessity of seeking land grants, from her neighbors or from the General Government.

What He Had in for Him.

The other day Judge Neokelsen went a fishing. Becoming tired and hungry on his way home he stopped at a cabin near the roadside and thus addressed an old negro man who came to the gate:

"How are you, old man?"

"Po'ly, sah; how is it wid yerse'f?"

"I am hot, hungry, dusty and thirsty. Can you dea nything for me?"

"No, sah."

"Can't you give me some water?"

"No, sah."

"I see that you have a well back there."

"Yas, de well's dar."

"Then why can't I get some water?"

"Look er heah, Jedge. Yourse'f thinks dat I doan know yer, but I does. I wus er witness in yer cou't de uder week an' yer let one o' dem lawyers cross question me an' ketch me in er lie. Dat wa'n't no way ter treat a stranger in de town. Yes, sah, set right dar an' let dat blame lawyer 'buse me like I wa'n't a citizen o' dis heah county. I'se had it in fur yer eber since dat time an I wants ter tell yer whut's er fack, ef yer gits any water outen dat well it'll be airter yer's had de hardest fight er white man eber had."

A Valuable Man.

Merchant—"Well, if Sparks is a good salesman I would like to get hold of him."

Partner—"Oh, yes, he's a good salesman, but he's a terrible stutterer. Why the other day he tried to give a customer a price on a piece of silk but before he could get it out this market price of that silk had fallen $2 a yard. The woman took the piece rather than ask him if he couldn't make a reduction."

Merchant—"We want Sparks."

Sam Small compares church lotteries to fare gam'es. If he had ever paid two dollars for cast dinner on a cloth dog that had lived on an exclusive diet of cotton, he would say it was more like highway robbery than fare.

HEALTH.

Dangers of Brain-Work.

One article in [illegible] by Dr. Clark Bell on "The [illegible] Tax [illegible] Life," and we shall appropriate some of his thoughts.

Brain-work, even in its highest forms, involves purely physical acts as truly as does that of the muscles of the stomach. "Excessive thought means cerebral hyperæmia as inevitably as excess in the use of a gastric stimulant means active congestion in the mucous membrane of the stomach; and just as habitual excessive use too irritating food and drink may induce passive congestion in the intervals, or as the sequel, of active congestion of the gastric organ, so may too persistent and excessive brain-work tend to the production of a chronic engorgement of the vessels of the encephalon" (the brain), "with whatever that physical fact involves or entails." A perfect similarity of law governs the development of disorders of brain and body.

Now, as some have inherited a weak muscular system, and others a feeble digestion, so still others, perhaps in some respects brilliant, have a congenital inability for considerable or prolonged brain-work, and are almost sure to be injured by a continued strain.

The times demand in this country, even more than in England, that brain-workers should have a large reserve of energy, and a capacity for producing force almost indefinitely, to meet the demands of exceptional exigencies.

In our country many enter the professions who are naturally equal to routine work, but are wholly unequal to the strains of competition and to the multiplied and varied demands which so characterise our times. They constantly and perilously strike the limits of their congenital capacity. It is equally so in mercantile life. Not a few, who are equal to a small business find out that they were not equal to a large one only after both physical and financial failure. It is only less so in many other forms of business. Thousands attempt more than they are equal to, the continual pressure of which results in nervous exhaustion.

Somewhat akin to these are teachers in our common schools. The early stages of every profession and business make peculiar demands on the nervous force. And yet thousands enter the teaching profession who do not intend to remain in it. They stay just long enough to be overworked, and to be injured—in many cases for life.

So, also, our political system constantly brings forward new men who must fit themselves for new and difficult duties at an immense cost to the brain. The present physical condition of some of our public men is simply a prominent illustration of this fact.

Nervous Cough.

One may have a hard, dry and violent cough, and yet the lungs, bronchial tubes and larynx be in a perfectly normal condition.

Says Flint, "In most of the cases of this kind which I have seen, the cough has had a peculiar barking tone, and the pitch has been low, showing that the glottis was dilated at the instant of coughing. In some cases, however, the tone is shrill, and the quality of the sound croupal, showing spasm of the glottis. In a case recently under observation, the cough consisted of a single, short, hoarse bark, often repeated several times a minute. It is sometimes in paroxysms, having a resemblance to those of whooping cough. The peculiar sound of the cough, together with its frequent recurrence, and sometimes its violence, renders its distressing to those whose sympathies are excited, and annoying to others."

It is mostly confined to females of hysterical tendencies. It may be induced by involuntary irritation. A school for girls was once broken up by it. The slightest changes of temperature excite it, as do also penetrating odors. It is constantly attended by sneezing and snuffling.

Shadewald, who has recently given it special attention, found it could be produced by gently touching a certain point within the nostrils. This point is the termination of one of the filaments of the trigeminal (or trifacial) nerve, and it is to its irritation that Shadewald regards this cough as due. Hence he calls it the trigeminal cough.

It bears a striking resemblance to nervous asthma, and the latter is now thought to be the most pronounced form of trigeminal cough with its seat within the nostrils. Ramifications of the trigeminal go to the pharynx (the back part of the mouth), and also to a portion of the ear, and hence this cough may sometimes be due to trigeminal irritation of the nerve within the nostrils.

Of course no treatment directed to the throat or lungs will be of any avail, and its persistence against all ordinary remedies may cause the gravest fears. But the peculiar barking tone of the cough and a certain nervous character of the patient may suggest its real nature.

The medical attendant should at once suspect its trigeminal origin, if he fails to find any organic explanation of it. All treatment should be directed to the nasal nerve, and the main object should be to lessen its undue excitability.

Galvanism is warmly recommended. Cauterization is often effectual, and so, for a time, is a slight bleeding of the parts. The copious secretion to which iodide of potassium, administered internally, gives rise is helpful, by washing out the irritating particles. In lighter cases, this and the inhaling of vapor are often sufficient.

Jones had written a local item of a social occurrence at his boarding-house for the paper, and the next day he called around to interview the editor about it. "Well," said the gentleman, "your notice was a good one, Mr. Jones, and we are always glad to have our friends help us get all the news." "That's what I thought," replied Jones, "and so I sent it in; but there was a trifling mistake in the print." "And what was it? I didn't notice." "In that part where I had written 'as the guests were going out to supper,' you got it 'as the guests were going out to suffer.'" "Um-ah-yes, I did notice that," said the editor; "but you see I boarded at that house three years, and when I saw that 'going out to suffer,' I thought 'going out to supper' wasn't any better, so I just left it that way."

[illegible]

A [illegible]

One [illegible] Old Grandma Drew [illegible] on the train at the [illegible] murdered, and in the [illegible] she received a fatal wound. [illegible] time she had exercised a [illegible] over the gang, adjusting their [illegible] generally making peace among [illegible] of the Pittses was also killed [illegible] time, and Yeager, a member of [illegible] ous band, has since been sent to [illegible] a long term. As the [illegible] have been quarrelling of late [illegible] one a few days ago, when [illegible] and son, came to town and [illegible] tion where one of the Brannens [illegible] found. Officers went in search [illegible] desperado, found him at work [illegible] and killed him as he was resisting [illegible] This brought Cal Brannen, a [illegible] the front thirsting for revenge, and [illegible] the course of an interview with the [illegible] told them where they could find [illegible] of Frank Harris, a man who [illegible] two years ago, and at the same [illegible] veyed the information that the [illegible] murdered him.

It had been known for several [illegible] the outlaws had a retreat somewhere [illegible] neighborhood of the Helotes [illegible] several miles north of San Antonio, [illegible] until Brannen came in the exact [illegible] was a matter of conjecture. He [illegible] officers explicit directions, and, by following them closely, the officers came [illegible] small circular opening which [illegible] Brannon's description of the [illegible] what is now called Robbers' Cave. [illegible] was pitch dark in the hole, a Mexican [illegible] a lighted candle in his hand was [illegible] and he speedily announced that he had come upon a human skeleton. After [illegible] difficulty the bones were conveyed to the surface, where they were recognized as those of Harris. Although little time was spent in examining the cave, it was seen that its dimensions were large, the entrance alone being small. This goes down perhaps twenty feet, like a well, and the cave widens out in all directions. From the bottom of the well the human remains were found, just as they had been thrown there two years before.

The murder of Harris was the result of a quarrel between him and Jim Pitts, [illegible] out of the admiration of both for a young lady residing in the Scott family. Jim Pitts was the leader of the desperadoes, and he undertook to break the idea that Harris should have any rival in anything. Harris, on the other hand, was regarded by the girl with much favor, and he swore that he would marry her, declaring that no one else should. The Brannens sided Pitts, and on several occasions there was trouble with Harris on account of his persistency in wooing the girl. At last, in 1884, as Brannen now confesses, Pitts arrested Harris on some trivial charge, and turned him over to the Scotts, one of whom was a constable, notwithstanding his connection with the gang. The Scotts took Harris one evening with their prisoner, for the purpose, as was supposed, of bringing him to this city, but he was never [illegible] seen alive. He was killed the same night and his body was concealed in the cave from which it has just been taken. Soon after the tragedy Pitts married Miss Scott, and they lived happily together until he was killed in the Gosling affray. The Scotts are now under arrest for murder, and there is not much doubt that they will have other crimes to answer for before they again see the outside of the jail.

Since the discovery of Robbers' Cave the interest in the place has become very great, and several exploring parties are making preparations to investigate it closely. It is believed to contain the remains of [illegible] many people who have disappeared mysteriously in the last few years. The entrance is not more than a hundred yards from the house in which the Scotts lived for some time, and old residents of that vicinity predict that it will be found to be a regular private graveyard.

Questions of Economy.

Two old misers, one seventy and the other eighty years of age, fell into a dispute as to which was the more economical.

"The proof," said the former, "that I have no idea of saving is that during the half hour we have been arguing, a lump of your sugar bowl has been having a talk, and you have not taken the trouble to take it away."

"And the proof that I am far more saving than you, and that nothing escapes me," retorted his aged opponent, "is that I leave that insect in my sugar-bowl on purpose. He acts as my spy. When I come home and find that fly gone, I am perfectly sure that the cook has been stealing sugar."

A wise man's heart is like a broad hearth that keeps the coals (his passions) from burning the house. Good deeds in the life are coals raked up in embers, to make a fire next day.

Real merit of any kind cannot long be concealed; it will be discovered, and nothing can depreciate it but a man's undervaluing it himself. It may not always be rewarded as it ought; but it will always be known.

Three weeks ago a man bought his wife a very finely bred, well-behaved [illegible] chew tobacco. Now the dog comes into the house by the back door, never puts his feet on the mat, never goes to bed, is careless at his meals, goes home [illegible] tail, goes with a lower grade of dogs, and is feared that he is beginning to take an interest in politics.

A pet black squirrel owned in [illegible] Ga., was left at home while its [illegible] went away for a visit. As soon as the [illegible] fellow missed her he hunted all over the house, and, not finding her, showed inconsolable grief. He refused to eat day after day until it was so evident that he was starving himself to death that his owner was sent for. When she came the squirrel was frantic with joy, and then it tried to eat, but it had fasted too long; it could not swallow and the next day died lying on the knees of its mistress.

Only One.

E. A. BOYDEN.

world moves on at a rapid pace.
I follow along in the surging crowd:
gaze is fixed on a single face,
the one in life of which I'm proud.
me in the human throng.
rest under the sun,
what to me, as they pass along,
the rest without that only one?

gayly struts on the world's great stage fatal actor in the play!
mincing youth to garrulous age, never a one could pass away.
the world must stop, and fold its hands, its turmoil cease and its toil be done;
the drama end with the breaking bands, its final exit of only one.

the world moves on at a steady pace,
the ranks close up as one drops out, another fills the vacant place, will, to the end of time, no doubt.
may fall from the glittering sky,
we scarcely note when its race is run;
mortal may drop and die,
little heed—it is only one.

world we may be only this—drop is humanity's surging sea, there are who will sadly, severely miss words and the smiles of you or me.
humble may be my lot,
glad some heart's pure love to have won;
that I shall not be forgot, unloved—though I'm only one.

Retribution At Last.

CHAPTER II.—(CONTINUED.)

And now, Mrs. Mill, seeing I have been danger, won't you ask me to have with you in your cosy kitchen to-night?"
Cecil in his most winning and per-tones. "You can't expect me to go lonely room after such an afternoon has been. Why, I might have soft-of the brain from mere depression of

I'm right glad I'd be, sir, and proud; ways is different from yours, sir, humble, but——"
But still you'll put up with me? That's Christian soul. There's an uncom-nice smell somewhere, which makes feel as hungry as a hunter."
very cosy happy party sat round Mrs.
substantially-provided tea-table an hour later. The snowy cloth was with real old china ware, and a great of freshly-gathered lilies adorned the of the table. A roast fowl and a dish cooking ham and eggs were well support-by white bread and cakes, amber-tinted honeycomb, and delicious preserves.
The good landlady, anxious to do honor her guest, appeared in her best flowered gown and company cap. Her husband, shy, awkward, red-faced farmer, beamed every one in an impartial silence; while Cecil confessed to himself that Nellie, in her white dress, with a cluster of late lilies in her bosom, was the prettiest bit of nature he had seen in his life, an opinion so plainly expressed by his eyes that this was perhaps the reason why the girl's heart danced so wildly within her, causing her to blush and smile until she was prettier than ever.
The old eight-day clock ticked loudly in the corner, and a big cat purred on the warm hearth. Flowers in earthenware pots stood in the lozenge-paned windows; and through the wide open door could be seen the steep rocky walls of the dell, all its trees and ferns flashing with rain-drops in the lustrous sunshine. It was like an idyl of Arcadia to the young poet, and he enjoyed it to his heart's content, laying himself out to please and fascinate as he was never known to do amongst even the creme de la creme of the society in which he held a high position. His own family and his fashionable friends would have been surprised indeed could they have seen him now—surprised and horrified, too, no doubt. Cecil gave a smile at the thought, then he banished everything but the present from his mind.

"I wonder, sir," said Mrs. Mill, filling Cecil's cup for the fourth time, "you've never been to Veriston Mere in some of your strolls. It's a beautiful spot, though, to my mind an uncanny one; and then Mr.
Veriston is always poring over his books, and that there daughter of his roves about like never a companion nor nothing. Such a thing for a lady like her to grow up in a heathenish way."

"Veriston Mere?" echoed Cecil. "Now you have just reminded me of my duty, Mrs. Mill. The Veristens are connections of my mother, and I promised her most solemnly to look them up. I'm sure I had forgotten all about it; but really, when a man wants to write, how can he be expected to bore himself with a tribe of people he neither knows nor wishes to know?"

Nellie's eyes fixed themselves with awe upon his handsome face as he spoke. Was he an author then? Did he really write books! Novels, or poetry perhaps.

"Well, Miss Nellie, what is it?" he asked mischievously, catching her look. "Do you think me something awfully queer or unnatural?"

"Oh, no!"—and she blushed deeply, "I only—only wondering if you wrote——"

"I plead guilty to one only. But why should the gruesome fact alarm you?"

"It doesn't alarm me, sir—Mr. Graham,
I mean; but I was thinking how very clever you must be."

Cecil smiled, not ill-pleased.

"Oh, dear, no! It's only a trick of the pen I've got." Then turning to Mrs. Mill, he said, "What sort of a place is Veriston Mere House?"

"A regular tumble-down old place, sir; gardens and everything as wild as can be.
There's a great sheet o' water full o' weeds and what not, where Miss Veriston goes a boat, and sits and reads there hours on end, they say."

"Have you seen the lady?"—smiling. "Is she young?"

"Yes, sir. I've seed her at church once or twice. She's young enough—not much over twenty, I should say, tall and white and dazed-looking. I see nothink in her myself."

"And her father?"

"He's a haristocratic held Henglish gentleman, he is. His daughter's very like him, only his 'air's as white as snow. But you'll see for yourself, sir, if you go."

"Certainly I shall. Your description has aroused my curiosity."

"Master Veriston's as kind a friend a man as never breathed," broke in the landlady suddenly. "He'd give the coat o' his back to a poor man. Ay, lawk, the wonder he and missie goes away?" And then Mr.

Mill whispered some answer with a drowsy breath, as one for whom the medium of language was much too poor to express their thoughts.

"Will-um means (as a word to my lord Mr.
Veriston, graciously explained his wife.

"He's rare took up with him, is Wil-lum!"

"What a lovely evening!" remarked Cecil insinuatingly, after a while when the farmer had gone to see after his live stock, and Mrs. Mill was clearing the table.
"Shall we have a stroll in the garden, Miss Nellie?"

Nellie looked timidly at her aunt.

"You may go, child," said the matron affably; "and you may as well cut some flowers for them glasses in Mr. Graham's room; t'others are a little waned."

So, provided with basket and scissors,
Nellie stepped out through the open door, Cecil following her, and went round to the sunny west front.

The air was perfectly delicious after the storm, cool, and redolent of perfume. The earth seemed to rejoice in restored peace and new life. The leaves—green as emerald —stood out clearly against the azure sky.
There was quite a chorus of feathered singers, while the distant lowing of cattle, the bleating of sheep, and a faint mingling of voices and bells added the grateful token of domestic life.

Cecil quite forget his distaste for an Eve in his Paradise, and he assisted his fair companion in her rifling of the flower-beds most gallantly, feeling as merry and light-hearted as a school-boy in vacation, flirting, it must be confessed, as recklessly as he would have done with the belles of his own circle.

It never occurred to him that the girl by his side now was no finished coquette, no society belle, too well seasoned to be in the slightest degree hurt by numberless sweet words or delicate attentions. Nellie Mill was a simple country girl, very vain and impressionable, albeit with a fresh and guileless heart. She was perfectly innocent of the world's ways, of its falsehoods, and its idle games of folly.

She looked up at the tall young man bending over her so tenderly, his voice softening when he spoke to her, and his eyes full of dangerous admiration; and she deemed him the hero of every tale she had read, a god among men, a being of another world, with whom it was joy and honor unspeakable to associate.

When the flower-gathering was over Cecil repeated some of his own poetry to her, the music of which charmed her, though she could not understand the sense. The influence of the hour, of the place, and of the companionship lent its aid to lure the girl's heart from her careless keeping. It seemed to her a dream of perfect happiness. Of a waking time she never thought. She was far too simple and ignorant to dream of analysing her own emotions, or to question this gay Lothario's smiles and soft tones.

CHAPTER III.

Summer's brightest sunshine bathed in golden glory the moss-grown walls of Veriston Mere. Bewitching light and shadow played among the creeping jessamine, and the branches of an old pear-tree which entirely covered one side of the house. The sunshine streamed in at the open windows and the wide hall door; flickered amongst the dense foliage of beech, larch, sycamore, and chestnut, beamed on the flowers, and lay in broad patches and flecks on the large un-mown lawn, which was full of blue-bells, buttercups and daisies. An unkempt place it was truly. The house was an old Elizabethan building with three gables, quaint stacks of chimneys, small windows in massive frames, some of them filled with heraldic devices in stained glass, long low rooms mediævally and uncomfortably furnished, and a vast square hall. The hall contained one or two priceless paintings, a few grim suits of armour, stags' heads with enormous antlers, and a huge fireplace full of ferns and flowers down to the brazen dogs at either side, with a black skin rug in front of the tiled hearth. It was lighted by three stained windows, which shed patches of color on the stone floor. One bright gleam of unsullied daylight came in at the open door, just within which an exquisite marble flower-girl held a basket on her head filled with a lavish luxuriance of crimson and purple flowers.

There were no signs of poverty about the place. It seemed rather as if the neglect were studied, as if, from some whim of the owner, Nature was left to have her own way in park and garden. And so indeed it was, nor would Harold Veriston suffer any modern addition to the old house.

"It will last my time," he had said, somewhat selfishly. "I love it as it is."

Having no son, the house and estate would pass to a nephew at his death, a fact which was a great grief to the old man.
Although his daughter had a separate fortune, and broad lands in another country, it went to Mr. Veriston's heart to let the Mere House—which had descended in unbroken line so long—pass to his sister's son, and to let the old name die, as it must, unless the heir should choose to adopt it.

Half a mile from the house, in the level park, the still waters of the mere lay placidly reflecting the blue sky. The long grass grew close to its brink, and irises, hyacinths, and harebells nodded gently to their images in the water. Here and there a mighty willow or ivied elm-bole mingled its shadow with theirs; here and there a miniature forest of reeds kept up a ceaseless whispering. Great patches of lily leaves rested on the water, their buds just appearing, and very soon a crown of white flowers would add to the beauty of the scene. Hosts of water-fowl had their nests here, breaking the brooding silence with their shrill cries, and making the water sparkle like diamonds as they stirred its serene surface. A white boat lay moored to a staple in a slight in-dentation of the shore.

It was beside this lone glassy spot that Argent Veriston loved best to linger. Seated on the fragrant grass, her back against the bole of a tree, the lake flashing at her feet, she would watch, lost in reverie, the white clouds sail slowly over the turquoise sky, or the swift flight of the swallows in mid-air.
Or she would be paddling in her light skiff among the lilies, or rocking idly in the quiet current all the long sultry afternoon, with an open book on her knee, and shaded by a large sunbrella from the overpowering glare.

Argent Veriston was a solitary, well-nigh a friendless girl. Her child-mother had died when Argent was only a few months old, father avoided and dreaded the society of his fellow-men. Almost think worse he was a shy, unsociable man, passionately fond of his home, his books, and his daughter, and caring for nothing beyond, save that valueless grave in Easthore churchyard, where the darling of his young manhood lay sleeping beneath the daisies. Although passionately fond of his daughter, he never dreamt of providing her with society suited to her age and position. He never for a moment imagined that she needed other companionship than his own, or that her life was lonely and isolated beyond the lot of women.
Nor had he any idea that she was, by reason of this lonely life, different from other girls; or that an existence so self-contained, so silent, and so nun like was a bad preparation for that conflict with the world which must in some shape or other take place sooner or later.

He dimly realized that his little girl had become a woman fair to look upon. Her quietness suited him. She never bored him, never broke in upon his dreamy imaginings with gay laughter or lively bewildering talk.
He had always a book by his side at breakfast and early dinner, the only two meals of which he partook. It was but seldom that more than a few words passed between father and daughter. As for Argent, she too dwelt in a world apart, content, like the legendary lady of mediæval ages, to spin her unsubstantial woof, shut up in a region of poetry and romance, seeing but shadows in her mirror, yet deeming them divinest reality. Sunk in its dreamy slumber her soul neither knew nor longed for anything beyond.

The only time when she was seen by ordinary folk was at the little Easthore Church, where she was a regular attendant.
She would sit at the extreme end, apart from the congregation, looking like the St.
Cecilia whose rapt face and golden hair gleamed in the stained-window above her head. No one accosted her either as she came or went. People stood aside respectfully to let her pass. She always had a sweet smile for them, yet somehow they never ventured to speak to her. The Vicar, a hard-working elderly man, something of an ascetic, was the only friend she had, the only visitor the Mere House welcomed within its gates. He loved the strange silent girl as a daughter; and she too had a deep reverence for him. Yet he found it impossible to interest or engage her sympathies in parish work. Her purse was at his disposal; but beyond that she was inaccessible.

It was drawing towards noon when Cecil Graham walked up the beechen avenue and by the sunny lawn to the door of Veriston Mere House. A white-haired servant, low-voiced and obsequious, admitted and conducted him through the dim flowerscented hall to a large cool room at the farther end. Its windows were shaded by the dense foliage of two chestnut-trees, through which scarcely a sunbeam could peep. The walls were dark, the floor darkly-stained, and a few skins were carelessly laid here and there. Nothing but a crystal vase, filled with fresh roses, broke the dusky hues of the apartment, the cool twilight of which was most refreshing after the heat and light without.

Presently Harold Veriston entered, a tall stooping figure in shabby clothes, with one of his darling books under his arm. He came forward with the hesitation of one unused to visitors. Cecil rose and grasped his lax hand warmly, introducing himself as a visitor in the neighbourhood, and a connection of Mr. Veriston, adding that his mother, who retained a lively recollection of her old friend, had urged this call, which he himself hoped would not be considered an intrusion.

The old gentleman smiled, vaguely murmuring something that might have been "very glad;" and Cecil, at his wits' end what to say next, took the book from his host's loose grasp. Fortunately it proved to be a classical work well known to him, and he at once entered into a discussion of the opinions of the author. Mr. Veriston thawed more and more with every word; and finally, as the gong sounded, he pressed the young man to remain for the meal.

While he wavered the door opened softly, and, looking up, Cecil saw a tall fair girl, apparently about twenty years old, advancing with a graceful listless movement across the floor. She wore a tightly-fitting dress of palest mauve colour, slashed with white, which trailed after her noiselessly, and she looked exactly like an old picture, or even more like a saint out of a painted window; there was something so wonderfully pure and unworldly in her aspect. As she drew nearer he saw that her face was fair and perfectly colourless, and the skin of satin-like texture, the scarlet lines of the lips alone breaking the clear pallor of the complexion. Her abundant hair of palest gold was parted on her forehead, Madonna fashion, and her features were regular as those of a Greek statue, and nearly as inanimate.
As she raised her eyes, which were large, soft, and blue, they seemed to flood his very soul with light; yet she scarcely glanced at him, hardly appearing aware of his presence.

On being introduced she made him a charming old-fashioned curtsey; then, with the same listless grace, she put her hand within her father's arm, murmuring that dinner was ready. All Cecil's hesitation about remaining vanished, and a strange new emotion thrilled him as he mentally exclaimed, "Eve!"

Feeling like an intruder into an enchanted castle, the glamour of which was already upon him, the young man followed them into another smaller sunnier chamber, where dinner was spread, admiring on the way the long heavy curls which fell behind to the girl's waist, and the pliant grace of her figure. He told himself that she was the very realisation of his own dear and dimly-imaged ideal, a lily among the thorns, "queen rose of the rose-bud garden of girls."

All through the long dinner he could not keep his eyes off the pale fair face. He felt that he was almost rude, yet he was certain that she was unconscious of his scrutiny.
The large blue eyes looked into his, whenever he met them, with a calm gaze that saw beyond and above him, with not the slightest recognition of his admiration; and no tint of colour rose in the smooth cheeks.
Perfectly self-possessed, almost portentously silent, she sat, with an old screen, covered with long silvery gold queries flowers, for background, which threw out the contour of her golden head and the harmonious hues of her dress.

When he ventured to address some commonplace remark to her, she answered as one roused from a dream—answered in tones of rare gentleness and sweetness, but in as few words as possible, and without a smile.
Never had the polished men of the world seen any one like her. She interested him in the same way as a new poem, but in a much more intense degree. His heart beat wildly when she spoke to him or looked at him. He was ashamed of himself, disgusted with what he considered his gaucherie, but he was powerless to resist the mighty sway of the passion which was luring him unresistingly, like the sirens' fateful singing, on to the rocks of destiny.

After dinner he expressed a wish to see the mere, and his host bade Argent escort him thither, while he himself retired awhile to his study.

The idea of the enchanted castle still possessed Cecil. It seemed to him as if the lovely silent girl by his side were some damsel held in thrall, and as if it was reserved for him by love and bravery to liberate her. Or as if some seductive spirit were about to conduct him to magic regions, where a thousand years would pass like an hour, and whence he would emerge, gray-headed and dumb, a miserable wanderer, only longing for death to restore him to the cruel angel of his dream. They were foolish fancies enough; yet he could not rid himself of them.

Silently the pair walked through the sunlit garden, through the dells and glades of the bowery park, where interlacing branches,

"Golden and green light slanting through Their heaven of many a tangled hue," let in sudden gleams of turquoise sky, where the hum of honey-freighted bees broke the delightful summer calm, while hundreds of coloured butterflies glanced hither and thither on their flower-like wings. At length they reached the mere, a still unrippled surface reflecting heaven's sunny blue as in a mirror, wherein lay the shadows of the trees, a white bud or two contrasting with the dead green of the floating leaves near the brink.

"It is beautiful!" exclaimed Cecil Graham at length, breaking with an effort the long silence.

"Yes," she said simply.

"Is this your boat?" he asked, emboldened by that half smile, and bending over the skiff.

"Yes," she said again.

"And do you often use it?"

"Very often. I like to be on the water; it is like floating in the sky."

"What a pity, though, your boat only holds one!"

"Why?" she asked, with perfect simplicity.

"Well, because if it had held two I could have rowed you on the mere;" and he laughed rather constrainedly.

"Oh, no!" she replied, shrinking. "I couldn't bear that. I prefer being alone."

The hot color mounted to the young man's face.

"Is my company so distasteful to you then, Miss Veriston? I can leave you now if you wish. I would not for worlds force my unwelcome presence on you."

"I don't mind here," she answered absently.

This speech was scarcely calculated to soothe his wounded pride, yet he was fain to be content. The glamour she had woven round him was too strong to be broken by a few cold words. What spell was there in that expressionless face, that sweet even voice to affect him so powerfully? Why should his heart beat so fast and his eyes, well used to control these of women, fall like a shy boy's before the dreamy light of hers? Why had his usual ease completely deserted him? He could not answer these questions. He knew only that a spell was upon him under which he was powerless.

The rest of that day passed like a dream.
It might have been five minutes, it might have been five years, during which he sat by the girl's side, on the fallen moss-grown trunk of an old oak-tree, watching the flattering butterflies and errant bees, and the shadows dipping deeply into the mere, while great waifs of honeysuckle perfume came ever and anon, borne by the fitful south wind.

Then they had sauntered back to the house, and had had tea in a small sunshiny chamber, through the open casement of which large sweet roses peeped shyly and green branches drifted, while one bright ray of sunshine crowned Argent's fair head as she poured out tea from an old-fashioned silver pot into cups of priceless china.

It seemed to Cecil afterwards, on cool reflection, as if he had sat at the polished table and simply stared at this young girl all the time, drinking in the witchery of her presence. He could not recollect that any one had uttered a word. He remembered seeing, as in a picture, a rose-framed window, the delicate tinting of the walls, the sombre furniture, the old man lying back in a large easy-chair, sipping his tea at intervals, and, clear as a cameo on this background, the golden head, the pale still face, and the large dreamy eyes of Argent Veriston. He knew that he had lingered with her in the garden at sunset, and that the glory of the evening and the odors of the flowers had roused him to poetry. He knew that he had talked and she had listened, that he had held her hand closely in his own, unrebuked, as he bade her good-bye in the shadowy twilit porch, where the marble flower-girl offered her unheeded blossoms. He knew that in the soft gloom she had looked like some spirit, and that he had won from her lips one smile, faint as the shadow of a smile, yet most sweet, the light of which had guided him through the dusky lanes back to the farm—glorified all his homely surroundings there, and had lulled him into happy impossible dreams.

"Come on home quicker'n lightnin'!" exclaimed a boy rushing up to an Estelline man who was watching a game of checkers in a Second Street drug store. "W-w-hy, what's the matter?" "The baby's fell down the well!" "Gosh! Fell clear down?" "You bet he has." "Get his head up out uv the water?" "Yes; but we can't get him out."
"Well, it's too thundering bad. You see I'm sort uv backin' this fellow on the game and he's just about got 'em where he wants 'em. Tell my wife to heave the rattle-box and the rubber ring down to the poor little fellow and sing to him kind o' soft like, and I'll be up just the minute this game is finished."

A Masterpiece of Fiction.

The following is the entire story—a masterpiece of French fiction:

M. de Makeshift when the file of soldiers left him, found himself in a dungeon. Not a ray of light penetrated the dismal abode, but De Makeshift's eyes gradually became so accustomed to the darkness that he saw a broken straw lying in a corner. He caught up the broken straw, uttered a stifled cry, and pressed it to his heaving bosom. Then, in his despair, he tickled his nose with the straw and laughed.

"Who laughs?" demanded a voice.

"I do."

"Who are you?"

"De Makeshift. Who are you?"

"The Abbe Se Long."

"Ah."

"Ah, hah."

"How long have you been here?"

"I have now, alas! no method of reckoning time, but I must have been here since sunrise this morning."

De Makeshift groaned. "Where are you now?" he asked.

"In a tunnel," the Abbe replied.

"A tunnel?"

"Yes."

"You make my heart beat. Where did you get the tunnel?"

"Made it."

"You astonish me."

"Ah."

"Ah, hah. Where did you get your shovel?"

"Had none."

"Then how did you make the tunnel?"

"Listen."

"I will."

"I scooped it out with a shirt button.
Have you a button on your shirt?"

"No."

"Alas! you are married."

"No."

"Then why have you no buttons?"

"A Chinaman does my washing."

"Ah."

"Ah, hah."

"Well, wait until I gouge my way through this rock, and I will lend you my button."

"Oh, thank you."

"Hist, the turnkey comes."

After a long silence, "Has the turnkey gone?" the Abbe asked.

"Not yet."

"Well, then, when he goes tell me and I will resume my work."

"Allright; he's gone now."

"I am at work."

Scoop, scoop, scoop. A long, bony arm was thrust into De Makeshift's cell. De Makeshift seized it and pressed the elbow to his lips. The Abbe stepped into the cell.
"We must escape from here," said the Abbe.

"How?"

"By scaling the walls."

"How can we scale them without a knife?"

"Wait."

The Abbe took off his shirt, tore it into shreds, and in a marvellous manner made a ladder.

"Get a couple of pins?"

"What do you want with them?"

"Make hooks to go on the end of the ladder."

"Here they are."

"Now," said the Abbe, bending the pins and fastening them on the ladder, "follow me."

They passed out into the courtyard. De Makeshift uttered an exclamation. He saw the man who had poisoned his grandfather.
The Abbe threw the ladder. The pins caught hold. The two men escaped.

MARKDALE, JULY 1, 1886.

IRISH LAKE PICNIC.

The tenth annual picnic of Priceville and Glenelg R. C. Churches was held last Wednesday, 23rd, and tho' the sky was overcast and rain threatned, keeping many from attending, there was a large gathering. Rev. Father Cassin of Mt. Foster, the former pastor, and Rev. Father Feeney were present, both of whom are very popular and sociable.

Ample provision was made for the wants of the inner man and served. The dancing platform was the centre of attraction, and was largely patronized. Parks Bros. string band, assisted by Mr. McDonald with Highland Pipes, produced excellent music which was highly appreciated even by those who did not join in "tripping the light fantastic toe."

The contest for a gold-headed cane between Dr. Landerkin, M. P., Dr. Jamieson and Mr. Jenkins of the Chronicle, was interesting but not exciting. Mr. Jenkins won the prize by about 140 votes. Dr. Jamieson was unable to attend owing to County Council duties, the council being in session.

Short addresses were given by Dr. Landerkin and Mr. Jenkins; the latter made a sad exhibition of want of common sense in the use of abusive personalities on the one hand, and an overdose of flattery on the other, causing many of his friends to turn away with disgust. Had Mr. Jenkins stopped at home he would certainly have been a stronger political candidate to-day.

The games were competed for and prizes awarded.

The financial result of the day was one of the most successful yet held which may be attributed largely to the energy and business tact of Rev. Father Feeney.

Union of the Churches.

At a meeting of Toronto Anglican Diocese, which concluded last week in Toronto, union with other Christian bodies was introduced by Rev. Dr. Ray in the following motion, seconded by Rev. John Langtry:

"That this synod instruct its delegate to the Provincial Synod respectfully to request that body to appoint a committee of representative men to confer with any similar committee appointed by other Christain bodies, for the purpose of ascertaining the possibility of union with such bodies, and, if such a union be found possible without sacrifice of essential Christian principles, to formulate a scheme for effecting such union."

The resolution was carried enthusiastically after being discussed, and the Bishop appointed Rev. Dr. Roy, Rev. Jno. Langtry, Canon O'Meara, Hon. James Patton and E. M. Chadwick to draw up a memorial to the Provincial Synod.

Among the Churches.

Last Sunday Rev. Mr. Ward, filled his appointments in full for the first since his recent accident, though not nearly at himself yet. He preached at Maxwell at 11, Eugenia at 3 and Markdale at 7 o'clock.

Rev. Mr. Wilson preached in Meaford while Rev. Mr. Coulter of Meaford filled the pulpit of the Presbyterian Church Markdale at 2.30. The audience being large and appreciative.

In the Methodist Church Mr. W. H. Irwin, son of the late Thos. Irwin Esq preached at 10.30 Mr. I. is a very promising young man. At 2.30 the quarterly review of the S.S. was largely attended and well conducted. Rev. Mr. Casson preached his farewell at 7 to over 600 of an audience; he gave an able and appropriate discourse which was listened to with great attention.

A Society of Larrikins has been formed in Markdale, the members of which are addicted to the use of slang, and vulgar words and actions. A few of our Markdale girls are in need of a similar training.

Dr. Washington

Throat and Lung Specialist, of Toronto and Halifax, will visit Markdale, Markdale House, on the 6th. Facts worth remembering, 1, Dr. Washington is the oldest and most experienced throat and lung surgeon in Canada; 2, he will make regular visits to Markdale; 3, belongs to no "bogus institution"; 4, consults, examines and treats patients personally; 5, is personally responsible to all; 6, treats patients by the month, and asks only reasonable monthly payments, in order that all may feel that security which is only reasonable in dealing with a comparative stranger; 7 asks the citizens to read the testimonals in the circulars and conclude for yourselves of the unparalled merits of the new method. Diseases treated can be seen in this circular and some of the many cures effected. Remember the old adage, "Procrastination is the thief of time." Come early, consultation free.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

WIARTON, June 28, 1886.

To the Editor of the Standard.

We the undersigned having noticed some gross misrepresentations in one of the local papers representing a case of Small Pox which appeared in Wiarton, beg leave to make the following statement: In the early part of the month, a young man by name Clark, affected with Small Pox, was shipped from a neighboring town to our village. Shortly after his arrival the local Board of health was apprised of the nature of the disease by the attending Physician. The affected man died a few days after his arrival, Every possible percautions was taken, both before and after his death, to prevent the spread of the malady, and so thoroughly were those precausions carried out, that we have not had another case in our village, and as the time for the developement of the disease has more than lapsed, we are warranted in offiicially stating that the village is entirely free from it, and there is not to our knowledge any case or cases of Small Pox either in our village or within a radius of twenty miles.

Osprey.

(From our Osprey correspondent.)

Times are rather dull in Feversham at present.

The cheese factory is closed this summer, the cows having struck for higher prices.

Mr. Woods, shoemaker, is erecting a comfortable frame dwelling, which will soon be completed.

As R. T. McGirr and Ira H. Perigoe were returning from Maxwell on Tuesday evening, their buggy collided with Robertson Bros. buggy, who were returning from Feversham. Both buggies were upset, scattering the occupants in different directions. All escaped with a shaking up except Mr. McGirr, who was badly stunned and had one of his arms broken below the elbow. Dr. Kerr was called and set the bone, and he is now doing well. The buggies were rather sorry looking spectacles. This should be a warning to those who are always driving at such a break-neck gait, they will hit some times.

The Presbyterians of Maxwell, Feversham, and McIntyre intend holding a union picnic on July 1st, in Kinner's grove, east of Maxwell, where all will be welcome.

Mr. DeArgent will remain in Osprey another year, his labors having been approved of by the General Assembly, which he attended in Hamilton last week. He is licensed by that body to baptise, marry and administer the sacrament. Mr. DeArgent is an able speaker and an earnest worker, and his labors are highly appreciated by the people of Osprey.

Mr. E. Hambly, 10th line, is away on a visit to old Ireland.

Mr. Moore, 12th line, raised a fine frame barn 40x60 last week, and D. Medill is expected to do the same shortly.

The late rains have greatly improved the appearance of the crops.

Mrs. Williams, [illegible] was fined $50 and costs the other day last week, for selling liquor without a license.

Euphrasia Council.

The Council met as a Court of Revision on June 15th, 1886. Members all present.

John Shaw's assessment confirmed.

Corrections were made in the description of property assessed to Wm. Wiley and John Wiley

John W. Curry assessed for N. E. part of lot 19, con. 7, (15 acres) at a valuation of $300, said land taken from non-resident roll.

The assessment of John Curtis on N. E. ¾ of lot 19, concession 4, confirmed.

On motion of Messrs. Erskine and Fawcett, the roll was then confirmed and the clerk ordered to certify to the same, as required by statute.

The court arose.

The council arose at two o'clock.

Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed.

By-laws Nos. 870 and 871 carried through the different stages and passed.

The Reeve and Mr. Boyd were appointed to take action in reference to an application made for the building of a bridge on the 9th line, at lot No. 2.

Mr. Boyd was instructed to get repairs made on 7th line, at lot 29.

William McConnel, pathmaster, was authorized to expend $20 in gravelling the 4th line in his road division.

George Vickers, pathmaster, was authorized to expend $15 on 27 and 28 sideroad, con. 4.

Twenty five dollars was granted to be expended on hill of townline of Euphrasia and Collingwood, at lot 19, on condition that Collingwood council expend an equal amount at that place.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the treasurer to pay as follows: Thos. Abercrombie, $5, gravel for road; R. Carruthers, $5, repairs on road; Yeoman's & Little, $50, payment on hall; J. R. Fawcett, $9, building culvert and furnishing timber; Elijah Gilbert, $8.50, building culvert; Jos. Howe, $6.70, road work at lot 1, con. 5.

On motion being made and seconded, the council adjourned until Friday, July 2d.

The County Council met on Monday last. Victor Lang Esq., Warden, in the chair. The Warden read a number of communications, which were refered to the respective committees, and the council adjourned till 2 p. m. Tuesday.

TUESDAY.

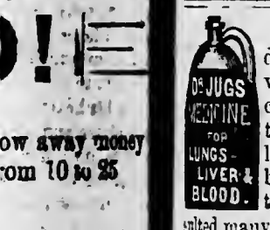
The Warden read petitions from N.B.Ashler relative to Court House ventilation; from Reeve of Proton asked for incorporation of Bendall; from H. Ransford with reference to a standard for salt barrels; from Reeve of Artemesia and Sullivan with reference to school sections; a communication from Alex. Shaw, Q.C., relative to bridge on County line and from John Harkness relative to Court House contract; also the report of Wool Inspector for South Grey, accompanied by his resignation.

Mr. Rorke presented report of Finance Committee, which after being considered in Committee of the whole, was referred back for amendment.

By-law 345, to assess the different municipalities for an equivalent to the Legislative school grant, was introduced and passed through various stages.

Council adjourned till 2 p. m. on Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY.



The warden read several petitions, which were referred to committees.

Mr. Rorke presented report of Finance Committee, which was adopted. The report recommended payment of several accounts; also that Wm Armstrong, Clerk of the Peace be recommended to the Ontario Government as Auditor under the Act of last session for the speedly auditing of Criminal Justice accounts, and that instead of fees, he be paid a salary of $1000 as clerk of the Peace and such Auditor, if he will accept the same.

Mr. Read presented reported of Education Committee, which was adopted. The report made provision for arbitration as to school sections in Holland and Sullivan and Artemesia. It also accepted the resignation of Mr. Ferguson as Inspector of South Grey, but asked him to continue to discharge the duties till the end of the year.

Mr. Frost read report of Committee on Memorals, on which a lengthy debate took place in Committee of the whole. The report recommended a discriminating tariff on auctioneers, $12 for residents of country, and $25 for out-siders. With reference to incorporation of Dundalk it recommended that a census be taken with a view of granting it. It was recommended to petition the Dominion Parliament to fix a standard barrel of salt at 280 lbs., the weight to be stamped on the barrel. The Commisioners of Agriculture having called attention to the fact that the County Council can nominate a student to the Agricultural College, the committee recommended that the fact be advertised in a certain paper, asking applications to be sent in. This gave rise to a discussion, occupying about an hour, the members making all sorts of suggestions. It was finally decided to put the advertisement in the Times, Advertiser and Ayton Farmer. The report was then adopted.

Council adjourned till 2 p. m. Thursday.

In January 1883, when in Brandon, Manitoba, I contracted a severe cold that settled on my lungs, causing bronchitis and consolidation of the upper portion of both lungs. I endured great pain and became very weak, and though I tried various medicines, and consulted many eminent physicians in Manitoba, United States, and America, gradually grew worse. In September, 1883, was induced to try the Pacific coast, where I spent six months in Los Angelos, Cal., San Jose, Montery, and other noted healthy resorts, but deriving no benifit, returned to Ontario worse than when left, spent nearly $2,000 in search of health, and began to think it was useless to try anything more, when, W. H. Magee of the G. T. R. induced me to try Dr. Jug's Medicine and Pills. After using two bottles my appetite began to return, also strength and weight, and I am now as well as ever. I believe Dr. Jug's Medicine saved my life.

MONEY TO LOAN.

OUR YOUNG FOLKS.

How Johnny Helped.

"Dear me! dear me!" said Johnny's mother, in a tone of great dismay. "I do believe that's old Mrs. Braud coming up the road. Look out and see, Johnny."

"Yes it is," said Johnny.

"And she always stays to tea. I don't say but I'm glad to have her, but somehow my work's all behind to day—and now I can't get the baby to sleep. And my last jar of raspberry jam's been working so it isn't fit to eat, and I haven't a speck of fruit for tea.

Johnny wanted to ask what kind of work raspberry jam was in the habit of doing, but knew it was no time for questions when his mother was so much worried. He quickly said,—

"Put baby in his buggy, mamma, and I'll take him out in the garden. And don't you think I could find enough strawberries for tea, if I look hard?"

"You're a dear, helpful little fellow! Then I can put off these other things, and have a nice visit with the old lady. No, I'm sure there are not enough strawberries ripe."

"But if there were just a few, you could flatten 'em out in the glass dish so they'd look like a good many; and when you said, 'Have some strawberries, Johnnie?' I'd say 'No, I thank you, mamma,' just as sober; and then they'd go round, you see, mamma."

Johnny thought his plan very clever indeed, but mamma only laughed and shook her head, as Johnny drew baby out of the back door, just as Mrs. Braud slowly came in at the front one.

"I'll see, anyhow," said Johnny to himself, for he had a very tender feeling for his mother's small troubles. "Now, Harry, you sit still, while I get mamma some berries."

Harry chatted in very crooked English to some dandelions and buttercups, while Johnny peeped among the strawberry vines, greatly delighted at seen finding some of the red fruit.

"I thought so," he said to himself, in great satisfaction; "I thought we hadn't had these two hot days for nothing."

He ran softly into the house to get a pail without mamma knowing, and then eagerly bent over the bed, wondering all the time why raspberry jam had any work to do, and if it worked as hard as his mother did. And if, as the sun was hot and his back ached with stooping, it worked as hard as he was working to get these strawberries.

But Johnny was not afraid of work, and laughed merrily to his small self as one after another the berries seemed to smile out at him as he spied them in their hiding-places under the green leaves.

Into the pail they went, and it filled up so fast that he forget all about the hard work and the raspberry jam in thinking how glad mamma would be.

And Harry really must have had some kind of an idea of how important those strawberries were, for the darling turned his curly little head over and went to sleep just as Johnny was ready to take the hulls off them.

He got the glass dish and carried them in just as mamma was setting a dish of honey on the table and thinking now trying it was to have no other sauce, when all the neighborhood had honey, and Mrs. Brand was probably tired of the sight of it.

Mamma was just as much surprised and delighted as he expected her to be.

"O you little darling!" she said, "you are the comfort of my life."

And when the berries were helped, Johnny, with a very large smile on his face, which only mamma understood, said,—

"Yes, if you please, ma'am."

For there were plenty to go round.

A Cape Breton Parson.

He was a tall, angular parson o the old severe Presbyterian type. As the local idiom has it, "You would know by his English that he had the Gaelic." He was preaching in a brother parson's pulpit to a congregation who were strangers to him. Descanting on the lamb as a type of gentleness, meekness, etc., he said:

"The lamb is quaite and kind. The lamb is not like the ither beasts, the lion and the tiger and the wolf. Ye will not be runnin' away from the lamb. No. The lamb is kaind; the lamb will not eat ye, whativer.

"And there is food in the lamb, too. Oh yes, you will be killin' the lamb and the sheep when the cold weather will come in in the winter. You will be wantin' some good streng feed in the winter, and it is then you will be killin' the lamb.

"And there is clothing in the lamb—he is good for the clothing. You will tek the wool off him, and you will mek clothing for yourselves. And how would you and I look without clothing?" etc.

At the close of the exercises he gave out the following very peculiar notice, to explain which I must state that ravages had been made among the Presbyterian flock by the influence of a divine of a different persuasion: "And there will most likely be a family from X. that will be baptized here after meeting on Friday night, but"—here he leaned forward, and added, in a loud stage-whisper—"ye'll no be saying a word about it, dear brethren, as I do not think they want it known."

Wholesale Slaughter for Fashion's Freaks.

How enormous has been the slaughter of innocent birds for the purpose of beautifying ugly and heartless women is shewn by these statistics: England imports from India, Africa and America $10,000,000 worth of feathers and birds every years. One and a half million exotic birds, including 250,000 humming birds are annually imported to France and England. The catalogue figures alone do not imply slaughter of the birds for the sake of a fashion which fortunately is now being frowned on by the more sensible women.

Plain.

A farmer's wife living up among the New England hills had a longing all her life to see a hippopotamus. A circus and menagerie visited Cranberryport town, and she hurried there with her husband, eagerly looking over the rough roads. When she stood in front of the cage where the huge beast was confidently said the showman, "My! ain't he plain?"

A SOLDIER OF LUCKNOW

Some Stirring Reminiscences of The Indian Mutiny.

On the 8th of June, 1857, twenty-nine years ago, just as England had emerged successful from the Crimean war, the great Indian mutiny broke out. The British army in India had been severely weakened in order to maintain the struggle with Russia, and consequently at the commencement of the breakout the rebels had things all their own way. As soon, however, as the news of the revolt of the native army reached England, peace having been declared with Russia, regiment after regiment was hurried from Sebastopol to the scene of the uprising.

The story of how the mutiny was quelled is a matter of history, but as the years roll by the veterans who stormed Delhi, and to the relief of Lucknow are becoming fewer and fewer.

One of those who possesses the medal for the rebellion, with clasp, for Delhi and Lucknow, is Mr. William Kennedy, a caretaker at the Parliament Building in Toronto. In conversation with Mr. Kennedy recently a Globe reporter was given some interesting information about the great mutiny.

W. KENNEDY, OF KINCORA.

"I am W. Kennedy, of Kincora," said the veteran, "and I was born in the town of Innes, county, of Clare, Ireland. I will be 54 years of age next December. On the 26th of November 1848, I enlisted in the 75th Regiment, now known as the First Battalion Gordon Highlanders. I served with this corps all through the mutiny, and finally left the service on the 26th of October, 1860, having been allowed a year for Lucknow. I spent ten years altogether in India."

"You must have seen some hot work there, Mr. Kennedy."

"Indeed I did, but Delhi was worse than Lucknow. I landed in India on the 5th of November, 1850, and so saw the mutiny from the very commencement. The first battle was at

BUDGHELIE A'SURRIE,

June, 8th, 1857. When I was in India there was not a railway or a telegraph pole in the country.

"At Delhi the fighting lasted from the 4th to the 20th of September. I was colour sergeant under General Nicholson there at the storming of the Moore battery. General Nicholson was killed and when he was shot he put his arm around my neck. He was a fine soldier, and the whitest man that ever stood on two feet. Just before the General was shot he was told that his brother, Captain Nicholson, had lost an arm. 'Let him go on and fight with the other,' he cried. At

THE STORMING OF DELHI

we lost 1,462 men inside an hour—killed mind you. I was field sergeant-major under Sir Colin Campbell at the relief of Lucknow. I served under Sir James Outram at the occupation of Allumbugh while Sir Colin went to relieve Cawnpore. The first time that we went to Cawnpore I was there, and was among the first that reached the wells where the bodies had been thrown. It was a terrible night. Do you know when we were marching to the relief of Lucknow? One pound of wheat a day, and, grind it yourself? Of course we had nothing to grind it with, and we used to bruise it between two stones as well as we could. One time I managed to secure a sack of split peas, but I had to keep it hid in a hole in the ground, inside my tent."

WHAT OUR RATIONS CONSISTED OF

"Did you suffer much with the marching?"

"I never had corns on my feet in my life, and the climate always agreed with me; but of course we had terribly severe work. My last campaign was in Central India, where I served under Major Brooks, and was present at the

SECOND BATTLE OF AGRA,

on the 8th of October, 1858. I remember marching these 36 miles with nothing to eat, then fighting, and then doing another 36 miles. We were really not fighting natives, they were trained soldiers and many of them had their breasts covered with medals won in the English service. I remember one time in Central India, the 3rd Gwalior Cavalry charged the 9th Lancers three times, and three times they formed right under our guns, but we dared not fire on them because we would hit our own men."

"Did the 9th break the natives up badly?"

"Oh, they were brave fellows, and they told us that they were too. Why, that time they pitched their pistols in our faces after they had fired them, and as I told you, we dared not pull a trigger."

FIGHTING FOR THEIR COUNTRY

"Did you ever have cholera, Mr. Kennedy?"

"I did. Thirteen of us went to the hospital with it, and I was the only one that came out."

"Were there many British troops at the relief of Lucknow?"

"There were 123,000 men, and not more than 10,000 of these were natives. Sir Colin reviewed us. He commenced with Captain Peck's battery, and it was seven o'clock at night before he reached the Light Division, where my regiment was. At first he could not make out whether we were

WHITE MEN OR NOT,

for we were as dirty as Murphy's pig."

"You did not not get married until after you left the army, Mr. Kennedy?"

"No. I married in Quebec 24 years ago, and I have been in the Parliament Buildings here since 1862. I have a family of five daughters and one son."

"Discipline was severe in the army in your time, was it not?"

"Indeed it was. I have seen any number of men flogged and three shot. One man was shot for striking the doctor, another for and another for something else. Ever since then it had been the rule in the army that when a man is brought before the Colonel his hat is removed first."

THROWING HIS HAT AT THE COLONEL,

"What do you think of flogging?"

"A man will never do any good afterwards, although his comrades will not annoy him about it. Lord Gough was a very severe commander. It was under him that the men I mentioned were shot."

Mr. Kennedy is a man of medium height and very strongly built. He has regular features, and shaves almost all his face according to the military regulations. He has always enjoyed the best of health, and declares that he has never known a day's sickness while residing in the old Parliament Buildings. In spite of all that he has gone through, Mr. Kennedy is as active as many much younger men, and bids fair to see a green old age.

Dangers of the Deep.

A letter received in New Bedford some time in October last reported that four men had been lost by the whaling bark Greyhound, two boats being capsized by a whale. Capt. Joseph Silva, who has just arrived home, tells the following story of the accident:

"Sept. 4 the vessel was between Royal and St. George, and that day we landed the second mate at St. George to visit his family. The next day, a little after 6 o'clock in the evening, a large whale was raised, and two boats were manned, I having charge of one of them and the third mate in charge of the other. It was coming on dark, but the whale came up and we gave chase, the third mate striking him. His boat was immediately capsized by the whale and the men clung on to the sides.

"I started to pick up the crew, and saw the whale come up a short distance from my boat. He laid so still that I concluded I would try and get a bomb into him and kill him. On coming up my boat was also stove and capsized. I expected a boat from the ship, as she had one on the crane. The vessel was only about two miles away. When it got late, and we saw no signs of any boat from the ship, the men on the third mate's capsized boat all swam over to my boat, and then there were twelve of us clinging to one boat. It was hard and tiresome work for us to cling to her, as there was a strong current, and the boat kept rolling over and over. At about 11 o'clock several of the men were completely exhausted and thoroughly frightened. An hour afterward one of the men had to give in, and dropped away and was drowned. His name was Antone Domingo. Two other sailors also dropped off in about three-quarters of an hour. Antone Frates, my boat steerer, held out until 6 o'clock, and then let go and was drowned.

"At daybreak the vessel was about a mile an a half off, and we were discovered and picked up at about 7 o'clock. There were seven of us left, and four of them were frothing at the mouth when saved."

MAN KILLED AT WILLIAMS'

Circumstantial Evidence May be Very Strong and all Wrong.

The criminal who argues that he is safe because no one saw him commit the crime forgets that circumstantial evidence is a Nemesis which has pursued its thousands to the prison and the gallows. Had the Preller case in St. Louis been one in which men could testify that they saw the killing done, the accused would have died out in a week. It depended upon circumstantial evidence alone, and as link after link has been picked up to make a complete chain the whole country has been interested. The records of crime show that where circumstantial evidence is solely depended on, can be made against an entirely innocent man. That this has been done time after time we all know, though in the great majority of cases the real criminal gets his just deserts.

Some forty years ago there lived in Ontario a farmer named Threep, who was a widower, with a daughter 15 years old. The man had a good reputation, and his daughter was a great favorite in the neighborhood. For some time previous to the occurance which caused his arrest Threep had not been on good terms with a farmer named McWilliams, living about a mile away, on account of damage committed by cattle belonging to the latter. There had been a law suit, and the two men had once come to blows, and Threep had said in the presence of witnesses that he would like to put a bullet into McWilliams. One day about noon the cattle broke into the field again, and the daughter notified her father. Threep was terribly enraged, and, as he started to drive them out, he took his rifle along. The back end of the field bordered on a wood, and the daughter saw her father disappear among the trees after the running cattle. Soon thereafter she heard a shot, and was alarmed for fear that her father had carried out his threat.

In about half an hour Threep came home, pale, agitated, put up his gun, and sat down to his dinner without a word. The girl was crying, but he didn't seem to notice it. After the meal was eaten he hitched up a horse to the buggy and drove away, saying that he might not be back before sundown. He returned at 7 o'clock, and the daughter noticed that he was in much better humor. Neither referred to the affair of the cattle, and the evening passed off pleasantly. Two days later, Threep meanwhile pursuing his labors around home, the Sheriff appeared and arrested him. The farmer was at supper when the officer entered, and it was afterward put in evidence that before the errand of the officer was made known. When told to consider himself a prisoner he asked what was the charge, and the Sheriff replied:

"For the murder of Henry McWilliams. His body was found in the woods this afternoon."

Threop was terribly agitated, but protested his innocence, saying he had not seen the man for a week. As he was taken away he whispered to his child, who was clinging to him:

"Say nothing of my chasing the cattle out."

This was overheard by the Sheriff, and at the proper time was used, to the prisoner's confusion. The daughter was convinced of her father's guilt from the first. The blundering Sheriff did not take away the rifle, and he had no sooner departed than the girl inspected it, to find that it had been recently discharged. In hopes to exculpate her father, she set about and cleaned and loaded the gun. In the course of a few hours she was put under restraint and interrogated. Believing that anything she could say in regard to the affair would react on her father, she determined on silence, and not one word could be got from her as to the events of the past three days. Threop vigorously denied the killing, but was obstinately silent to all other questions. The prosecution then began to work up its case of circumstantial evidence, and was fortunate from the start. A person came forward who saw Threop leave the house, gun in hand, to chase the cattle. Two persons affirmed that they heard the report of a rifle. Several people had heard Threop make threats. The cleaning of the rifle was charged to Threop, and made to look ugly against him. The silence of himself and daughter was proof sufficient

BITTER SWEET.

Miss Montague Toylcure (to Miss Capulet Smythe): I WISH TO INTRODUCE TO YOU MR. NAT IT, RATHER FRIEND, WHO THERE IS YOU ARE SO AWFULLY HANDSOME. You know or me, don't you? He is very amusing and a quick-witted fellow AS AFFORD MEAT SOME. DON'T FAIL TO GIVE US A CALL.

May 3rd, 1880.

Mrs. Williams affirmed that her husband had left the house with his rifle to shoot squirrels in the woods, and she had not seen him alive again. He had been shot through the head. What had become of his rifle? The prosecution intimated a charge Threop with hiding it. The defence had no theory about it, thought they could ask why the body had not been found well. Any theory of suicide was out of question in the face of the circumstances.

The case was called with a strong prejudice against the prisoner. The prosecution put in all its evidence, circumstantial and otherwise, and it SEEMED TO EVERY ONE A CLEAR CASE.

Before the defence opened an event occurred which had a most important bearing. A stranger was arrested in a town several miles away while trying to dispose of articles with McWilliams's name engraved on them. A silver plate in the stock. He was brought to the county seat at once, and when the right pressure was brought to bear on him he made a confession. He was a wandering clock tinker. He had been drunk for two or three days before the shooting and the rifle had been lost or stolen. Early on the morning of the shooting he stole a couple of hens from Threop, and went into the woods and made a fire and roasted one for his breakfast. He was asleep when McWilliams stumbled upon him. Both men were at hand that he was a thief, and the farmer ordered him to pick up and leave. The tinker refused, and hot words passed. McWilliams threatened him with the gun, and he closed in to wrest it from him. In the struggle the weapon was discharged, and the farmer was killed. At the same instant another shot was fired, but the tinker did not see Threop. He at first threw down the rifle and ran away, but afterwards returned for the gun, thinking to sell it and procure another outfit.

There could be no doubt of the truth of the tinker's story, and Threop was discharged from custody and the other party put on trial. He pleaded guilty, but judge and jury accepted his version of the shooting, and he received a comparatively short sentence. But for his action in carrying away the gun he would probably have been set at liberty.

PERPETUAL MOTION.

An Invented Wheelbarrow Made to Run on a Tread-Mill.

A wonderful discovery was made recently by Mr. Robt. Reeves, of Eganville, County of Renfrew, which will tend to revolutionize the locomotion of machinery in the near future. The discovery was made by throwing a ploughpoint on to the treadboard of a dogchurn, the instant the point touched the board it revolved one half turn. Mr. Reeves could see "perpetual motion" at once. The tread-board of the churn required very little weight on the side to set in motion. The discoverer thereupon obtained a wheelbarrow and placed the wheel upon the side of the board and secured the handles firmly to a beam in the machinery hall. Everything ready the breaks were loosened and the board began to revolve, the wheel of the barrow travelling up hill, serving the same purpose as the tread of a dog. We understand word was immediately sent to Ottawa to secure a patent. There is a standing bounty of $500,000 offered by Queen Victoria to the discoverer of perpetual motion, and steps will be taken to secure this premium. The machine can be seen in motion by all who wish to call. We congratulate Mr. R. on his discovery, and trust he will be fortunate enough to secure this handsome bounty.

Too Late.

With many sad repentant tears,
I look back o'er the wasted years
Which, like a desert drear as night,
Lies stretched before my fancy's sight.
And wish with bitterness and pain,
That I could have them back again.

Though much of misery and woe
Has marked my journey here below,
Yet I would gladly turn me back
Across the rough, storm-beaten track,
And pray that God would me befriend!
That I my broken life might mend.

I might—who knows in days of old!
Have cleaned the dross from out the gold;
Have separated chaff from wheat,
And 'scaped the turmoil and the heat
Of passion, sorrow, hate and strife,
And lived a holier, better life.

I might have tasted all the good
That falls to happy womanhood;
I might—but that has passed away
And I, a mourner old and grey,
Sit in life's twilight all alone
And weep for joys I might have known.

What could I do, if God should give Another life for me to live!
Could I blot out the pain, the tears,
The disappointments, woes and fears,
And walk dry shod 'midst all the strife
That swells the waves of human life!

Ah, no! Perchance it may be well,
That I the story thus must tell;
Perchance the broken threads will be United in eternity,
And I may find beyond the tide
The joys that earth to me denied.

Very properly the pitcher of a base ball club is generally the grower.

HOUSEHOLD.

Summer Breakfasts.

Blights are a nuisance in these warm days. Potatoes are no longer the balls of whiteness they used to be in the spring, and there is little one can do with them in a plain state. Uhlma has given us many delicious methods of cooking potatoes that it seems a difficult matter to find anything new. Still, we have two or three recipes of "warming over" that may be new to some of our readers. Cut cold boiled or steamed potatoes in thick slices (about a quarter of an inch thick,) and cut these in small squares. To about a pint allow half a cup of milk, a tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of cream, one-fourth teaspoonful of salt, and a tablespoonful of flour. Put the milk in a saucepan and when scalding hot stir in the flour mixed to a smooth paste with milk and water, stir until it thickens then add the butter, salt, and potatoes. Simmer gently about ten minutes, stir in the cream, let it just boil up once and pour it into a warm dish. Of course the quantity of salt is to be varied at pleasure, tastes differing so widely in respect to it. If cream is not plenty use milk instead. These potatoes are nice to serve with cold meats.

Another way we like very much is to cut up the potatoes, not very fine, and for each cupful of the potato put one-half cup of milk and two tablespoonfuls of butter into a saucepan or frying-pan. When it boils add a generous pinch of salt and stir in the potatoes. Stir gently until well heated through and turn into a warm dish. Water may be used instead of the milk. These dishes have a rich, buttery flavor, without the greasy taste meat warmed-over potatoes have.

Mashed potatoes may be made into a delicate and attractive-looking dish as follows: Boil and mash the potatoes—if you prefer use a silver fork to mash them with and will never use anything else—and add butter, salt, and milk as usual. Then to a pint of the mashed potato allow one beaten egg and, if you have it, one or two tablespoonfuls of cream. Butter-roll pans, or scallop pans, which are much prettier, or a baking dish is preferred. Put the potato in, rounding up nicely browned. If gem or roll pans are used they should be well heated before being buttered. The potato will come out beautifully browned all over if the oven is right.

Spiced Rhubarb.

Some one asks for a recipe for spiced rhubarb, and now that it is in season others who are fond of spiced relishes may wish to prepare some to serve with meats during early summer, when it is not always easy to procure fruits, etc. Peel and cut the rhubarb and weigh it. Put it in a porcelain kettle and place where it will heat very gradually, until the juice flows freely. No water should be added. Then bring to a boil and boil on the stove and boil gently for half an hour. Dip out about half the juice into a dish (not tin) which should be kept hot. Now add to the cooked fruit one-half pound of sugar for each pound allow one heaping teaspoonful of cloves and two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon. Stir well, and if you like it stronger add more spice, but this amount makes it sufficiently spicy for most tastes. If it should be too thick, reduce with a little of the warm juice; the mixture should not be quite so thick as jam. Simmer for ten minutes and pour into glass fruit jars. Now on the tops closely, and when cool wrap each jar in thick paper and keep in a cool, dry place,

Hints.

A decided improvement in the eating-bib for children is made of a towel. It is better to have the towel white. Hollow out the neck before binding and bind with white tape.

A lady writes that to kill insects she uses a teaspoonful of kerosene to a gallon of water and sprinkles it on the plants with a whisk-broom. It destroys green flies, cucumber worms, and other pests, and was used without injury on fuchias, geraniums, calla, and other plants. But it must be used with care.

If your dining-room has a window commanding a pretty view, dress the table in front of that rather than in the centre of the room, and give the seats commanding it to your guests, or to those who can appreciate such things.

Handsome pillow-shams can be made by using eight medium-sized, hem-stitched handkerchiefs, four for each sham. Trim them by inserting either lace or fine embroidery so that the insertion forms a cross in the middle. Edge with lace or embroidery, and make up over bright-colored cambric.

Stains may be removed even from the most delicately colored kid gloves, without injury, by suspending them for a day in an atmosphere of ammonia. Provide a tall glass cylinder, in the bottom of which place some aqua ammonia. Be careful to remove from the sides of the jar any ammonia that may be spattered upon them. Suspend the gloves to the stopper in the jar. They must not come in contact with the liquid.

Travelling on the Mississippi.

"Do you not like steamboat travelling on the Mississippi?" was asked of an Englishwoman.

"Naw, cawn't sol that I do. Do you know that as I came down I came in cawntact with such a beastly and 'orrid man from Arkansaw. One night during a storm great excitement prevailed, and it was thought the 'orrid old boat was sinking. There was no life preserver in my state-room, so in frenzy I hurried to the state-room occupied by the Arkansaw man, knocked on the door and called; "Oh, for 'eaven's sake 'and me a life preserver!' 'All right,' said 'e, and the next moment 'e opened the door, shoved out a black bottle and said; "'Ere you are; drink 'earty.' I halmost fainted, for I never knew before that a bottle was a life preserver, don't you knaw. Oh 'e was such an 'orrid man."

"What did you do?"

"Don't you knaw that I was so frightened that I turned up the bottle 'Dead I did, and the 'orrid man 'ad the impudence to say, "Touch 'er light, madam.' Naw, I don't sol that I like travelling on that horrid river."

PEOPLE.

Mr. John G. Whittier writes to an inquirer that 1807 is the year of his birth and not the following year, as one literary authority gives it.

Women sometimes attain a great age in Russia. A Mlle. Scenitzki died in the workhouse at St. Petersburg the other day at the age of 122 years. In the same institution another woman named Irene Nicolaieff has reached the age of 110 years.

Gen. Boulanger, the French War Minister, is said to be disgusted at the appearance of the bearded soldiers who have taken advantage of the permission he gave them to let their beards grow. As he wears a full beard himself he could not revoke the permit without being compelled to sacrifice his own facial appendage.

Charles Johnnycake, chief of the Delaware Indians in Indian Territory, is on his way to Washington to hold a conference with the "Great Father." He is 72 years of age and has presided over the Delawares for forty years. What is the value of a flea? Accordingto Prof. Erbini, who owns those marvelous insects now performing at the Exchange Rooms in London, the highly trained Russian "pulex irritans" is valued at $125—at least, that is the sum offered by the Professor for the recovery of a missing member of his troupe that plays "leading business."

The original manuscript of the Wacht am Rein has just been presented to the Emperor William by the German Ambassador in Switzerland. The composer, Max Schneckenberger, who published the song in 1840, died about twenty years ago at a village near Berne, and the manuscript was recently put up for sale by his heirs. It appears that an American offered a higher price than the Ambassador, but patriotism won the day, and the manuscript, which is written on the back of several business letters, having been purchased for $5,000, is now in the possession of the old Emperor.

Prince Baldwin, eldest son of the Count of Flanders, has now been definitely acknowledged as next heir to the crown of Belgium, and although only 17 years old takes precedence of his father and mother on all official occasions. He has just been appointed sub-lieutenant in the First Grenadier Regiment, and has taken the usual oath of allegiance. The reports as to the engagements between the eldest son of the Prince of Wales and the second daughter of the King of the Belgians are without foundation, for according to the terms of the British constitution, no British Prince is allowed, under the pain of forfeiture of all his rights and privileges, to marry a Princess of Catholic birth.

Saving the Lawyers.

"The first thing we do, let's kill all the lawyers." This is rather a blood-thirsty proposition, which we modify by offering to cure this worthy class of people. Most of them suffer (in common with nearly all others of sedentary habits), from the injurious effects of dyspepsia, indigestion, piles, loss of appetite, and other ailments caused by a constipated habit of the body. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets" eradicate all these disorders in promptly removing the cause thereof, and induce a rare degree of comfort and health.

Victory At Last.

Consumption, the greatest curse of the age, the destroyer of thousands of our brightest and best, is conquered. It is no longer incurable. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" is a certain remedy for this disease if taken in time. All scrofulous diseases—consumption is a scrofulous affection of the lungs—can be cured by it. Its effects in diseases of the throat and lungs are little less than miraculous. All druggists have it.

MR. & MRS Melton and Miss Maggie Wright of Toronto, are spending their holidays with friends in this locality.

MR. C D Empey, of London, "agent for horse millinery and muel jewellery," was here last week. Charlie is looking well.

ANY quantity of tanbark taken at any station on the T. G. & B. in exchange for boots and shoes. W. McLeod. Markdale.

12th July.—Good dinner for three or four hundred at S. Morrow's Markdale, in a shed for the purpose adjoining his store.

EXTENSIVE preperations continue to be made on all sides in Markdale for the crowd on the 12th, and abundant provisions will be the result.

W. H. and Robt. Irwin, sons of late Thos. Irwin Esq., left last week for their work, being stationed at Maple and Pittsburg, Ont., respectively.

REAL ESTATE is unsettled and very fluctuating, causing serious annoyance to merchants, and even housekeepers, keeping them constantly dusting.

C. H. NEWELL successor to Mr Hall, is now at the helm of the Dundalk Herald. Welcome brother. May our relationship be as harmonious as that of your predecessor.

FOR SALE.—Village lot in business portion of Markdale, next lot to the Markdale House, comfortable house. Terms easy, apply to this office or to J. G. Irving, Singer Office Guelph.

BOATING.—Steam yacht Fairy Queen is now in running order, and will run excursion and picnic parties on "Bell's Lake" during the season. For further particulars apply to T. L. Moffat, Sr., Markdale.

Statute labor is well through; pathmasters would do well to reserve sufficient time to have their respective divisions well cleared of the small rolling stone, which are a great inconvenience in travelling.

AT a recent meeting of the band it was resolved: "That an apology be extended Christ Church congregation, through the medium of the STANDARD, for being absent from their garden party on the evening of 1st July."

MOFFAT Bros of this village having fitted up their steam yacht on Bell's Lake, and have it in fine shape. This is now a desirable point for pic-nic parties where a pleasant sail can be had and tea made on board the vessel.

THE football match at Chatsworth on Dominion Day between Chatsworth and Markdale clubs was a sharp contest and was won by the latter. R. Sproule and R. Benson of Markdale also took a number of prizes for athletic games.

EXCURSION.—The Knights of Pythias, Supreme Lodge of the World, will demonstrate in Toronto next week and the following rates will be given from Markdale, viz., to Toronto and return for $2.35, good from the 13th to 15th inclusive. See large posters for full particulars and program.

FIRE.—On Sunday morning at 2 o'clock our citizens were aroused by the alarm of fire. Three small wooden houses were burnt, owned by Wm. Brown, Esq., one occupied by Peter Munshaw, one by Bill Scott and the third vacant. Cause of fire unknown. The contents were saved. There is, we understand a small insurance.

THE Markdale brass band concert announced for the evening of the 12th promises to eclipse any of the former successful efforts. The best local talent and some valuable assistance from a distance will take part. Our band is well worthy of public patronage, and we have no doubt this will be a great success. Tickets 25 cents.

Mr. E. Vanzant of the Flesherton marble works is putting out some costly and very handsome work. He has just erected a monument over the remains of the late Jeremia Taylor (NewBrunswic red graite) costing $250 and has one in course of construction for the late Squire Kerr of Euphrasia 28 feet heigh and 14 tons weight to cost $1,000.

CARD OF THANKS.—I hereby return sincere thanks to my numerous customers for esteemed patronage in past years, and now intimate that I have just opened a large and varied stock of furniture to which I invite the attention of the public generally. Close prices and fair dealing will be adhered to. An early call will be to the advantage of those requiring furniture. ROBT ASKIN.

BAZAAR AND CONCERT.—Notwithstanding the fact that our village was almost entirely vacated on Dominion Day the bazaar under the auspices of Christ Church was well patronized and nearly all articles disposed of. The garden party was largely attended [illegible] any of the entertainment going citizens were out of town. A most enjoyable time was spent and the [illegible] decided success. Proceeds about $40. Proceeds of bazaar not yet counted.

YOUNG FOLKS.

The True Bo-Peep.

About the year 1760 a gentleman in passing through a part of England famous for its fine sheep, stopped one night at an inn where there was placed upon the supper table a roast of fine fat mutton. The talk of the landlord turned from the mutton to the sheep and the great sheep owner of the country; and he amused his guests with an account of a great quarrel between two neighboring gentlemen, each of whom had brought a suit against the other, one for the maiming of his sheep, and the other for what he called unlawful seizure of a part of his flock. The affair, said the landlord, was widely known and had excited considerable interest, and been made the subject of many jests, songs and riddles, the point being as to how a certain flock of sheep could have lost their tails and gotten them back on the same day.

The story of the affair, as related by the landlord, was as follows:

Each of the gentlemen in question was the owner of hundreds of sheep, which fed in large flocks on the unincloased downs or commons. They were all of a breed, remarkable for their short legs and broad, fat, heavy tails, on which the wool grew so long and thick that they literally dragged on the ground. They were divided into various large flocks, each of which was under the charge of a particular shepherd who appointed others, chiefly boys and girls, to lead them about in smaller companies and watch lest they should get mixed up with those of their neighbors. The shepherds of the two sheep-owners were very jealous of each other, and there was between them a good deal of quarreling and even at times fighting, concerning pasture, boundaries and the ownership of stray sheep.

One day a simple young country girl, who had about forty sheep in her charge, sat down under a shady hawthorn bush to watch her flock and there unfortunately fell asleep. Some of the animals, finding themselves unchecked, strayed off to a distance and trespassed upon the territory of the rival flocks, where the shepherd cruelly cut off their tails and then drove them back to their own pasture.

The girl meanwhile had awakened and in sore dismay searched for her missing charge, which she at length to her great joy espied coming toward her—but alas! as she soon discovered, without their tails. Thereupon her lover, a young shepherd, went in great wrath with some of his companions and had a fierce battle with the perpetrators of the outrage, whom they compelled to keep the maimed animals and give up instead an equal number of their own flock.

Hence the lawsuits and the bitter enmity between the two neighboring families, owners of the sheep.

When I first came across this account in an old book, A Jaunt through England, I was immediately struck with the similarity of incident to the well-known ballad of "Bo-Peep." Indeed I can hardly doubt that this must have been the origin of the pretty little pastoral with which every child in the land is familiar and the explanation of that puzzling riddle as to how Bo-Peep's flock lost their tails and found them again. The ballad was first popularly known about the time that the book in question was written—nearly one hundred years ago—and was then not a nursery rhyme used to amuse children, but a fashionable song sung by ladies to the music of a spinet. It has since been altered somewhat, but was originally, as we find it in an old collection of "Songs and Ballads," as follows:

Little Bo-Peep
Lost her sheep
And didn't know where to find them;
Let them alone,
And they will come home,
Dragging their tails behind them.

So little Bo-Peep
A watch did keep Her troubled herself to find them;
And they all came back,
But alas, and alack!
They had left their tails behind them!

Then she sighed and wept,
And at last she slept,
And dreampt that she heard them a-bleating;
But when she awoke
She found it a joke—
For again they were a-fleeting.

Then her true love took His staff and crook
And traveled abroad to find them;
And she saw them soon
By the light of the moon
Dragging their tails behind them!

Conviction.

Never let your honest conviction be laughed down. You can no more exercise your reason, if you live in constant dread of ridicule than you can enjoy life if you live in constant fear of death. If you think it right to differ from the time, and make a point of morals, do it—not for insolence, but seriously and gravely, as if a man carried a big soul of his own in his bosom, and did not wait until it was breathed into him by the breath of fashion. Be true to your conviction, and in the end you will not only be respected by the world, but have the approval of your conscience.

Bargains.

A great many disputes arise from bargains being imperfectly understood or not plainly and fully expressed when they are entered into. This can be and should be guarded against. When you have made a bargain orally, write it down in brief and plain terms. Read it over aloud to make certain that both contracting parties understand it alike. If there any doubtful points, discuss them frankly, even at the risk of breaking off the transaction; for, if there is bound to be a difference about it, far better to have it in the beginning, when it is harmless, than at a later period, when no one can measure the damages that may arise.

Fair Evidence for Everybody.

No one can doubt the great merit of Pelsen's NERVILINE, for it has been placed in the market in 10 cent bottles, just to give you the opportunity of testing its wonderful power over all kinds of pain. This is the best evidence of its efficiency, for every person can try for themselves. Pelsen's Nerviline is a positive (it cannot fail) cure for cramps, headache, colds, neuralgia, and the host of pains that flesh is heir to. Good to take, good to rub on. Go to any drug store and buy a 10 cent sample bottle. Large bottles 25 cents.

A Chicago jeweler has invented a self-winding watch. By an arrangement something like the carefully balanced lever of a pedometer, the watch is wound by the motion of the wearer when walking. A walk of seven minutes will wind the watch to go for forty-two hours.

Rattlesnake Jim of Worcester, Ohio, says that the only reliable cure for the bite of a rattlesnake is turpentine. He says that a bottle of turpentine held over the bitten spot, the uncorked mouth down, will draw out the poison, which can be seen as it enters the turpentine in a sort of a blue flame. Although he has never been bitten, he has tried this cure on his dogs, always with success.

George Riley of Schnectady, who has just had his hand crushed in a drill press, is not a fortunate youth. When very small he fell off a fence and broke his nose. Later he was nearly drowned; then his toes were crushed by the cars; then he broke his nose again; then his head was crushed between the bumpers of railroad cars, and when the skating rink was opened he was the first to hurt himself, breaking his arm.

A woman belonging to one of the oldest families of Derby, Conn, promised her husband before his death that she would wear his ring as long as she lived. In the grief that followed his death she forgot about the ring, and it was on his finger when he was buried. A few nights ago, at midnight, the sexton opened the grave and took off the lid of the coffin, and the widow went down to the grave and removed the ring from the dead hand. She paid the sexton $25 for his work.

A statistical expert calculates that if 1,000,000, babies started together in the race of life, 150,000 would drop out in the first year 53,000 in the second, and 22,000 in the third year. At the end of forty-five years about half of them would still be in the race. Sixty years would see 370,000 gray heads still at it. At the end of eighty years there would be 79,000 remaining on the track; fifteen years later the number would be reduced to 223, and the winner would quit the track forever at the age of 108.

Fred and Willie Gerster, aged 9 and 11, tired of their home in Cincinnati, so they packed a big basket with provisions, stole $3 and a pistol from their father, and set out to see the world. And they saw it for three weeks, sleeping in barns, selling newspapers, and blacking boots in Dayton and Toledo, and were in a fair way to become thorough tramps when the advertisements of their frantic father led to their apprehension and return to the parental roof. They say that they have had all the tramping they want.

It was announced that the Thomas Paine Society of Frederick county, Md., would celebrate the seventy-seventh anniversary of Tom Paine's death at the house of Aaron Davis, near Frederick; but not a celebrater appeared. Mr. Davis himself observed the day by not working. He said that, while there were only about a dozen members of the society, there were three or four hundred believers of the Paine doctrines in the county, but fear of social ostracism or injury to their business caused them to make a secret of their views.

Daniel R. Arnold is the station agent at Pawtucket. Recently the clerks and freight hands went to his office in a body, and the spokesman began a speech about the strikes out West and the relations of employers and employed, and was going on when Mr. Arnold very sternly and impatiently said: "State your grievance." The next moment he felt the cheapest of any man in New England, for the spokesman said the boys had come to make him a present on his fifty-seventh birthday. It was a nice present, but Mr. Arnold could hardly say "thank you," he was so surprised.

Christopher Casey and John Hebborn, military convicts at Fort Snelling, Minn., were working outside the fort, under the care of Sentinel Brown. Seizing a favorable opportunity, they knocked the sentinel down and got his gun. Brown got up, knocked Hebborn down, made after Casey, who was running off with the musket, overtook him, got the place, and when Casey refused to surrender shot him through the heart. Then he fired five shots at Hebborn but did not hit him, and the convict escaped. Casey was a deserter and was serving a two-year's sentence.

The London World says that on Patti's return to London she found awaiting on her table several pale blue boxes from Lady and Mr. Alfred de Rothschild, the first one containing a brooch about four inches long, representing two large pansies in white brilliants, with nine big blood-red rubies in it; heart all diamonds, and a large ruby in the middle, goes with the brooch; a cigar-box of violet leather, with an inch-wide gold frame, and on one side "M. Earnest Nicolini;" on the other, "From Mr Alfred de Rothschild," both names all in diamonds and rubies; and sundry other trifles in gold and silver.

Henry Ralph and his wife of Berville Mich., quarreled and separated, the mother taking a three-year-old child with her. She tired of the boy, and a few days ago, in company with an admirer, started in a buggy to take the child to its father. She met him on a wagon load of gravel and offered the child to him. He wouldn't take it. The mother tossed the boy up on the load of gravel. The father threw him back into the buggy. The mother grabbed the whip and began beating her husband, and in the confusion the little boy fell out of the buggy between the wheels of the loaded wagon. The horses started, the wheel went over the little head, and the question in dispute was settled forever. The woman has been arrested.

The Revue Scientifique announces the discovery of a beetle, christened Octonia aurata which is to render unnecessary all the knowledge gained by Pasteur concerning the treatment of rabies. A Russian naturalist, Alexander Becker, is credited with having made known the properties of this invaluable bug, and as being the authority for the statement that in southern Russia it is commonly recognized and always efficient antidote for rabies. All that is necessary for a person to do, after having been bitten by a mad dog, is to eat a piece of bread in which a Octonia aurata is enveloped, and he will be secured against hydrophobia. The insect is said to be of a metallic green color, with some white lines and spots upon it, and it is represented as common among flowers, not only of southern Russia, but of nearly all southern Europe.

Mrs. Hannah Butler, for a long time a pensioner on the bounty of a charitable organization in Baltimore, died the other day, and a plain pine coffin was procured and she was about to be buried by the organization that had supported her while she lived. Meantime her landlady had been hunting among Hannah's possessions, and not in vain. In the straw of her bed was a wallet containing $80 in gold and a bank book showing entries amounting to $1,785. Some of the money had been drawn out, but there is a goodly sum still on deposit in the Savings bank of Baltimore. The landlady stopped the funeral, and had the body taken out of the pine coffin and placed in an ice casket. The old dress in which the woman was laid out was taken off and she was clothed in an elegant shroud. A handsome casket was ordered, and the funeral took place with more pomp than was at first intended.

A DREADFUL DEATH.

Perishing from Thirst and Exposure on the Mojave Desert.

James Sutcliffe and Alexander Falconer returned from a trip to Cave Wells, on the Resting Springs road, Cal., lately, whither they had gone to search for the person of George Andersen, who was lost a short time ago while traveling in company with A. Bateman, on their way to Wilson ranch, Lincoln, Nevada. It seems that Mr. Andersen while laboring under a fit of mental derangement, jumped from the wagon and fled to the mountains, where he eluded pursuit for four days in a country destitute of water. Occasionally sight was caught of him by Mr Bateman, who was in pursuit, accompanied by John Black and Judge Califf. Once in the meantime Mr Bateman, was close enough to him to coax him into his wagon, where he gave him some water and liquor. He again became violent, insisting that some one was after him for the purpose of robbery, and threatening to kill Mr. Bateman, who was at that time alone, trying to get at the firearms, which fortunately had been concealed. He then attempted to get the butcher-knife from the mess chest, but did not succeed.

Mr. Bateman at this became thoroughly alarmed, told him to jump from the wagon, which he did, fleeing to the hills like a deer. This was the last time any one got near enough to speak to him. Messrs. Curry and Winters, coming along two days later, found where he had laid down in several places, having by this time divested himself of his shoes. Numerous places were found where he had been digging in the hard ground, apparently for water A diligent search was kept by Mr. Bateman, John Black and Mr. Califf, and at last Mr. Bateman found his body on a rocky hill about six miles southerly from Cave station, lying on his face dead. His feet were worn to the bone from running [over the sharp stones barefooted, his right hand worn out from digging for water, his arms lacerated so that that the bones and sinews were exposed from falling, and his body badly bruised. The searching party covered him up carefully, intending to come to Daggot for help to bury him, but Sutcliffe and Falconer, who had gone out, arrived, and at midnight, with no music but the plaintive cooing of the turtle-dove and the sighing winds among the granite rocks near the base of old Ivanoah mountains, the friends of poor happy-hearted George dug a deep grave, and as the pale moon looked calmly down upon the mournful scene, all that was mortal of George Andersen was consigned to its mother earth. In his delirium he hid the money and two gold watches that he was known to have upon him, and lost his coat and hat, which have not yet been found. He was well known in this vicinity and in Nevada. He was a man of warm and generous impulses, which endeared him to a host of friends, who deeply mourn his unfortunate death. He was a member of the Masonic fraternity, aged about thirty-eight or forty years, and a native of Dundee, Scotland. He had lived a greater portion of his life in Canada and Nevada. Mr. Bateman, John Black, Judge Califf, and others were unceasing in their endeavors to capture him, but their efforts were in vain for he could easily watch them and hide in the numerous caves and ravines which abound in that region.

Miss Nora Clench, a native of St. Marys, Ont., and for some time a resident of Hamilton, Ont., is now studying music in Leipsic, Germany. The newspapers of that city all speak in high praise of the young Canadian's first performance in public there. Following is an extract from the Leipsiger Tageblatt: "The choicest number of the evening was the performance of Bach's Chaconne for violin solo. Miss Leonora Clench, of St. Marys, Canada, proved by her really glorious interpretation of that most difficult composition, that she has already reached such an advanced stage in the art of violin playing that she has it now in her power to go on and attain the highest limits of her art. Beautiful tone, noble phrasing, profound soulfulness characterised the playing of this fair young artist, who by her performance raised a storm of enthusiasm Indeed, Herr Brodsky, the celebrated teacher of this young violinists, is truly to be congratulated on the possession of such a pupil. May there be no interruption to the final development of such a great talent."

A musical paper asserts that Grover Cleveland is as unmusical as the Emperor of Germany and the Queen of England, but that he pretended to choose the music for their wedding all the same. Grover may be unmusical but he can begin to take an interest in it now that his young wife will play to him, and it might be safely predicted that he will. As for Emperor William, he is by no means unmusical, and was in his younger years a great admirer of really good music; he is even now a patron of music and has done much to improve military music in Prussia. Queen Victoria is absolutely a fine musician, who never engaged a lady of honor that would not play a duet with her on the piano; she possessed a very fine voice, admirably trained by old Signor Lablache. Music was daily practised in the royal household during Prince Albert's lifetime, and it was a pleasure to hear Mendelssohn say, with his eyes all aglow, how delighted he was to hear the Queen play one of his "Lieder ohne Worte" better than he could do it himself. There is no amateur lady in New York that can measure herself with Queen Victoria as to musical knowledge. Where in the world was that information taken from? Not from reality.

THE PLAGUE OF EGYPT.

A Dissertation on Flies as They Exist by the Banks of the Nile.

If I should be called on to name the most vital animal element of Egypt it would not be buffalo, donkey, camel, ostrich or man, says the Hon. S. S. Cox. It would be the flies. It was winter, but they were as plentiful as in time of summer or of the plagues. In the eighth chapter of Exodus it is said that the Lord "did according to the word of Moses, and he removed the swarms of flies from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people: there remained not one." What a relief? Not one." That was near 4,000 years ago. They have accumulated since enormously. Without displaying any incredulity, I have my doubts of there being a time when there was not one fly in all that land. It is said that there is good in everything, and, if so, there must be some utility in the fly. Its possible power for good may not have been measured. That it produces ophthalmia and tends generally to derogate from the land of Osiris and Rameses no one will dispute. The perpetual irritation of the flies, especially upon the eyes of the children—like that of a flea—may provoke the lazy "fellah" to exertion, and thus help him to discharge his debt to nature, if not to the bondholder. If one did not know by certified papri that these mumified kings and queens were ancient, and had, therefore, shriveled their condition might be accounted for by the plague of flies. Much trouble has been taken to account for the building of the grand tombs and pyramids in the deep sands and rubble. It is not difficult to solve when we remember that priest and king suffered from the swarms of flies. The infantile death-rate is due mostly to flies. On the vessel or in the mud-hut, in temple or town—flies! From Thinite, first dynasty 2700 B. C., to the time of the present courteous and unselfish khedive—flies! Theban, Bubastile, Saite, Ethiopian, Macedonia, Greek, Roman, and Mahometan dynasties—flies! From the tiniest buzzer to the biggest blue-bottle—flies! Touching with dainty feet and prehensile grip the beauteous eyelash of Cleopatra; biting with chivalric intrepidity through the harness of Godfrey de Bouillon, and pursuing with a "nipping air" Persian, Kermani, Syrian, and Reom, as they flit through history—flies! What a visitation, and only once a relief! Yet mechanism, if harnessed by Stephenson, Ericsson, and Edison, might have employed these possible forces. The lifting power of donkey, camel, and buffalo, implied in the tail force of ten pounds a minute for only forty centuries of perpetual fly time (except when Israel was in question), and Egypt might have had organized power enough to have worked all the shadoofs on the Nile, plowed all her arable soil, transported all her produce to market, and even bored for petroleum on the shores of the scriptural Red sea.

"Yes, I believe in the eight-hour system," said a Warren township farmer. "I work eight hours in the forenoon and eight in the afternoon. In haying time I sometimes put in an hour or two extra.

A widow who put her all into a deal in stocks and was shrunk out, called upon her broker and said: "When will this thing probably come out in the papers?" "To-morrow, doubtless." "How long can you suppress it." "Why, I might keep it out two days, but not longer." "Only two days? That's pretty short notice, but I'm a hustler when I get my bonnet on; I'll depend on the two days." On the third day the papers chronicled her loss and her wedding on the same page.

In the pocket was a leather pocket-book which were a dozen or more clippings of five dollar bills. Most of the pieces had been clipped right across the bill, and had the figure five on them. It is supposed that the balance of the bill was passed in the same way, and that the clippings were intended to be pasted over the figure 1, and make ten dollar bills, thus making what is known as a ten dollar bill.

Most of the early settlers who took part in the erection are now buried in the yard that surrounded it. tribution At Last!

hen he awoke the next morning, Cecil knew still further that he had in- found his Eve, that the pale silent girl stolen his heart without an effort on part, without resistance on his, and that ved at last—a love strong as death, un- as eternity!

This disenchanted eyes the young poet upon Nellie Mill when he so- ally met her, somewhat later, during dulous strolling by the river. She ded and smiled, her foolish happiness ing in eyes and smile; but he turned her coldly, almost with a frown. He ered why he had never noticed before vulgarly red her cheeks were, how maid like the plump roundness of her , and how commonplace the hazel eyes dark crisp curls. Surely a woman always to be tall and slight, pale and haired! Then, when she spoke, how was her accent, and how unmusical the shrill tones of her voice!

Although he had turned from her so cold- the quick childish tears which brimmed yes melted Cecil's heart, and, patting cheek lightly, he said—

"Forgive me, Nellie! I am as cross as a this morning. Won't you turn back me and see if you can coax me into a temper?"

Foolish Nellie turned at once and lent a rent and enchanted ear to his idle re- s and his poetical quotations. She silent when he was silent—lost in re- of yesterday. Cecil had no idea that girl loved him, no idea that for her to by his side, seeing him and hearing , was the highest bliss she could imagine simply regarded her as an amusing rus- pretty child. When at length she timidly and reluctantly to hint the early dinner hour was past, he ed.

"Dinner!"—and he repeated the word ently. "Oh, ah, yes! You had better back, child. I am going to the Mere se, and may not be back until late."

Turn back alone! A strange pain smote Nellie's heart; but with a careless wave of hand Cecil had already gone on, hast- towards Veriston, his head bent, and light cane switching the tremulous . Had he turned to look, he would seen the girl throw herself down ong the ferns in passionate childish grief, almost stifling her—jealousy, love, wounded pride in fierce conflict. He ight have been startled to hear from these ildish lips the almost inarticulate bitter y—

"He is going to see Argent Veriston! I him—I hate him!"

But all unheeding, he pursued his path. wakening to the fact that the hour was an ntimely one for calling, he strolled along the mere, feeling sure that Argent would visit her favorite haunt.

A shower had fallen during the night, and there was now a delicious freshness in the air. The birds sang joyously in the trees, sweet scents were wafted by the gentle breeze, dragon-flies hung quivering among the long cool reeds, and the water flashed and dim- pled. All was ineffably fair, innocently joyous, and joy-giving, and yet Cecil's heart was sad with an indefinable foreboding. All day a cloud had hung over his spirits which would not be shaken off. In vain he reasoned with himself, in vain he called himself a morbid fool and a senseless idiot. The vague clinging shadow was still there. Battling with it, he paced up and down, until suddenly he saw Argent coming toward him; then the cold misgiving fled and all the golden glory of "love's young dream," surrounded him instead.

Slowly she came, her hands clasped be- fore her, her long dress sweeping the grass. She wore no hat, but a white quaintly-em- broidered umbrella shielded her face from the hot glare. Listlessly graceful, fair and pale, the dark blue sky throwing out the purity of her white robes, she came towards him, appearing neither surprised nor pleased when she saw him, and replying with dreamy indifference to his warm nervous greeting. Her eyes rested without emotion of any sort upon his changing face, which was many shades redder than was its wont.

"A great blundering booby I must have looked!" he afterwards told himself savage- ly. "But if I had looked like an angel she would never have noticed me."

With a sigh as of one resigned to her fate, the young lady sank down on the old trunk gazing with longing eyes out over the water.

"You seem to love the mere?" ventured Cecil Graham presently, finding her appar- ently forgetful of his presence.

She sighed again softly.

"Love! That is a strange word."

"It should not be a strange word to you," continued the poet, seating himself unbid- den by her side.

"Why not to me?" she asked in calm surprise.

"Why not? Because, because—pardon me, but you are so young, so—so beautiful, so beloved! Why all your life must be filled with love!"

"Young, beautiful, beloved," she mur- mured, as if studying the meaning of the words. "I have read of women who were all three, and you say I am. But that doesn't make me love."

She spoke wearily, without passion, and without change of tone or expression.

"Do you not love your father?" he asked rather startled and feeling his way.

"No; I think not—I do not know," she answered quite calmly. "I do not know what you mean by love."

"I mean that power which makes pain heaven, and death bliss," said Cecil solemn- ly.

A slight quiver disturbed the serenity of the girl's face; she turned her eyes on his, and he saw in them an expression of vague pain.

"I have read of it," she said; "but I knew of nothing which would make death bliss to me"—shuddering a little.

"Death borne for, or with another, I meant," he continued gently. "There have been those who have endured—there are millions who would endure torture with a smile, for love's sweet sake."

Argent turned away from his passionate gaze and his passionately uttered words.

"Do not," she implored, with a gesture as of one warding off a blow. "Let me be at peace."

Then a long silence fell upon them. It was broken by the appearance of Mr. Veriston, who, book in hand, came up, and drew the unwilling youth away from the fair-haired girl for a stroll in the park and a metaphysical discussion, finally taking him, much more willingly, in to tea.

The whole room was redolent of the scent of narcissus as the two men entered—a subtle odour which ever afterwards seemed in Cecil's mind strangely characteristic of Argent Veriston, for she wore clusters of the flower in her hair and bosom. It was won- derful how her mere presence fascinated the young man; the tones of her voice charmed him like sweetest music, and her listless movement enchained his eyes. Even the colourlessness of her face and dress, which would have displeased most men, possessed some indescribable attraction for him. He could have knelt and worshipped her as a saint. She seemed to him sweet as a rose, pure as a dewdrop, more noble and more to be desired than aught the world contained.

"When I have taught her to love," he said to himself, as he walked home in the gloaming, and his pulses throbbed violently as he said it, "she will awake heart and soul, and she will have learned the only lesson needed to make her perfect. I shall write what I will on these unspotted tab- lets. Am I not the first who has penetra- ted into the palace of the sleeping beauty? Am I not therefore the only one destined to awake her with a kiss to love and life?" And the words of a favorite song rose to his lips as he pressed on gaily.

"'Give her time; on grass and sky
Let her gaze; if she be fain,
As they looked ere he drew nigh,
They will never look again.'"

CHAPTER IV.

"Did you ever see Mrs. Veriston?" asked Mr. Graham one morning of his landlady, as he passed her in the kitchen garden, where she was engaged in cutting cabbages. He had paused on his way to have a chat with Mrs. Mill.

"Yes, sir," she said, pausing, knife in hand. "It seems only as yesterday the master brought her home to the Mere House and yet it must be over twenty years agone. Ay, but time do fly! Here to day and gone tomorrer, as you may say. A right pretty creter she was!"

"Anything like her daughter, Mrs. Mill?"

"Not a deal, sir; she were little and playful as a kitting—only seventeen years old, you see, sir. I remember I was up to the 'ouse with fresh butter and heggs; and as I was set down, having a crack of talk with Mrs. Sampson the housekeeper, in comes young Mrs. Veriston, all dressed in blue, sir, with gold-coloured hair and blue eyes, for all the world like a fairy at the pantomime. She comes in smiling, and, sez she, 'Who's this?' sez she, 'Well, I up and makes my 'bedience—for I knows what's due to gentlefolks—and sez I, 'I am Wil- lum Mill's wife at the farm, what brings your butter and heggs, my lady, and wishes you, if I may be so bold, 'ealth and 'appi- ness.' And she laughs like a peal 'o silver bells; and, sez she, 'Thank you, Mrs. Mill. I look as if I'd get both, don't I?' And sure enough she did, sir; and, scarce a year after, I helped to lay her in her coffin!"

"Poor young thing," said Cecil, with a thrill of pity for the fair innocent life so quickly ended. "How very, very sad! I suppose her husband made a great trouble of her death?"

"Trouble? He was mad with trouble, sir! It was bawful to see him at first—up and down, up and down, and no rest for a minute. No one dared shew him the baby, poor lamb; but at last Mrs. Grubb— which she was the nurse, sir—sez she, 'It's redikilis and onnateral, and see the blessed hinfant he shall, if I loses my life for it!' And she ups and bursts right into the study, and she lays it in his arms afore you could say 'Jack Robinson.' A pale, fair little thing it was, as quiet as a mouse, and for all the world as if it knowed everything. Contrairey to all we thought sir, he clasps and kisses it, and breaks out into a perfect flood of tears and sobs; and the doctor said said he, it 'ad saved his life or his reason. After that he could hardly bear the child out of his sight. But it's a sad loss for her, sir—him so queer and her neither kith nor kin in a sense of word. They do say she's not quite—quite——" And Mrs. Mill tap- ped her forehead mysteriously.

"I'll tell you what it is, Mrs. Mill," cried Cecil, an indignant flush rising to the very roots of his hair, "there's a set of tale- bearing old gossips who will tell any lies in creation, just for the sake of having some- thing to say"—the landlady, who felt some- what guilty herself on this point here flush- ed in her turn—"and will even slander a noble and innocent lady as far such crea- tures as—as the stars above in the sky!"

"Yes, sir, quite so, sir!" stammered Mrs. Mill, very much crestfallen beneath the un- expected storm she had brought down upon her head.

"You might have knocked me down with a feather," she told her husband afterwards. "Who'd a thought he'd a taken me up like that? Depend upon it, Willum, it's not for nothink our young gentleman goes up to the 'ouse so often. It's to be hoped for his sake she is in her right mind, poor dear!"

Cecil had allowed it to be supposed by Mr. Veriston that he had never seen the venerable ruins of Easthere Abbey, and that very morning he was going to be con- ducted there by the old gentleman and his daughter.

A little ruffled still by Mrs. Mill's last remark, a little saddened by the thought of Mrs. Veriston's brief span of life and love, and the idea of Argent's lone motherless youth, he hastened towards the Mere House. It was a gray sunless day, full of brooding warmth. Not a breath of wind "detached the delicate blossoms from the tree," or stir- red the frail feathery grasses which edged the narrow winding path that made a short cut to the house.

Argent was in the garden gathering flowers. Catching a glimpse of her white dress between the trees, Cecil went towards her, murmuring—

"It is my lady, oh, it is my love!
She speaks, yet she says nothing. What of that?
Her eye discourses!"

But when he reached her he could only say—

"What a lovely morning, is it not?"

"It suits my mood," she answered, with- drawing the hand he had taken and would fain have held.

"May I ask what is yours, cousin?" he queried gently. "It should be a happy one amongst the flowers."

"Ah, but the flowers are sad this morn- ing!" she replied, looking her eyes wander dreamily over their wild luxuriance. "See they hang their heads, for there is no sun- shine."

"Then you are sad, I presume?" he said, in tones whose tenderness was wasted on the desert air. "And that must not be. But tell me the reason of your sadness; per- haps I may know some spell potent enough to exorcise the evil spirit."

"The reason? There is none, only that the flowers are sad. I told you before"— impatiently—"they want the sun, and so do I."

"Shine out, little head, running over with curls,
To the flowers, and be their sun."

"But I do," she sighed, pressing one of the gathered blossoms to her soft pale cheek.

"Well, love shall be your sun," he went on, still continuing the fanciful vein, al- though his heart was beginning to beat fast. "Sadness and gloom disappear in the rays of love, if only you will not hide from them."

She stood silent, as if pondering his words; while he waited to gather from voice or glance some sign that she under- stood his meaning, not venturing to say more, lest by a too rough touch he should destroy his house of cards. A moment or two she stood, then, in her usual calm quiet tones, she said—

"I must take these roses in. I think my father wants them."

"Have you forgotten that you are going to show me Easthere Abbey this morning?" he demanded, bravely hiding his disappoint- ment as they strolled up to the house.

"Were we? Yes, I had forgotten"— coolly. "But it is impossible; I must help my father."

"Oh, you will not disappoint me so cruel- ly?" he urged, deeply wounded by this proof of her indifference. "I am sure Mr. Veriston will put off the business, what- ever it be, until to-morrow."

"No, no; but"—hesitatingly—"if you like, perhaps we might go after luncheon."

"You do not seem anxious about it!" he said bitterly. "I believe you would rather not go at all with me."

She looked up wonderingly at his face clouded with pain.

"Your going makes no difference," she responded, driving the nail deeper with every word; "and I want to go. I like the Abbey, and we can go down to the sea."

"Miss Veriston, you are cruel! You don't know how you hurt me!" he burst out with irrepressible passion. Then, by a violent effort calming his agitation, he added, "No, you do not know. Forgive me if I have startled you. What does the poet say?—

"'You'll love me yet, and I can tarry
Your love's protracted growing.
June reared that bunch of flowers you carry,
From seeds of April's sowing.'"

But Argent was already ascending the wide steps to the porch, and she did not hear what the poet said. However, the words were not spoken wholly in vain, since they gave Cecil some comfort. All the way through the hall he hugged the comfort to his breast, murmuring, as his eyes feasted themselves on the graceful fig- ure that preceded him—

"You'll love me yet, you'll love me yet!"

Mr. Veriston's own particular den was a small octagon room, lighted by one narrow heavily-framed casement jutting out among the rich cool greenness of a laurel shrubbery at the back of the house. A narrow pas- sage and flight of steps led to it from the hall. Down this passage and up these steps the two went, breaking in, with scant ceremony, on the student's classic retreat. They found him arrayed in a torn dressing- gown of faded rainbow hues, and buried in a pile of books and papers, mumbling to himself as he searched the musty pages or wrote a sentence on the virgin quires by his side.

"Ah, Mr. Graham! Yes, fine day!" he muttered abstractedly, as he looked up at Cecil and that gentleman grasped his cold thin hand. Then he added, "Argent, are you ready to help me?"

"May I help?" urged Cecil, before the girl could answer. "Cannot I take Miss Veriston's place while she acts sunshine to her flowers?"—with a smile intended for her alone.

"Yes, yes!" was Mr. Veriston's eager answer. "At least, if you can spare the time, Graham."

"It will be the best use I can make of it," returned Cecil, with a smile. "But you must not forget, sir, that after lunch- eon we are all going to Easthore Abbey, and down to the sea-shore. I will help you this morning, and you shall indulge me this afternoon. Is it a fair bargain?"

"Quite," smiled the old bookworm, un- able to resist the genial influence of Cecil's manner. "You will go, Argent?"

"Yes, father," she said, turning away without the glance for which the young man was yearning, and taking his heart with her as she returned.

Later on, the uniform soft gray of the sky broke up into pearly clouds, bordered with light, and shewing here and there faint streaks of blue. Standing on the door- step ready to set out, a gleam of sunshine smote the ground at Argent's feet.

"A good omen!" exclaimed Cecil, with a smile. Then, in lower tones, "You will not be sad now?"

The only answer she made was a lovely reflection of his own smile, sweeter, he thought, than any words could have been; and it was with a heart full of renewed hope that he walked by her side, she lean- ing on her father's arm, to the Abbey.

Their path lay across a wide common, now fragrant with heather bloom and bright with masses of golden gorse, broken up here and there by granite boulders piercing the mossy turf. Over this plain the breath of the sea stole refreshingly. Poised in the clear air a lark was pouring out a burst of liquid song. Mr. Veriston, his head still full of his late labors, which had been most unwillingly discontinued, strode along with head bent in silent cogitation. Argent was almost as silent. Cecil could not help thinking what a curious party of pleasure they would have appeared to ordinary ob- servers. Nevertheless, and in spite of the rebuffs he had that morning received, he felt strangely happy. The bright gleaming blossoms, the fresh pure air, the lark's song and the occasional sunshine, all whispered to him of hope.

"You'll love me yet," he told himself, gloating with an exquisite shade of proprie- torship on Argent's pale dreamy face, her upraised eyes, apparently unconscious of his proximity, her yellow hair shining beneath the brim of her large Rembrandt hat, her white dress, her small hands encased in very mundane dogskin gloves, and her tiny arch- ed feet. His heart swelled triumphantly, and his pulses beat strong and fast. He would not have changed places with any one in the world. It was such bliss to be by her side, breathing the same air and be- holding the same summer earth and sky.

"Easthere Abbey!" he exclaimed at last, breaking the enchanted silence which had fallen upon them.

"Ha!" and Mr. Veriston awoke with a start. "Yes a fine old place; full of mem- ories of the past."

"Imagine the days when the Abbey was in its prime," said Cecil, when they stood in the dismantled chancel presently, watch- ing the swallows darting to and fro on dark swift wings. "When stoled priests swept down these forest-like aisles, when music and choral singing mingled with the clouds of amethystine incense rising to the fretted roof, and the light fell in red and purple flakes on tonsured monk and kneeling wor- shippers, on stately banner-hung tomb and jewelled crucifix—this vast fane filled by a devout throng. And now, where are they? Where is the pomp of its worship? All gone, all less than dust!"

"You are eloquent, Graham!" smiled the old man; but Argent's eyes were glowing as she listened until he finished, then they grew sympathetically sad.

Cecil Graham laughed.

"The place is enough to inspire one," he said; "the very walls and empty windows that once 'blushed with their gems of glory' seem to mourn their perished grand- eur. To me it is like one vast tomb!"

"A tomb?" said Argent dreamily.

"Yes, a tomb of time."

"This tree must have been struck by lightning," remarked Mr. Veriston, after they had duly explored the Abbey, and were seated outside on some fallen stones, resting before proceeding to the seashore, another mile away.

"Yes," responded Cecil; and a thought of that other afternoon, spent in compan- ionship so different came over him for a mo- ment. "I was here at the time. It was during that terrific thunderstorm a few weeks ago. You remember it? A grand sight. I shall never forget its wild beauty.

"Rather a dangerous spot to be in during such a storm. Whereabouts were you?"

"Just within the cloisters."

"It's a wonder you weren't killed, Gra- ham," asserted the other solemnly.

Cecil stole a look at Argent. She sat per- fectly calm and indifferent, though atten- tive.

"I don't see that it would have mattered much," he said bitterly.

"Mr. Veriston!" exclaimed a voice, be- fore any one could speak again. "This is a pleasant surprise!" and the Reverend Maurice Stone, in clerical long skirts and wide-awake, appeared in sight. Shaking hand swarmly with the trio he seated him- self by his old friend's side.

"You must join us, Stone," said Mr. Veriston. "We are going down to the seashore. You will come back with us to dine?"

"Certainly. I shall be glad," replied the clergyman, not thinking it necessary to add that that would be the first time he had broken his fast during the day. "I never expected to find friends here," was his next remark.

"I suppose you came—like the holy brethern of old—to pray and meditate? said Cecil flippantly.

"You are partly right," returned the other calmly. "To me this seems a fitting place for meditation—and for prayer."

"I suppose of course the ancient rite of consecration performed here still holds?" queried Cecil, feeling rebuked.

"Certainly—while a stone remains. Even after that the holy influences of prayer and praise will hallow the spot where once the altar reared its sacred sign aloft."

"I am in for it!" muttered Cecil sotto voce. Then aloud—"Do you often come here, Mr. Stone?"

"Very often. I think Miss Veriston and I love it equally well?"—with a smile at the young girl.

"Miss Veriston and I!" The words struck unpleasantly on Mr. Graham's ear. They came here then together! But Ar- gent was wholly unconfused, wholly uncon- scious. She only said quietly—

"I think we do," and the young poet's momentary jealous qualm passed away.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Oddly Addressed.

Many oddly-addressed letters daily pass through the post-office. Several of the rhym- ing kind are somewhat remarkable for the poetical skill displayed by the writers.

A clever example is given in the following, addressed to Sir Walter Scott during one of his visits to London:

"Sir Walter Scott, in London or elsewhere;
He needs not ask, whose wide-extended fame
Is spread about our earth, like light and air,
A local habitation for his name."

Charles Dibden, the naval-song writer, sent a letter to Mr. Hay bearing the follow- ing address:

"Postman bear this sheet away,
And carry it to Mr. Hay;
And whether you ride mare or colt on,
Stop at the Theatre, Bolton;
If in what county you inquire,
Merely mention Lancashire."

A letter addressed as follows was mailed in the provinces, and was duly delivered in London:

"Where London's column pointing to the skies,
Like a tall bully, lifts its head and lies,
There dwells a citizen of sober fame,
A plain, good man, and Balaam is his name."

The letter was delivered without delay to a Mr. Balaam, a fishmonger near the Mon- ument.

Turning from poetry to prose, we find the following vague direction:

"Mr. ——, Travelling Band, one of the Four play- ing in the street, Pershia [Pershore], Worces- tershire. Please find him if possible."

Another envelope bore the following:

"This is for the young girl that wears spectacles, who minds two babies 30 sheriff [street], off Prince Edwin street, Liverpool."

Mr. J. Wilson Hyde, in his book, "The Royal Mail," says that two letters directed as follows were duly delivered:

"To my sister Jess, Up the Canongate, Down a Close, Edinburg. She has a wooden leg."

The other was addressed:

"Old Aunt Sue as lives in the Cottage by the Wood near the New Forest."

"In the latter case," says Mr. Hyde, "the letter had to feel its way about for a day or two, but 'Aunt Sue' was found living in a cottage near Lyndhurst."

AT SANDRINGHAM.

A Brief Visit to the Prince of Wales' Country Seat.

The best criterion of a man's character is furnished by his home life, and I do not believe that in all the broad lands of Old England their exists a more happy home than that of the Prince of Wales at Sand- ringham, in the county of Norfolk. Many country seats are luxurious and some more magnificent, but there is hardly another where so much comfort is united with ex- quisite taste and refinement.

The visitor, on arriving at the Wolverton railway station on Saturday afternoon from London, finds a variety of conveyances, char-a-bancs and phaetons, together with light feargons for the luggage, and the dis- tance between the depot and Sandringham is quickly covered.

In alighting one is received in the hall by the royal host and hostess, and after having been taken off to the princess' room on the ground floor for refreshment after the long journey, in the shape of tea, etc., the prince, if it be your first visit to Sandringham, takes you upstairs himself to your room, and after seeing that you have everything you require rings the bell and orders one of the servants to attend specially to your wants and com- forts. Then with a kindly nod and an "au revoir" he leaves you to dress for dinner.

and silk stockings formerly de rigueur at royal dinners are now a thing of the past, and having pinned on the pretty button- hole which you find on your dressing table, and donned any decorations or war-medals (the latter worn in miniature on these oc- casions) which you may possess, you make your way downstairs to the drawing rooms. There you will probably find Colonel Teed- dale wearing his equerry's coat of dark blue with gold buttons. He has been with the prince for close upon thirty years, and New Yorkers of 1860 will remember well the dashing young officer who had just won his Victoria cross and order of the bath by his splendid conduct at the seige of Lucknow. The Countess of Macclesfield, lady-in-waiting to the princess, will also probably already have come downstairs. This is the good lady who, when the Princess of Wales was pre- maturely confined of her eldest son in 1864 at Frogmore, after a skating party, had suf- ficient presence of mind to perform the offices of accoucheur and nurse, both of whom ar- rived after the trouble was over.

As soon as the guests are assembled the prince and princess make their appearance, and dinner is immediately announced. The host and hostess sit facing each other at table; the dinner is exquisitely cooked, for the prince is a great gourmet. It, how- ever, rarely lasts more than an hour, for his royal highness detests long dinners and overloaded menus. Those who pay atten- tion to such trifles may be interested to know that fish-knives are eschewed, two forks being used instead for eating fish. The gentlemen remain for a short time over their wine after the ladies have retired, and then join the party in the drawing-rooms, where round games of cards are frequently indulg- ed in. At about midnight the ladies retire to rest, and the men to gossip with the prince in the smoking room or round the billiard table.

THE NEXT MORNING (SUNDAY)

the prince and princess, who during all the twenty-three years of their married life have always occupied the same bedroom, breakfast together in private, whilst the ma- jority of the guests breakfast downstairs at a number of small tables in the morning room. Shortly before 11 o'clock the prince makes his appearance in the hall and chaff- ingly orders every one, nolens volens, to get ready for church, and after seeing the whole party off brings up the rear guard himself on the look-out for stragglers. The church is on the estate, and about ten minutes' walk from the house. It is small, but ex- ceedingly pretty, and the choral service is both short and simple. On the way home the prince will ask you to inspect his mena- gerie of all kinds of wonderful pet animals, from crocodiles down to hedgehogs, whilst the princess will insist on your admiring the kennels where she keeps her pet dogs, over eighty in number and of all breeds.

After a heavy luncheon at two o'clock his royal highness will invite you to walk over with him to his home farm to see some magnificent prize cattle, of which he is very proud. On returning to the hall he will probably shew you over the house, including the hall room, with all its magnificent Italian trophies, and the plainly furnished rooms where the three young princesses re- side with their two governesses. The stables, which cost the prince over $80,000 per annum, are simply perfection.

As you are about to leave for London early the next morning, you take leave of your host and hostess before retiring to rest, and will probably find on your dressing table autograph portraits of themselves and children as mementoes of your visit to Sandringham Hall.

A Mosquito Story.

"I was at Fort Keogh one summer not long ago when an explosion occurred in the boiler which blew it some distance from the fort into a swamp. The men started after it. When they got there the mosquitoes were so thick that it was found impossible to work. The men got inside the boiler and the mosquitoes punched their stingers right through the plated iron. The men clinched the bills on the inside and kept on clinching them until hundreds and hundreds of mos- quitoes were fastened to the boiler. The men built a fire inside of the boiler to scare off the other mosquitoes, and the latter started to fly away.

"Of course those that were fastened tried to fly with the rest, and actually carried the heavy boiler and the men out of the swamp and on to the dry land. After that it was no trick to haul the boiler into the fort. How did they get rid of the mosqui- toes' bills? Why, they just filed them off close and left them there."

No woman can lace herself so tight as a man can drink himself.

MARKDALE, JULY 8, 1886.

BRITISH ELECTIONS.

GLADSTONES DEFEATS CERTAIN..

The latest returns received show that out of a total of 670 members of the House of Commons, 395 have now been elected. Of those 275 Tories, 43 Wnionists, 99 Gladstonians, and 53 Parneleles. There are 275 constituencies yet to be heard from and to secure even the small majority of twelve in the new Parliament, it will be necessary for the Glad stone party to carry two hundred of these seats.

A CONFESSION OF DEFEAT.

LONDON, July 6.—The Pall Mall Gazette (Liberal), commententing on the result of the election says: "We are beaten." The total of the vote polled gives a clear majority against the ministry. The only question remaining is whether the Marquis of Salisbury will not sweep the country.

"QUEEN ESTHER."

The people of Flesherton, and especially Mr. Munroe the conductor, deserve a great deal of credit for the grand success which attended their Oratorio on the evening of Dominion Day. The costumes were rich and handsome, costing $25 for their use for the occasion. Without particularizing we must say the performers did themselves credit. Over 800 attended the concert, and so great was the enthusiasm the performance was repeated the following evening when 300 attended. The receipts amounted in all to $208.00.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Traverston, July 6, 1886.

DEAR SIR,—Please insert the following and oblige: Rev. Robt. Hosking of Durham circuit was joyfully surprised a few weeks ago by the presentation of a beautiful Family Bible accompanied with a short epistle by friends of Zion appointment. This present was not given by members of the church, but by persons chiefly from other denominations, and the community is overjoyed to know that he is still only a few miles away. He carries with him the love and confidence of all who knew him, as he labored faithfully for the good of his church; as a follower of Christ, he not only showed it on Sabbath days, but by his daily labor. The same rev. gentleman was presented with a purse and quite a sum of money for his unlaboring love in teaching the young folks singing, by friends and members of Varney circuit, to which he made a very suitable and pathetic reply; and we are pleased to see that his labors are not in vain. Hoping he will still love and cherish in the future that which he has in the past, saving souls for the Master.

MEMBER OF CHURCH,

A HEAVY BURDEN.

Mr. George Russell, of Aurora, Ont., says he was a great sufferer from a running sore of the worst discription, which baffled the best medical skill, and his life was a burden. He was cured by B. B. B. to his great joy and surprise of his friends.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

At a meeting of the patrons of Markdale Cheese Factory, held in the Markdale House, on the evening of July 3rd, 1886, it was moved by Thos. Kells, secondrd by Wm. McLoughry, and resolved, that having just examined into the working of the factory thus far this season, we are highly gratified with the outlook, notwithstanding the action of many of our so-called patrons in neglecting or refusing to send milk as agreed, and in other cases sending so very little; yet the factory has now on hand over 213 cheese which, in comparison with last year's first sale of 276 at 9th July, is very gratifyirg indeed. Our expenses for hauling this year being but a fraction over one-half, and cheese rating three shillings higher in the Old Country markets, bespeak a better return to the patron; therefore we urge upon all to give the factory a hearty support as it only depends on ourselves to make this the most successful year's manufacture, and consequently the most profitable yet experienced. And when we consider the unprofitableness of grain and stock raising at the present time we ought not to need reminding that in the cheese business alone we can secure a fair return for our investment. Carried unanimously.

H. D. IRWIN, Secretary.

N. B.—Mr. Elliott will not charge a quarter of a cent more for manufacture as per agreement, if the average number of cows should fall below 200.

Standing long jump—1st, W. McAleer, Eugenia; 2nd, H. Roberts, McIntyre.

Standing high jump—1st, Ben Kerr; 2nd, H. Roberts.

Running long jump—1st, Ben Kerr; 2nd, A. Bell, Nottawa.

Running hop, step and jump—1st, Ben Carr, Dugtroon; 2nd, W. McAleer.

Putting stone—1st, Dan Sullivan, Duntroon; 2nd, Ben Kerr.

Boys race, under 14—1st, D. Hammil, Singhampton; 2nd, Thos. Brown, Singhampton.

Mr. R. J. Paul has been away on a visit to his friends in Markham.

Mr. Geo. Mitchell, our highly respected teacher, has gone away on his holidays to visit friends in Alliston and Toronto.

Thos, Henderson, L. D. S., has been visiting friends here for the past week.

Mr. R. H. Henderson of the C. P. R., Peterboro, is spending a few days with his friends here.

At the district meeting held in Feversham of the Osprey Orange Lodges it was decided to celebrate the Battle of the Boyne at Badgeros this 12th.

Mr. B. Y. Burk, of the 8th con., near Feversham, had his barn and outbuildings totally destroyed by fire on Sunday last.

Mr, John Ottowell of the 12th line, happened with a bad accident at the raising of Mr. Geo. Moore's barn. A beam fell, striking Mr. Ottowell on the head and knocking him insensible.

We are glad to see Mr. Robt. McGirr going around again after his severe accident.

Feversham can boast of a barber now, Mr. Will Campaigne having purchased a pair of clippers, is able to do the work up in great shape,

At a meeting of the directors of the of the Osprey Agricultural Society here last week, it was decided to have their annual fall fair in Feversham some time in October.

INVISIBLE BUT INSTANTANEOUS.

All pains or aches will be instantly removed by a few drops of Fluid Lightning applied over the affected parts. No time lost; no neauseous medicines needed; no poulticing or using greasy liniments. It will not blister or discolor the skin. Sold at 25c. per bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist. Sufferers from Neuralgia assure us that they never fear it when their house contains a bottle of Fluid Lightning. 4

Lily Oak.

Crops are very promising in this district.

Mrs Crawford, of Durham, has been visiting her father, Mr. Thos, Clarke.

Miss. Henry, daughter of Mr. Wm. Henry, died last week, aged 28 years. The funeral wes largely attended, 97 teams being in the cortege.

Mark Madill has eaected a new dwelling house, and Samuel Young has one on the way.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely develop itself into Catarrh when you can be cured for 25 cents. A few applications will cure incipient Catarrh. One to two boxes will cure ordinary Catarrh. One to five boxes will cure chronic Catarrh. Dr. Chase's Catarrh cure, Sold by all dealers at 25 cents per box. 312

Rocklyn.

Everybody is glad and smiling over the last rain.

Rocklyn is booming.

Mr. Hill has the brickwork of the town hall about completed. He is making a good job of it.

Mr. Burrell's brick house is nearly completed. Mr. Geo. Crabtree is the contractor.

Messrs. A. Holden and Dante, formerly of this place, are in town, visiting friends.

A large bear was captured last week by D. Lewis and others. J. Richards claims the hide for services rendered at previous hunt.

The picnic held last Friday in Loughead's grove by the day school children, was well attended and thoroughly enjoyed by those present. Mr. Boyd, the teacher, and the managing committee spared no pains to make the picnic a success. The program, consisting of foot races, etc., was engaged in by the younger members of the school, Messrs. Parker, Richards and McCann acting as judges. The ladies deserve great credit for the manner in which they supplied refreshments. Owing to a heavy rain in the morning quite a number remained at home.

Mr. Jacob Neely raised his barn last week. The young merchant from Rocklyn was there and worked like a white head.

Mr. Porter, head teacher of your school, and Mr. Jackman, foreman of your office, were out here calling on an old friend Sunday. They went to church on the 9th line in the evening.

James Cook Danter, aged 13, died last week, after a long and painful illness. His brother lies in a very critical condition, but we hope to soon see him around again.

Reasons why you should purchase Fluid Lightning in preference to all other remedies are: Rapid result—cures instantly. It is easily applied—no trouble—no lost time. It does not require constant use—one application is effectual. One bottle will remove more pain than any other remedy in existence. Try it for Neuralgia, Toothache, Headache, Rheumatism. Sold at 25c. a bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale. 3 given the public in Flesherton by the Methodist Church entitled Esther the beautiful Queen is now a thing of the past. It will never be forgotten by those taking part in that entertainment.

Dear Editor,—

Will it leave a lasting impression for good in a question every Christian working for the Great Master, will be asking in his or her own mind.

The object of the Church is to win souls to Christ, and to teach us that our Bible is an inspired work, and should be read with reverence. Can it be proven that a portion of that sacred book caricatured, will have that effect, I have grave fears as a Christian worker.

I hear on every side "it was a grand success" and saw a Rev. Brother galliard, and so inflated that gravation appeared to have lost its natural effect, or been inverted, yet the question comes to my mind, has it won one precious Soul to Christ, or has it shown our theater going and unconverted friends that our Churches practice what it preaches. I have heard our Spiritual advisers (and I believe justly so) warning the young to beware of the allurements of the Opera or Theater as its attractions were against their spiritual good.

I am sorry to confess in my younger days I attended a few theater entertainments and I also attended the entertainments in the Drill Shed on the evening of July 1st, and as near as I could recollect they are identical both used mockprayers to our Heavenly Father to delight their audience. I am only a poor humble lay man and not supposed to know how much mock prayer our Heavnly Father will submit to before withdrawing his divine presence from our Church and his people and trust some of our spiritual advisers who take credit in originating this entertainment and bringing it to so successful an issue as claimed, will enlighten a poor lay man on these points.

I have many more questions to ask Mr. Editor concerning this entertainment and our Church teachings, but I know you dislike long letters, and refrain, but by your permission after the above is answered I will ask a few more as I confess my inability to reconcile my mind.

Thanking you for your kindness,

I am yours truly,

A Layman.

County Council.

THURSDAY AFTERNOON.

Mr. Clark presented report of Road and Bridge Committee, which was adopted.

By-laws for the incorporation of Dundalk, to fix salary of Clerk of Peace, and to establish a fair at Ayton, were read a second time.

Moved by Mr. Moffatt, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, that this council memorialize the Legislature of Ontario to so amend the Municipal Act, that the number of members at present comprising county councils be largely reduced, and that the Warden and Clerk be a committee to prepare and forward such memorial—lost.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Totten, seconded by Mr. Robertson, that the Reeves of Glenelg, Bentinck, St. Vincent, Collingwood and the mover, be a committee to consider and report upon the advisability of reducing the representations of county councils as now composed, and report at next meeting of this council—carried.

The above amendment was carried by 27 to 12.

Moved by Mr Cameron, seconded by Mr. Shute, that leave be granted at this session to introduce a by-law to provide and set apart $20,000 for the purpose of repairing the gravel roads throughout this county—lost.

Moved by Mr. Moffatt, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, that this council memorialize the Legislature of Ontario to so amend the Municipal Act that the assessing of townships shall not commence in any year before the 15th day of April, and that when such assessment is completed it shall be good for five years; and that this resolution be placed in the hands of the committee appointed to report on reduction of number of members comprising county councils, to be reported by them at next meeting of this council—carried.

FRIDAY AFTERNOON.

A long discussion took place on the report of Finance Committee fixing the assessment for the year. 25 per cent. had been added to the personal property in Owen Sound, and the Reeve and Deputies of the town fought for a reduction, which they got to 15 per ct., with some slight modifications to the other municipalities. The report was then adopted.

The report of County Property Committee was adopted.

FRIDAY EVENING.

Report of Education Committee and of Committee on memorials were adopted.

SATURDAY MORNING.

Report of Printing Committe, and another report on memorials, were adopted.

By laws for the incorporation of Dundalk, fixing the salary of Clerk of the Peace, establishing a fair at Ayton, amending the Auctioneers' by law, and levying the rate for the current year, were severally put through their final stages and passed.

Another report of finance committee was presented and adopted.

The Deputy Reeve of Meaford and the first Deputy of Owen Sound were added to the committee on reducing number in County Councils.

Moved by Mr. Moffatt, seconded by Mr. McCuaig, that this Council is of opinion that sections 112 to 119 inclusive, cap. 47, Revised Statutes of Ontario, should be repealed, and in lieu thereof it shall only be necessary for a municipality to forward to the Clerks of Division Courts a copy of their voters' lists, with the names of those liable to serve as jurors so marked thereon, and that the Warden and Clerk prepare and forward to the Legislature a memorial to that effect—carried.

The Council adjourned till Tuesday, 16th December, at 7.30 p. m.

$17,000 Fire at Orangeville.

ORANGEVILLE July 5.—Saturday evening fire broke in the store at Broadway and Prince of Wales-road occupied by Gilchrist & Kent, and completely dectroyed the stock of dry goods and groceries, amounting to $17,000, on which there was an insurance of $8000 between the Western and Lanchire. The fire is thought to have originated in the clothing department by the exploding of a lamp.

Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, Belleville.

To the Editor of the Bulletin:

Kindly allow me to say to your readers that the Institution for the Deaf and Dumb, at Belleville, is opened to the deaf children of the Province, and every deaf mute child in Ontario whether the parents are poor or rich, may share in the many advantages the Institution affords, such as tuition, board, care, etc.

There are many parents of such children who do not know of this place, and persons who will inform them of what the Province has so generously provided for their children will confer a lasting obligation.

Uneducated, a deaf mute child has no knowledge of language; is isolated, as it were, from the rest of mankind; is responsible and in many cases dangerous to the community; life is a blank without a ray of hope to illuminate the future. with an education such as may be had here. all this is changed and the mute is enabled to take his or her place as respectable members of the society and law abiding citizens and learn of the glorious life beyond. Over 700 mute children have been entered upon our books, and the large majority of them spread over the Province bear testimony to the good work already accomplished. We have a full staff of capable, devoted teachers in the library and industrial departments. We are doing all we can for those afflicted in this way, and we are anxious to do whatever work of this kind there are to do. There will be room for all that can come in September next, and in the meantime it will give me pleasure to supply application papers and necessary information to any one who may apply.

Yours faithfully,
B. MATHISON, Superintendent.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

The Thrifty Housekeeper.

Cold biscuits left over from tea may be made better than when first baked by dipping them into hot water and placing them singly on the hot grate in the oven long enough to let them get well warmed through.

Lamp wicks should be changed often enough to insure having a good light. If they seem clogged they may be washed in strong suds and put into the lamp again.

A butter stamp should always be washed in cold salt water before it is used. If soaked in hot water the butter will stick to it but never if soaked in cold brine. The salt absorbed by the wood keeps it moist while in use.

All soups are better made with fresh uncooked meat as that which has been cooked once has lost much of its flavor and nearly all of its juices.

Most people dry their umbrellas handle upwards. This concentrates the moisture at the top, where it is close, rusts the wire which secures the stretchers and rots the cloth. It is better, after the umbrella is drained, to simply invert it and dry in that position.

To save stair carpets nail several thicknesses of old carpet or canvas over the edge of each stair. It is a good plan to buy more carpeting than is needed to cover the stairs and move it each season so that the whole will wear evenly. If stair carpets cannot be changed in this way they will not wear long.

To Get Rid of Cockroaches.

A correspondent writes as follows: "I beg to inform you of an easy, clean, and certain method of eradicating those loathsome insects from dwelling houses. A few years ago my house was infested with cockroaches (or 'clocks,' as they are called here), and I was recommended to try cucumber peelings as a remedy. I accordingly, immediately before bedtime, strewed the floor of those parts of the house most infested with the vermin with the green peal, cut not very thin, from the cucumber, and sat up half an hour later than usual to watch the effect. Before the expiration of that time the floor where the peel lay was covered with cockroaches, so that the vegetable could not be seen, so voraciously were they engaged in sucking the poisonous moisture from it. I adopted the same plan the following night, but my visitors were not so numerous—I should think not more than a fourth of the previous night. On the third night I did not discover one; but, anxious to ascertain whether the house was quite clear of them, I examined the peel after I had lain it down about half an hour, and perceived that it was covered with myriads of minute cockroaches about the size of a flea. I therefore allowed the peal to remain till morning, and from that moment I have not seen a cockroach in the house. It is a very old building, and I can assure you that the above remedy only requires to be persevered in for three or four nights to completely eradicate the pest. It should be fresh cucumber peel every night.

Hints.

BLEACHING STRAW HATS.—Obtain a deep box, air-tight if possible, place at the bottom a stone; on the stone a flat piece of iron red-hot or a pan of charcoal, on which scatter powdered brimstone; there should be hooks in the box on which to hang the hats; close the lid and let the hats remain all night. Another recipe for bleaching straw is to soak the goods in caustic soda and afterward to use on them chloride of lime or javelle water. The excess of chloride should be removed by hyposulphite of soda, called anti chlor. In the first method the hat should be moistened, as a dry fabric will not bleach.

* * * It is easy to get rid of black ants. They live in ant hills and generally near the buildings. Open these hills with a hoe, scatter on a handful of salt and sprinkle on a quart of water and the ants will leave immediately. Yesterday my house was overrun with these insects. I found eleven anthills within two rods of the building and today there is not an ant to be found anywhere on or about the premises.

Any gold jewelry that an immersion in water will not injure can be beautifully cleaned by shaking it well in a bottle nearly half full of warm soapsuds, to which a little prepared chalk has been added, and afterward rinsing in clear, cold water and wiping it dry.

To preserve goods from moths do not use camphor in any form. Pieces of tar paper laid in fur boxes and in closets are a better protection. Five cents will buy enough to equip all the packing boxes and closets of a large house for a year.

Ginghams and prints will keep their color better if washed in water thickened with flour starch. Flour is very cleansing and will do the work of soap in one or two washings in the starch water. This, with the rinsing, will be sufficient and the goods will look fresher than if washed and starched in the old-fashioned way.

A good housekeeper in Bergen county, New Jersey, says that she adds a teaspoonful of turpentine to the water she mixes her stove-blacking with. She lets the stove become almost cold before blacking.

Courage.

Courage is frequently thought to be the absence of fear. Yet, if there were no fear there would be no room for courage. If we did not fear the water and fire, no courage would be required to plunge into them to save a fellow creature from destruction. If a child had no fear of the dark, we should not appeal to his courage to face it. Fear has an important mission to perform for us—that of warning against danger—and it will and ought to continue as long as danger or evil of any kind continues to threaten us. When its presence is felt, however, two opposite courses are open to us—the one to shrink, or yield, or run away, the other to face the danger, whatever it be, with steadiness, resolution and strength. The one is the path of cowardice, the other of courage, and the greater the fear the more sublime is that courage which can stand firm in its presence and unshrinkingly pursue the path of duty.

PERHAPS THEY WERE TWINS.

A Singular Story of Robbery and Murder.

About twenty years ago a robber entered the farmhouse of John West in Ottawa, and, being discovered while prowling around the house, he shot West in order that he might make his escape. The hour was midnight, and there was a bright harvest moon lighting up the room in which the shooting took place. West had a club beside his bed, and he gave the intruder a powerful blow with this before the shot was fired. The bullet entered his abdomen, and he lived about three days and was perfectly conscious all the time. He declared on his dying bed that his murderer was a young man named Solomon Richards, a lawless character who hung about the village two miles away. Mrs. West recognized him as well, and when Richards was arrested and charged with the crime he did not deny it. There wasn't the slightest doubt of his guilt, and but for the firmness of the Sheriff the fellow would have been lynched. He had been in jail two weeks before

HE DECLARED HIS INNOCENCE.

As he had no money he could not engage a lawyer but he made a statement to the Sheriff, which set that official at work to prove an alibi for him. On the night of the shooting Richards had sat in the village tavern from 8 to 10 o'clock. This could be verified. When he left the tavern he visited two saloons, but this could not be verified. Several persons were almost sure of having seen him, but no one was positive. At 10½ o'clock he went to a livery stable and climbed up on the hay to sleep. He claimed to have spoken to a hostler named Warner, but when Warner was consulted he could not be sure whether it was that night or the one preceding it. On his way from the saloon to the barn Richard's encounted a person who was dressed like himself, and whose general resemblance was very striking. Both halted and looked each other over as if astounded, but neither spoke.

Not one man in a hundred would have taken any stock in such a story, but the Sheriff, singular as it may seem, believed that Richards was telling the truth. West had STRUCK THE MAN WITH A CLUB.

Richards had not the slightest wound or bruise. The pistol with which the shooting was done had been left behind. No one about the village had ever seen it before. How could Richards who never had a dollar at a time have purchased it? He was on the street, perfectly unconcerned, when arrested. If he was guilty why had he waited right there to be taken into custody, when the farmer had called out: "Sol Richards, you have shot me, but I'll live to see you hung!"

All these points were overlooked by everybody except the Sheriff. Mr. and Mrs. West declared that Sol Richards was the man; that was evidence enough, especially when Sol was a good-for-nothing. Three weeks had passed when the Sheriff got track of a man who had passed a toll gate at an early morning hour, carrying a bundle. Further on he found that the man with the bundle had a bloody ear. Five miles further and he had entered a farm-house, alleged he had met with an accident, and had a scalp wound dressed. He had journeyed a hundred miles before the Sheriff overtook him, but here and there he had sold fragments of his plunder. When finally overhauled and arrested he admitted his crime almost before a question was asked. He was a professional tramp, and robbery was nothing new to him. He was not only but he resembled him so closely in height, build, weight and facial expression that people came to the jail and called him Richards. He gave his name as Terry, but as he could remember little or nothing of his childhood, and as this was also the case with Richards, it was generally believed that they were twin brothers. The one was released as an innocent man, and the other was sent to prison for such a long term as practically assured his death within the gloomy walls.

Not "Smart."

Of all forms of bad breeding, the pert, smart manner affected by boys and girls of a certain age is the most offensive and impertinent. One of these so-called smart boys was once employed in the office of the treasurer of a Western railroad. He was usually left alone in the office between the hours of eight and nine in the morning, and it was his duty to answer the questions of all callers as clearly and politely as possible.

One morning a plainly dressed old gentleman walked quietly in, and asked for the cashier.

"He's out," said the boy, without looking up from the paper he was reading.

"Do you know where he is?"

"No."

"When will he be in?"

"'Bout nine o'clock."

"It's nearly that now, isn't it? I haven't Western time."

"There's the clock," said the boy smartly, pointing to a clock on the wall.

"Oh yes; thank you," said the gentleman. "Ten minutes until nine. Can I wait here for him?"

"I s'pose so, though this isn't a public hotel."

The boy thought this was smart, and he chuckled aloud over it. He did not offer the gentleman a chair, or lay down the paper he held.

"I would like to write a note while I wait," said the caller; "will you please get me a piece of paper and an envelope?"

The boy did so, and as he handed them to the old gentleman, he coolly said,—

"Anything else?"

"Yes," was the reply. "I would like to know the name of such a smart boy as you are."

The boy felt flattered by the word "smart," and wishing to show the full extent of his smartness, replied,—

"I'm one of John Thompson's kids, William by name, and I answer to the call of 'Billy.' But here comes the boss!"

The "boss" came in, and, seeing the stranger, cried out,—

"Why, Mr. Smith, how do you do? I'm delighted to see you. We——"

But John Thompson's "kid" heard no more. He was looking around for his hat. Mr. Smith was president of the road, and Billy heard from him later, to his sorrow. Any one needing a boy of Master Billy's peculiar "smartness" might secure him, as he is still out of employment.

HEALTH.

Is Medicine a Progressive Science?

There is still no doubt, a vast amount of suffering and disease among us, but it would be folly to deny that the difference between the past and the present is immense. The stethoscope has made it as easy to detect a damaged heart or an inefficient lung as a broken leg. The ophthalmoscope enables us to explore the innermost recesses of the eye, while with the laryngoscope we can have ocular proof of the condition of the windpipe. The microscope enlightens us to the true nature of growths, and such timely information often makes it possible to check their development. Anæsthetics have robbed surgery of all its cruelty and half its danger; they have moreover extended its sphere of action, for operations are now frequently performed which formerly could not have been attempted. The introduction of the antiseptic method has largely increased the proportion of recoveries after severe wounds and mutilations, and has also done much to insure the safety of the lying-in chamber. The necessity of cutting for stone is now obviated by measures which involve neither pain nor serious risk, and there can be little doubt that the operation will in the course of the next 50 years become obsolete in civilized countries. Smallpox is no longer the standing menace to beauty that it once was, while it is scarcely taken into account as a possible danger of life by ordinary people. Typhoid fever still claims many victims, though it is being gradually driven off the field by an enlightened hygiene; typhus is almost unknown except in the lowest and most squalid haunts of poverty. Madness is now treated as a bodily disease, not as a curse of God or spite of the devil, the result being a large proportion of recoveries, and infinitely less suffering among the incurable. A like improvement is seen in other branches of the medical art. The loathsome compounds—invented, one might suppose, by a council of ghouls and scavengers—which used to be ordered, no longer vex the palates or upheave the stomachs of unfortunate patients; the active principle of the most important remedies has been separated, so that the agent can be administered in a purer and more efficient form, while the physiological action of the drug is determined by experiment and is taken as the index of its therapeutic value. Less physic is given, but it is prescribed with a clearer purpose. Better still, more attention is paid to diet and the hygienic surroundings of the patient, and, above all, nature is less incumbered with the officious help of a blind ally who insists on aiding her with a zeal that is not according to knowledge. The truth has at last been borne in on the medical mind that many diseases run a certain definite course on which no medicine has any effect for good, though it may have for evil, and that accordingly a policy of masterly inactivity is the wisest in such cases. The physical changes wrought by disease and the morbid processes which give rise to them are now to a certain extent accurately known, and this field of inquiry promises to be increasingly fruitful of solid result. Some scattered rays of light, too, are beginning to pierce the shroud of darkness which formerly made the origin of disease a more impenetrable mystery than the source of the Nile. This marks one of the greatest advances in the history of medicine, and its practical importance is obviously incalculable. The cause clearly known, the effect can often be removed, or, better still, prevented. Specific fevers may possibly be banished from among men, and even those fell scourges, consumption and cancer, may in course of time be stamped out. One disease after another is traced to the action of organisms infinitesimal in size, but having an almost inconceivable power of self-multiplication. From leprosy to a cold in the head the "conqueror worm" is credited with the generation of almost every form of disorder; where it has not yet been found it is suspected. In a word, the sign Bacillus is in the ascendant in the medical firmament.

A Nation of Contradictions.

Some Eastern nations are made up of contradictions. The Bengalee frankly says, "I am timid," and dies with a calmness that a brave man might envy. The Chinese have little physical courage, but they will commit suicide if an enemy may be thereby injured. At Honkow, a Chinese barber prosecuted one of his men for stealing two dollars. The man committed suicide, not for shame, because theft is not discreditable in China, but to spite his master.

As soon as he was dead, his widow went before a mandarin and proved to him that her husband's death had been caused by his master's prosecution. The mandarin condemned the barber to pay one hundred and and twenty dollars for the support of the widow.

The house-boats throng with children, and, with all the care in the world, they do fall into the river. To guard against that contingency, a cord is tied around the waist of each male child, to which is attached a float. But no female child is provided with a float; they may drown and welcome.

Boys are prized. The punishment for stealing a male child is death. But girls are considered an expensive nuisance, and frequently die from lack of care. Their bodies are towed into the nearest hole. A large ditch outside of Foo chow was so much used for the purpose that the authorities posted the notice: "Female infants may not be thrown here."

The people seem to be indifferent to human suffering, however piteous. "One day in Foochow," writes an English officer, "the struggles of a drowning man absorbed the interest of a crowd, who made not the slightest effort to rescue him.

"A bystander, unable to obtain a clear view, expressed a doubt whether the man had really perished, whereupon the irritated mob immediately tossed the sceptic into the river with the remark, 'Go and look after him yourself.' He, too, perished."

The author of "English Life in China" writes that it is a country "where roses have no fragrance, the women no petticoats, and the magistrates no honor; where old men fly kites, and puzzled people scratch their backs instead of their heads; where the seat of honor is on the left, and the abode of intellect is in the stomach; where to take off your hat is insolent, and to wear white is to wear mourning; where, finally, there is a literature without an alphabet, and a language without a grammar."

Refreshing Ignorance.

It is sometimes very trying to be found looking in knowledge on certain points with which the rest of the world is evidently conversant. Fortunately, however, we do not always appreciate our mistakes.

"How do you like Tennyson?" said a young man to a society belle, as they chatted between dances.

"Oh," said she, innocently, "I never was there. Is it a pretty place?"

Her partner's reply is not recorded.

A lady who had travelled in Europe was expatiating to an acquaintance upon the wonders which she had seen there. She had just finished a fluent description of the famous Strasburg clock, when her friend inquired,—

"And did you see the celebrated 'Watch on the Rhine'?"

But these are the people who are ignorant of what they should have known, and who succeed in being simply amusing. There do come times, however, when a certain kind of ignorance is refreshing.

When Longfellow translated the "Divina Commedia," every one was obliged, by the example of the learned, to admire it, and a knowledge of Dante at once became imperative. The name of the great Italian was in the mouth of the fashionable and the would-be "cultured" classes of society from morning till night. When the rage was at its height, a stranger arrived in Boston to whom a friend, a native of the city, at once put the pertinent inquiry,—

"Do you like Dante?"

"No," was the answer. "I don't know him. Who is he?"

"Come along!" cried his delighted friend. "Keep me in countenance. It isn't respectable not to like Dante. I'm the only man in Massachusetts who doesn't, and I detest his very name. Come to dinner with me!"

A Boy's Courage.

Do the lads of this generation declaim that poetical tribute to youthful heroism which extols the boy who "stood on the burning deck, whence all but him had fled"? When we were boys, there was scarcely a "Declamation Day" on which we did not hear it recited. It may be that the years since then have been so freighted with examples of boyish heroism that no boy now cares for "Casablanca."

One of these later, and, to our thinking, more attractive examples of youthful heroism occurred at the outbreak of the Sepoy mutiny in 1857. Just before the awful storm broke, the system of electric telegraphs had been extended over the surface of British India.

The mutineers rushed to Delhi, to seize upon the old hereditary seat of the Mohammedan Empire, and began cutting the throats of Europeans. While the rattle of cannon and musketry was rolling around the telegraph office, a little English boy, moved by the English sense of duty, stuck to his post until he had telegraphed to the Commissioner at Lahore. The message announced that the mutineers had arrived at Delhi, and had murdered this civilian and that officer, and wound up with these significant but child-like words, "We're off!"

The boy's courage and sense of duty saved the Punjab. As soon as the telegram reached Lahore, the general in command of the Sepoys disarmed them. When they learned of the rising at Delhi, they were powerless to do any injury.

The general flashed the awful news to Peshawur. The Hindoostanee regiments there were also disarmed, and, though mutineers at heart, were rendered incapable of harm.

Then the telegraph was cut by the rebels—but the boy at Delhi had saved Northern India to the British crown. The officer in charge had been killed, but that brave lad stayed long enough at the instrument to despatch the warning.

Pretty Fair-Sized Hailstones.

Specials from Elgin Manor, and Paige say that these places and the surrounding neighborhoods were visited the other evening by heavy storms, inflicting great damage. At Elgin there was a terrific thunder, rain, and hail storm, which deluged a part of the town. Nearly every building had windows broken and holes knocked in the roofs. Hail fell varying in size from a marble to a man's hand, and perforated iron and tin roofs. A piece of hailstone was picked up that weighed seven pounds. The Methodist church was blown from its foundations and demolished. The Baptist church was moved slightly out of line. One man was struck down by a hailstone and seriously injured.

At Manor the storm did indescribable damage to crops, hailstones falling as large as hen's eggs. Three churches and many other buildings were badly damaged.

At Paige the storm was severe. There was a very heavy rainfall. Only slight damage was done to crops or buildings.

At Mexia the storm wrecked one church and several small houses, unroofed others, and badly injured the corn crop. No lives were lost, the people hastily seeking shelter in storm houses when the gale approached.

A Courtship by Means of a Bible Text.

A young gentleman happening to sit at church in a pew adjoining one in which sat a young lady, for whom he conceived a sudden and violent passion, was desirous of entering into a courtship on the spot; but the place not suiting a formal declaration, the exigency of the case suggested the following plan:

He politely handed his fair neighbor a Bible, (open,) with a pin stuck in the following text: Second Epistle of John, verse fifth—"And now I beseech thee, lady, not as though I wrote a new commandment unto thee, but that which we had from the beginning, that we love one another."

She returned it, pointing to the second chapter of Ruth, verse tenth:

"Then she fell on her face, and bowed herself to the ground, and said unto him: 'Why have I found grace in thine eyes, that thou shouldst take knowledge of me, seeing that I am a stranger?'"

He returned the book, pointing to the thirteenth verse of the Third Epistle of John:

"Having many things to write unto you, I would not write with paper and ink, but I trust to come unto you, and speak face to face, that our joy may be full."

From the above interview a marriage took place the ensuing week.

It had ...grown dark when Loyd ran across the ...grounds, a distance of about 300 feet, to ...drive away a cow which seemed determined ...to break in. He was not absent over seven ...or eight minutes, but when he returned to ...the summer house he found his wife lying ...on the floor insensible. She had been struck ...a hard blow on top of the head. Her slippers and stockings had been removed and ...thrown on the grass, and a lot of dry ashes ...had been sprinkled over her clothing and ...person. When she recovered consciousness ...she had no information to give. She did not ...even know when she was struck.

...It now seemed apparent that the perpetrator of these outrages must be a resident of ...the village, and that he must be actuated by ...pure devilry. None of the women had been ...assaulted beyond what had been stated, and ...no motive in going that far could be nothing ...else than what a plain-speaking man ...would call cussedness. The detective was ...recalled, and certain persons who had heretofore escaped all suspicion were placed under ...surveillance. The last assault had

CREATED A REIGN OF TERROR

...among the women, not one of whom dared ...put her foot outside the house after dark ...unless accompanied by an escort.

...While the detective was still in the town, ...and a number of leading citizens were acting ...as spies and patrols, the fourth outrage occurred. The wife of a citizen named Warner ...drove to the cemetery in the afternoon, accompanied by her son, a boy of 16, to decorate one of her children's graves. In transplanting the flowers it became necessary to ...have considerable water, and the boy went to ...a creek about twenty rods away with a pail. ...The cemetery was thick with trees, and he ...lost sight of his mother for five or six minutes. When he returned he found her ...lying on the ground unconscious, with ...finger marks plainly visible on her throat, ...her sleeves and stockings had been removed, ...her hair cut off, and the rings torn out of ...her ears and flung down. The only explanation she could make was that a human ...hand had suddenly grasped her throat. She ...had heard no footstep, nor had she caught ...a glimpse of anybody. The detective at once ...visited the cemetry, and in a brief time the ...enclosure was thoroughly searched, but nothing came of it. One side of it was bordered by an extensive field not under cultivation, and on the far side of this field was a ...forest. One could easily have escaped in ...that direction before a search was instituted.

As may be supposed, public indignation was now at the boiling point. The detectives and everybody else was helpless, when a woman made a suggestion. It was that the detective dress himself in female attire and "lay low" for the mysterious villain. The idea was carried out that very night, but it was a week before the climax came. One night about 9 o'clock the disguised officer left a house where he had seemingly been visiting, and he halted at the gate to say good night and to have the people of the house hope that he would get home all right. It was on a retired street, thick with shade, and unlighted, and the officer was as alert as a fox. He had not gone 500 feet when a figure and grasped his throat. The assailant was shaken off and grasped in turn, and then a terrible struggle took place. Not a word was uttered by either. The one sought to get away, the other to handcuff his man. This feat the officer finally accomplished, and when he conducted his prisoner to the village lockup the mystery was at once solved. He proved to be a half-witted fellow named Orson Tayler, living with his father on a farm a couple of miles from the village. Orson was unmarried, about 30 years old, and known around the country as a half fool. He had never been known to commit an offense against the law, and for this reason was not suspected of any of the outrages above detailed. He preserved a sullen silence when questioned, and when a commission of doctors had reported on his case he was sent to an insane asylum instead of being arrainged in court. He soon became a raving maniac, and died in about a year.

A NORTH-WEST VOLCANO.

Hunters Have a Remarkable Experience on the Manitou River.

A most startling story has come to light. A party of five young gentlemen from the maritime provinces, under the guidance of an Indian guide left Ottawa a couple of weeks ago to hunt in the Manitou river district in the North West territories. The five sportsmen have returned home, with no game, but instead they came burdened with a most marvelous story of a burning mountain in their hunting district. The parties' names are: Messrs. Sutton, Williamson, Van Horne, Cribbs, and Alexander. The district in which they were hunting lies about fifty miles to the south of the Canadian Pacific railway line from Brule, on the high lands just north of the Manitou river. This locality is just north of the United States boundary line, from Black Duck lake in Minnesota. They reported having left Brule together with their guide, and going south, when they met a mountaineer's family on the way into the town, with all their goods and chattels, packed on a couple of lean-looking horses. The mother carried a and two little girls, whose tow heads were fleece grown, toddled on bare feet after. The father, two sons and a daughter led the way. Their appearance showed that they were leaving hastily for some reason, and on being interviewed by the would-be hunters, they said that they were fleeing from the region in which they had lived on account of some terrible fire. They had lived from hand to mouth on a patch of cleared ground, on a mountain's side whose base formed a portion of the Manitou river's bank; that the terrible fire was somewhere over behind or in under the mountain; that no smoke was visible, but that the air was stifling hot, and the river, at certain points, so hot that the fish died in it. The first intimation that the father, whose name is Malcolm, had of this strange phenomenon was the unusual sight of a great number of dead fish in the Manitou, whose ice had, earlier than usual, broken up this year in their vicinity, but to his suprise the ice had remained the normal length of time, both above and below the place they had lived. Strangely hot winds also came down into the valley, whilst elsewhere the atmosphere was of wintry chilliness.

The hunters in tracing the cause, found, evidently, that the reasons of the farmer's great excitement lay in the fact of the subterranean heat in the mountain's side, which extended under the river's bed; and about a mile up that it had heated the water, which runs slowly at that point, until steam rose from the surface near the banks. This was faintly noticeable for a short distance further up, and beyond which the water by degrees resumed its normal state. The atmosphere was found to be very warm, and the slightest exertion brought out the perspiration. At a point near to where the farmer had lived the hunters found the air to be almost stifling, and there also the earth was too hot in places to lay the hand upon. Nothing else was noticeable, the mountains being bleak and bare from winter. But further back upon its sides the heat was absolutely unbearable, and after climbing up its thickly-wooded sides for two or three hundred feet the hardy hunters were forced to return, the air being unbreathable. Animals had left their retreats, birds steered clear of the locality, and not a living thing was to be seen. The earth was dry and cracked with the heat. Dead snakes without number, and vermin, were discovered by the hunters. The heat, instead of diminishing, was found to increase the higher they went up the mountain's side, and the cracks in the earth widened and new ones appeared, and the LOCALITY BECAME UNINHABITABLE.

THE STREAM BECAME SO HOT

It was no wonder, they say, that the terror-stricken family, depressed in the knowledge that something strange and terrible was going to take place in the earth beneath them, and living in the midst of stifling hot winds, whose increasing heat brought to terrified and ignorant minds pictures of burning fields and volcanoes, had resolved to abandon the uncomfortable locality.

The town of Brule is very much excited over the extraordinary discovery, and a party about half a dozen has started for the scene of the burning mountain. It is about five or ten miles from any habitation at present existing. Men well acquainted with the geology of the province declare that the location of this volcanic area has been fixed to a nicety, and might be with reason expected. Their theory is that the bituminous coal, in which this mountain range is known to be rich, has by some phenomenal means become ignited, the vast and smouldering mass, far down in the mountain's heart, thus making a mighty cauldron of the Manitou river's bed.

A Woman's Age.

A woman, it is said, is no older than she looks. Many women, however, look double their actual age by reason of those functional disorders which wear upon the nerves and vitality, and which, if unchecked, are liable to change the most robust woman to a weak, broken-down invalid. Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" will positively cure every irregularity and weakness peculiar to the sex, and requires but a single trial to prove its surpassing merit. Price reduced to one dollar. By druggists.

"What's in a name?" a recent traveller was heard to exclaim. "Why, about the hottest country on the globe is Chili."

The Nineteenth Century Club is an organization that will consist of an equal number of men and women. It is hardly to be expected that they will agree on all subjects; but it can surprise no one to learn that Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," is unanimously pronounced the most successful remedy extant, for pulmonary consumption, as has been demonstrated in hundreds of cases; it positively arrests this disease and restores health and strength, if administered in its early stages. By druggists.

The ear easily catches the heart's whispers.

Young or middle-aged men, suffering from nervous debility or kindred affections, should address with 10 cents in stamps for large treatise, World's Dispensary Medical Association, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Mighty deeds are incompatible with many words.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Great Spring Medicine 50cts.

STREET WATERING.—The need of watering cart or some mode of watering the streets has been very much felt during the past two weeks. Some of our merchants have expressed a willingness to bear their share of the cost, while we doubt not, all would be glad to do likewise. Who will propose a scheme?

FATAL ACCIDENT.—We are pained to learn of the drowning of a son of Mr. Wm. Norton of Holland last Mon- day afternoon at Walter's Falls. It appears several young men went to bathe in the mill-pond, and while hav- ing a good time in a small boat, the boat upset and young Norton not be- ing able to swim, was drowned. He was some 17 years old. The body was recovered about an hour after the sad affair happened.

A directors meeting of the Glenelg Agricultural Society was held last Thursday, when a committee was appointed to revise the prize list for the fall show and also a committee to solicit special prizes. We trust each resident business man will assist and thereby greatly aid the society as well as benefit themselves. The directors meeting was adjourned until Friday the 23 inst. at 2 p.m., when they will make the final revision of the prize list before printing and appoint the date for the show.

A cordial invitation is extended to all.

FIRE! FIRE!!—On Saturday after- noon last our citizens were startled by the cry of fire, when James Henry's dwelling was found to be in a blaze; the prompt application of a few pails of water however quenched the devour- ing element before much damage was done. Cause, we believe, a de- fected stove pipe. No insurance. At 3.15 on monday morning the slumber- ing citizens were again aroused by the cry of fire! but before many arriv- ed on the scene the fire was subdued; this was the former dwelling of Mrs. Caswell which adjoins her Railroad House. It must have been set on fire. Damages slight. On the same morn- ing a fire occurred on the farm of Mr. Bowler, some two miles distant, and is still burning with unabated fury. Several cords of wood has already been destroyed and Mr. B. says fully 70,000 brick will be burnt by next Saturday.

Funny, But Important.

"Come, doctor, you are very skillful, I will give you the honor of carving." "With pleasure, Madam." And immediately the doctor begins his task. He is very absent-minded, and when he has finally made a deep cut in the ledge of mutton he stopps, takes a roll of linen and some lint out of pocket and carefully bandages the wound. Then, after regarding it criti- cally, he remarks, with professional gravity, while the guests are stupefied with astonishment: "There, with rest and good care, there is nothing to fear."

Talmage on Annexation.

KINGSTON, June 29.—During the isit of Kihgstonians to Alexandria Bay yesterday, in connection with the Y. M. C. A. excursion, Dr. Tal- mage was induced to make an address. In course of his remarks he said that his hearers were called Canadians and he was called an American, but he hoped that some day they might all decome one people. He could look fordward twenty, thirty, or fourty years, and imagine the United States Government, wi h lover's eyes, look- ing fondly towarbs the fair maiden Canadaand making an offer of mar- riage, whtle Miss Canada would look across the water and say "Ask Mother!"

PEOPLE

Prince Waldemar, of Denmark, has started on a scientific expedition to the coast of Greenland.

Annie Pixley, the well known actress, will spend her Summer holidays at her home in Port Stanley, Ont.

According to a Paris newspaper the Princess Pignatellia is serving as a waitress in a Vienna cafe concert hall.

Mrs. Gladstone, it is reported, will take an active part in the coming election campaign, in advancing her husband's cause.

Collis P. Huntington was once a farmer's boy in Connecticut. Now he is worth $40,000,000. He is 65 years old, and has a pleasant but rather gruff manner.

"It is wonderful how the lungs weaken when men get into the witness box," remarked Judge Rose, of Toronto, a day or two ago, as he exhorted a witness to speak up.

The Empress of Austria has gone to Lake Stranberg, Bavaria. She will afterwards visit Gastein, where she will remain until the arrival of the Empress of Germany.

Charles Crocker, the San Francisco railway magnate, is worth about $12,000,000. He is said to be plain, sensible and kind-hearted, and to possess marked practical ability.

James Creelman, a New York reporter, has made several of the highest balloon ascensions in the United States, has travelled 15,000 miles in a canoe, and can interview a Chinaman in the heathen's own language.

Mrs. Ketchum of Brantford, Ont., last week was christened into the Wolf tribe of Indians as "Neeskaletah," otherwise Prairie Rose. The ceremony was an honorary one, Mrs. Ketchum being a special friend of some members of the tribe.

Archibald Forbes, who was married recently to the daughter of General Meigs of the United States army, presented his bride elect with a necklace composed of twelve of the medals given him by European princes for deeds of valor.

Leopold Von Ranke, being once invited to lunch with the King of the Belgians, made himself so agreeable at table that the party remained seated listening to his talk till they were told to dress for dinner. This is regarded as the greatest triumph on record of genius over court etiquette.

Rev. W. S. Rainsford, of New York, formerly of Toronto, in a speech before the Congress of Churches, recently held at Cleveland, Ohio, pleaded for the abolition of the mission chapel, and spoke of the worthlessness of theatre services and tent services, compared with a fully manned free church.

Sir John Lubbock, the noted British scientist, exhibited at an Association meeting recently a very strange pet. It was a tame wasp which had been in his possession for about three months. It now ate sugar from his hand, and allowed him to stroke it. The wasp had every appearance of health and happiness; and, although it enjoyed an "outing" occasionally it readily returned to its bottle, which it seemed to regard as a home.

Chief Gardener Watkins, of the Horticultural Gardens, Toronto, thinks there is special virtue in rain water for plants. After a heavy shower which succeeded a prolonged drought last week, he remarked to a reporter: "You can use hose and watering can until you are old and bent, but you cannot do as much in a month as such a shower can do in ten minutes. Its the pure quill, fresh from the hillsides of the clouds, and there is more plant food in a quart of it than there is in a watering cart full of city water.

J. P. Jaffray and R. M. Jaffray are two Canadian brothers who publish in Chicago a weekly journal called the Canadian American, which not only publishes a great deal of news about Canadians in all parts of the United States, but also contains a complete epitome of news from all sections of the Canadian Dominion. Although living in the United States, the Jaffrays are very enthusiastic Canadians, and no Canadian newspaper takes a more hopeful view of the future of Canada and the permanency of the Confederation than does the Canadian American.

Francis Jeffrey Dickens, late Inspector in the North-West Mounted Police, whose death at Moline, Ill., was announced a day or two ago, was the fourth son of Charles Dickens. He was 41 years of age, was educated at Harrow and Cambridge; went to India as an officer in the Indian police force. Coming to Canada, through the influence of Lord Dufferin he secured an appointment in the North-West Mounted Police, and continued in that force until he resigned, on account of ill- health. Capt. Dickens, as of course every one remembers, was in command of Fort Pitt when attacked by the Indians during the late troubles.

Within the past two months Duke Charles Theodore, of Bavaria, assisted by his wife, has treated more than 1,000 eye patients, and performed 132 surgical operations. The Duke is a grandson of Maximilian I, King of Bavaria, and a cousin of Maxamilian II., father of the unfortunate monarch who has just committed suicide; and the Duchess who ably assists him in his successful medical and surgical practice is an Infanta of Portugal, the Princess Marie-Josephe-Beatrix-Jeanne-Eulalie-Leopoldine-Adelaide-Elizabeth-Caroline-Michaele-Raphaele-Gabrielle-Francois d'Assise et de Paule-Inez-Sophia-Joachime-Therese Benedicite-Bernadine. It is not compulsory upon her patients to address her by her full name.

The Boer's Retort.

The Transvaalers are generally offensively rude to Englishmen; but, as a rule, their insults lack point. There is, however, something almost like wit in the Boer's retort recorded by Mr. Aubertin in his "Six months in Cape Colony and Natal." After a hot wrangle: "What is the use of a handful of rude animals like you," said an Englishman, "pretending to beat a country like ours? Do you know that the sun never sets on the Queen's Dominions?" "What of that?" asked the Transvaaler. "Why, it shows our enormous power." "It rather shows something else, in my opinion." "What may that be?" "It shows you are such a set of rascals that Providence can't trust you in the dark!"

OUT OF THE ORDINARY.

A man in Matoon, Ill., has a peony plant over sixty years old.

In some places in Arizona there has been no rain in three years.

The seeds of many New Zealand plants are said to grow the better for being frozen.

An East Jordan, Mich., man is accused of hanging out a sign reading: "Knew Syder for sale."

An old man's prayer that his house should burn was answered after his death at Carthage, Tenn., last week.

A New York woman of social distinction has offered to pay an author if he will make her the heroine of a novel.

Miss Lilian Smith, of California, a young lady of fourteen years, has broken 325 glass balls in succession with the rifle.

A German inventor is building at a cost of $125,000, a balloon five hundred feet in length, to be operated by steam. He is very sanguine of success, and has been offered $150,000 for his patent.

A medical journal tells of a young woman who contracted the habit of chewing coffee. The habit grew until she carried the coffee to bed with her, and at last she consumed half a pound a day.

Glass plates have been substituted for copper in the sheathing of an Italian ship, the advantage claimed being exemption from oxidation and incrustation. The glass was cut in plates to fit the hull.

A compositor in the Pittsburg Dispatch office whose name contains seven letters, in making up his string found that he had set 77,777 ems in the seven days of last week. He is also a member of T. U. No. 7.

The manufacture of solid carbonic acid gas has become a settled industry in Berlin. It is put up in small cylinders, and if kept under pressure will last some time—that is, a cylinder one and one-half inch in diameter and two inches long will take five hours to melt away into gas.

A farmer named Cook, of Calhoun, Ala., has a curiosity in the shape of an egg that is a very remarkable freak of nature. The egg measures ten inches in length, and when broken was found to contain another well-developed, fully-shelled egg. The enterprising hen that laid this remarkable egg, did so at the expense of her life.

There was an exhibit at the semi-annual meeting of the Connecticut Valley Dental Society, in Hartford, of a set of teeth taken from a tomb near the city of Rome. It is asserted that they had been there at least twenty-five hundred years. The teeth are held in place by a band of gold, artistically worked in fancy carvings, the figures being so minute that a magnifying glass is necessary to bring out their beauty.

Every poison, it is said, has its antidote, and the latest discovery claimed by the medical science in this respect is that the water-cress completely neutralizes the deleterious effects of tobacco. Smokers who think that they have experienced injurious effects from the use of one weed will hasten to avail themselves of the remedial properties of the other, and in a very short time we shall undoubtedly find that water-cress has become a fashionable and popular article of diet.

The latest invention of comfort for tourists is a new traveling cap, made with an air cushion in the back. Ordinarily, it is just like any other traveling cap, but when you want to rest your head on the seat back, and don't want all the hair on the back of your head rubbed off, all you have to do is to put your mouth down to the opening, blow up the little bag and put in a cork. Then you put your cap on your head, and there you are, with as nice a cushion as a man could ask for. It is the invention of a train boy.

FOR THE THOUGHTFUL.

Were we as eloquent as angels, we should please some more by listening than by talking.

For drunkenness, drink cold water health, rise early; to be happy, be honest; to please all, mind your own business.

Inquisitive people are the funerals of conversation; they do not take in anything for their own use, but merely to pass it to another.

Life, at the greatest and best, is but a froward child that must be humored and coaxed a little till it falls asleep, and than all the care is over.

Wrong-doing is a road that may open fair, but it leads to trouble and danger. Well-doing, however rough and thorny at first, surely leads to pleasant places.

Good manners is the art of making those people easy with whom we converse; whoever makes the fewest persons uneasy, is the best bred man in company.

A wise man's heart is like a bread hearth that keeps the coals (his passions) from burning the house. Good deeds in this life are coals raked up in embers, to make a fire next day.

The chief element in true growth is growth in love, no man is making permanent growth in character, who is not growing in sympathy, in pity, in helpfulness, in all that connects him with his fellow-men.

The world is governed by three things—wisdom, authority and appearance. Wisdom for thoughtful people, authority for rough people, and appearances for the great mass of superficial people who can look only at the outside.

We are inclined to think that the Christian character consists not in great acts, sublime deeds, inspired or inspiring words. It consists rather in the spirit of acts than acts, rather in the motive of deeds than deeds, rather in the reason of words than words.

Real merit of any kind cannot long be concealed; it will be discovered and nothing can depreciate it but a man's exhibiting it himself. It may not always be rewarded as it ought; but it will always be known.

The real difference between men is energy. A strong will, a settled purpose and invincible determination can accomplish almost anything; and on this lies the distinction between great men and little men.

Irregularity and want of method are supportable only in men of great learning or genius, who are often too full to be exact, and therefore choose to throw down their pearls in heaps before the reader rather than be at the pains of stringing them.

HYDROPHOBIA OR BEE STING.

Death Following a Sting from a Bee Bitten by a Dog Ten Months Before.

Robert Robinson, the 16 year-old son of Col. John Robinson, has just died at Wadesboro of hydrophobia. In August last a strange dog came to his house and attacked one of the yard dogs. Robert went to the rescue of his dog and was bitten on the arm by the strange dog, which then ran off. It attacked several other dogs while running away but was finally killed. Robert's family feared the results of the bite, as all the evidence indicated that the dog was mad, but so long a time elapsed without evil consequences that their fears entirely ceased.

On Tuesday last, the young man was stung by a bee on the arm bitten by the dog. Robert suffered great pain. On Saturday morning, while engaged in conversation with his mother, she observed that Robert had fallen into a strange mood, laughing frequently outright and immederately without apparent cause. He admitted there was nothing to laugh at, but that he could not help it. His father being informed of his peculiar condition, and at the same time discovering unusual nervousness in the patient, suggested taking him to a physician, but proposed first to give Robert a milk toddy to quiet his nerves. The sight of the liquid threw the young man into violent convulsions, which continued until several of the physicians of Wadesboro and vicinity arrived. The most powerful opiates were administered, and even the profuse application of chloroform failed to keep him quiet long at a time. He foamed at the mouth, gnashing his teeth in the effort to bite the attendants about the bedside. In his lucid intervals, although brief, the poor victim gave every evidence of intelligence, talking with those around him of his awful condition, and, realizing that he must die, he expressed a resignation to God's will, and prayed that all others might be spared the fate that had befallen him.

Frightful Waste.

Consumption carries off its thousands of victims every year. Yes, thousands of human lives are being wasted that might be saved, for the fact is now established that consumption, in its early stages, is curable. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will, if used in time, effect a permanent cure. It has no equal as a remedy for bronchitis, coughs and colds. Its efficacy has been proved in thousands of cases. All druggists.

Many ostrich tips are being used.

"Be wise to-day; 'tis madness to defer." Don't neglect your cough. If you do your fate may be that of the countless thousands who have done likewise, and who to-day fill consumptives' graves. Night-sweats, spitting of blood, weak lungs, and consumption itself if taken in time can be cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." This wonderful preparation has no equal as a remedy for lung and throat diseases. All druggists.

Tan and dove colors are popular.

The huge, drastic, griping, sickening pills are fast being superseded by Dr. Pierce's "Purgative Pellets."

"We must draw the line somewhere," said the vigilence committee to the horse thief.

Don't use any more nauseous purgatives such as Pills, Salts, &c., when you can get in Dr. Carson's Stomach Bitters, a medicine that moves the Bowels gently, cleansing all impurities from the system and rendering the Blood pure and cool. Great Spring Medicine 50cts.

Anxiety and care can destroy the healthiest body; fright and fear, even excess of joy, may become deadly.

YOUNG FOLKS.

The Despised Flower.

No one knew how it came there, that ugly sunflower, with its gaudy yellow ... Perhaps a bird dropped the tiny ...; perhaps the south wind wafted it from ... country, far away over the restless ..., but certainly the gardener did not ... such a thing amongst the lovely flow... of the garden.

In this garden were lovely dewy pink ... red roses, yellow roses, white roses, ... lillies, drooping fuschias, graceful ... shy purple and gold pansies, conceited ... columbs, pert sweet williams and hun... of other flowers. They looked upon ... sunflower as an intruder and despised it ... disdainingly, but in spite of their scorn it ... went on growing taller and taller, till it ... could see over the high garden wall into the ... busy road beyond.

"What are you good for, you big weed? Do ... ladies ever wear your yellow blossoms?" ... a red rose gaily nodding in the wind. "You do not smell sweet," murmured a ... violet.

"And you are not pretty," said a pink hy... ... trying to catch a glimpse of herself ... the fish-pond.

"Yellow and brown—ugh!" said a tiger ..., tossing her head till the air was fragrant ... her sweet breath. "What a vulgar ... combination!"

"You are very useless," observed a bit of ... sweet marjeram. "Beauty is nothing; ... usefulness is everything." You ought to ... be pulled.

"Whoever"—began the jessamine—but ... what she was going to say is lost to the ..., for just then a gay party of young ... people came flitting down the walk, laugh... and chatting as only young people can ... One young lady—the sunflower thought—... must be the queen. But her crown was of ... fair hair, and the white hand holding ... the trailing velvet robe had no jewels on ...

She came slowly forward, looking up at ... sunflower with eyes as blue as the fring... gentians at her feet. She broke off one ... of the flowers and pinned it on her belt.

"Fie, Helen," cried a chorus of gay young ...; "do you see any beauty in that ger... thing?"

"Yes," Helen answered. "See how it ... pays a mute homage to the sun. See how it ... keeps turning its blossoms to the giver of ... life and beauty." Then she murmured ... softly:

> The parent sun who bade thee view
> Cold skies, and chilling moisture sip,
> Has clothed thee in his own bright hue,
> And touched with jet thy glowing lip.

She caressed the flower with her soft ..., and they passed on, leaving the poor ... senseless thing quite happy.

"Some one loves me," it whispered, and ... trembled softly from very joy.

But presently there was a shout and down ... the path came a curly-headed boy in pur... of a tired, frightened butterfly; but be... his cruel little hands could touch it it ... had settled itself safely on the topmost flow... out of their reach.

"Ugly old thing," cried the boy, his face ... red with passion, "if you weren't so tall I ... could get the butterfly." He caught the ... stalk and tried to shake the trembling insect ... down; when he found he could not he flung ... a handful of gravel at the flower and went ... away.

"Surely God put you here to help the op... pressed," said the weary butterfly. Then ... the sunflower felt so happy. "I am good ... for something," it said gladly, and rocked ... itself to and fro in the wind, rustling its ... leaves till the tired butterfly folded its wings ... and slept.

By and by the sun went down and the ... moon rose, and the fairies crept out from ... the flower's hearts to dance in the moonlight ... all except one poor little fairy with a ... broken wing, who climbed up the stalk and ... sobbed out its pitiful story on the yellow ... blossom's heart.

"You must be God's own flower, you ... beautiful sunbright thing," whispered the ... wounded fairy. How happy the sunflower ... felt as it rustled its leaves and swayed soft ... till the fairy was lulled to rest with the ... music of the leaves as the breeze murmured ... through them.

When the sun kissed open the gentians' ... blue eyes, both butterfly and fairy were ..., but their blessing lay deep in the sun... flower's heart.

There came down the hot, dusty road a ... barefooted child, with soft dark Southern ... eyes, and she bent down the stalk and kiss... ed the yellow flower and laid her hot, dark ... face against it, murmuring: "Ah, bright, ... pretty flower! I love you—I love you.

"Was there ever a flower as happy as I ...?" cried the sunflower, nodding and sway... ing till one bright flower fell like a shower ... of gold all over the child's hair and in the ... dust. She gathered up the scattered leaves ... and went on, holding them lightly in her ... little hands.

Now came the gardener filling his basket ... with flowers. "What!" he cried, "the ... finest flower still! How tall it has grown—... what great, gorgeous blossoms!"

Now thought the sunflower proudly, he ... will put my flower in the basket with the ...

But ne—up—rip—rip came the whole ..., roots and all, and the next minute it ... was lying out in the road. "Now I must ..." it said sadly—but just then a wee rag... child picked it up and carried it off; ... it was planted in a dark cellar, where ... sun never came, and in this dark place a ... little child was slowly breathing its life ... away.

"I am content," said the brave sunflow... er, "if it is God's will." Then it bloomed out ... flowers that brightened up the dark ... so the child actually ceased and stretch... ed its little hands out to the bright bless... oms.

"Baby will get well," cried the little sis... ter, clapping her hands for joy. But, alas! ... when the morrow's sun shone over the beau... tiful garden a little child lay dead in the ... dark cellar—one more little soul had joined ... the angels.

After the child was buried a woman pull... ed the sunflower up and thrust it into a dir... ty alley, where it lay all day, wilted and ... slowly fading as the little child had. But ... soon more the little sister found it, and the ... tears she shed over it seemed to put new ... life in it.

She planted it by a little lone grave, and ... every day this sad little sister would come ... to pray,—

"Please, God take me to the beautiful ... heaven where Baby is."

THE INSANITY OF GEORGE III.

Sketch of His Case by a Great English Specialist.

George III., who was on the throne for fifty-nine years, and who died at the ripe old age of 82, had no less than five distinct attacks of insanity. The first attack showed itself in 1766, after he had been on the throne for five years, when he was only 27 years of age. From this period until 1810 he had relapses, amounting to five attacks in all. He made, apparently, complete recoveries from all these except the last, which occurred ten years before he died.

These periodical attacks of insanity were of short duration, the average being six months. The symptoms of the first were studiously kept from the world at large and from the members of his family and household. During his illness seven physicians ministered to his wants. Pitt was rather astonished at having revealed to him some important State secrets from the King. His condition was one of melancholia, attended with shedding of tears and much constitutional mischief. He was irritable; no one dared to oppose him or to contradict him in anything. He did not often realize his real mental state, but would declare that he was as well as he had ever been in his life. He would, without any reason, become dissatisfied with his Ministers and draw up a list of fresh ones. Dr. Warren was his chief and favorite physician. This eminent Doctor was, in addition to being the royal physician, also retained as medical attendant by the leading statesmen of the time—Burke, Fox, and Sheridan. He was considered to be the head of his profession.

Dr. Warren being a general physician, it was ultimately considered desirable to have a specialist in attendance on him. The Rev. Dr. Francis Willis was chosen for this object. In addition to ministering to the spiritual wants of his parishioners, he would try his skill in brain affections, and to such an extent were his efforts successful that he established an institution for the care of the insane, and, having made a name in that branch of his profession, was chosen as the "mad doctor" to the King. Though at the age of seventy years when appointed to the post of medical specialist to George III., he fully retained his talents and faculties to the very utmost, "a man of ten thousand, open, honest, dauntless, light-hearted, innocent, and high-minded." He took up his residence at the palace, being always in attendance on his Majesty.

The medical treatment was arranged in a morning consultation; and it was understood by the other doctors that that Dr. Willis was not to undertake any decided step in the treatment of his patient until after the physicians had met, the other doctors visiting in stated order and rotation.

Two surgeons and apothecaries were also retained, doing their amount of duty as prescribed. The medicinal treatment was purely of a tonic and saline description, the remedy principally used being cinchona bark. At the time of which I write mechanical restraint occupied a prominent part in the management of the insane, and to this now almost expleded form of treatment the King was subjected. There was nothing, however, in his condition which justified the use of it, judging from our present view of the matter.

The King himself did not after his convalescence regard the restraint system as harsh, for one day walking through the palace after his recovery from one of his attacks, he remarked: "It is the best friend I ever had in my life," alluding to a strait waistcoat, which had not been put away. In 1788 during his second attack, in consequence of its length and the questions before Parliament being of the most vital importance in their issue, it was found necessary to draw the attention of Parliament to the desirability of providing a regency to manage the State affairs. It was universally agreed that the Prince of Wales should act as Regent. There were, however, dissensions between the Whigs and Tories as to what powers he should assume in his regency.

A committee of the House was appointed to examine the physicians, the reports of such examination being laid on the table. A few days after this committee sat the following questions were submitted to the physicians: "Is his Majesty incapable by reason of the present state of his health of coming to Parliament or of attending to public business? What hopes are there of recovery? Is your answer on this question founded upon the particular symptom of his Majesty's case or your experience of the disorder in general? Can you form any judgment or probable conjecture of the time his Majesty's illness is likely to last? Can you assign any cause for his illness? Do you see any signs of convalescence?" The answers were not on the whole satisfactory, except the one relating to the probability of recovery, which was answered in the affirmative.

The King did recover, but only to have a further relapse, and during this time all public business was at a standstill. Lord Eldon, the Lord Chancellor, an intimate friend of the King, was held personally responsible for many of the strange actions performed by his Majesty during his mental derangement. This State of affairs went on until the time of his last seizure in 1812; though at times even then taking deep interest in politics, he was generally completely mentally incapacitated. He frequently shed tears. He fancied that he was dead, and one day remarked: "I must have a suit of black in memory of George III., for whom I know there is a general mourning." He talked to imaginary individuals, his memory a complete blank, especially for recent events. Toward the end of 1819 his appetite failed him, and in 1820 it was impossible to keep him warm, and he gradually sank and died Jan. 19, 1820.

Earthquakes and other Earth Movements

We are accustomed to think of the earth as something solid and fixed; and, as a testimonial of this impression, the Latin phrase terra firma, firm land or solid ground, has been naturalized in the languages of nearly all civilized peoples. On the other hand, we speak of water as unstable. But the geological history of the earth and the more careful observations of modern times have taught us that these ideas do not correctly represent the qualities of the land-masses and water-masses of the globe as compared with one another. The ancient shore-marks on the continents and the phenomena of elevation and subsidence that have been observed in historic times, confirming their evidence, shows that the land the and the ocean are continually changing the level as one another; and it has further been made evident, by experiment, as well as by a priori reasoning, that it is not the ocean that changes, but the land which undergoes alternate movements of elevation and depression. An earthquake shock is a phenomenon well adapted to destroy the faith of any person who feels one in the fixedness of the earth; and such, by the evidence, is the effect for the time on all who experience these shocks. Even the light pulsations which sometimes pass over part of the country occasion panic and excite a momentary impression that everything is falling over or sinking away; while the more violent shocks that are felt in earthquake-infested countries produce indescribable terror; and such catastrophes as these historical earthquakes of Lisbon and Caracas, and the more recent ones of Ischia and the Strait of Sunda amount to a demonstration that the reason for such terror is real, and that the continents also cannot escape the general law of change and perishability.

Earth-movements—the name by which these phenomena may be most conveniently described—are various, and comprise, so far as they are now considered, earthquakes, or sudden violent movements of the ground; earth-tremors, or minute movements which usually escape attention by the smallness of their amplitude; earth pulsations, or movements which are overlooked on account of the length of their period; and earth oscillations or movements of long period and large amplitude—like the shifting of levels of land masses—which attract attention from the geological importance. Some of these movements have only recently begun to attract attention. They are all intimately associated in their occurrence and their origin.

HEALTH.

Don't Check Pneumonia Suddenly!

A Boston merchant, in "landing a hand" on board one of his ships on a windy day, found himself at the end of an hour and a half, pretty well exhausted and perspiring freely. He sat down to rest, and, engaging in conversation, time passed faster than he was aware of. In attempting to rise, he found that he was unable to do so without assistance. He was taken home and put to bed, where he remained two years, and for a long time afterward could only hobble about with the aid of a crutch. Less exposures than this have resulted in inflammation of the lungs—"pneumonia"—ending in death. Let parents explain to their children, the danger which attends the cooling off too quickly after exercise, and the importance of not standing in a draught of air after exercise, or of sitting at an open window or door, or pulling off any garment, even the hat or bonnet, or going in bathing, while in a heat.

Sleep As a Medicine.

The cry for rest has always been louder than the cry for food, not that it is more important, but it is often harder to obtain. The best rest comes from sound sleep. Of two men or women, otherwise equal, the one who sleeps the best will be the most moral, healthy, and efficient. Sleep will do much to cure irritability of temper, peevishness, and uneasiness. It will restore to vigor an overworked brain. It will build up and make strong a weary body. It will cure a headache. Indeed, we might make a long list of nervous and other maladies that sleep will cure.

The cure of sleeplessness requires a clean, good bed, sufficient exercise to produce weariness, pleasant occupation, good air, and not too warm a room, a clear conscience, and avoidance of stimulants and narcotics. For those who are overworked, haggard, and nervous, who pass sleepless nights, we recommend the adoption of such habits as shall secure sleep; otherwise, life will be short, and what there is of it, sadly imperfect.

'Mid Gleaming Sheaves.

BY C. M HARGER.

'Mid gleaming sheaves—rich pillars fair—
In summer's high flood-tide,
Broad-chested forms with earnest care
Are swinging brawny arms and bare,
Strong-measured, side by side.

'Mid gleaming sheaves of golden hue
The reapers move in line;
Their clean cut track leads winding through Bright glades o'erarched by cloudless blue,
And vales where waters shine.

The restless clink of flashing steel
Resounds in accents bold;
Our hearts a tender pity feel
For plant-lives cru-hed 'neath ruthless heel,
To gain the wealth they hold.

The nodding block of yellow grain
Is slowly chiselled round;
Behind the toilers stands a train
Of amber towers a stretching lane
Between of stubble-ground.

The throbbing hours of noonday heat
Are spent where brook-waves play;
The tossing ripples, sparkling sweet,
Seem off'rings poured at Ceres' feet—
Libations crowned with spray.

When lagging afternoon is past,
And robin vespers ring,
And dreaming twilight thickens fast,
The gleaners homeward turn at last,
Through paths where dew-pearls cling.

Do they whose eyes broad hat brims hide
See nature's beauteous face;
Or do they think of naught beside
The small du at eventide,
As up the slope they pace?

Do firm-winged larks that skyward sail
Sing the a song of joy?
Do they applaud the whistling quail?
Or do these sights and sounds so stale
Their so did souls annoy?

Far from the rushing world's highways
Their peaceful pathway lies;
'Tis strange if comes from them no praise
Of spreading leas and song-birds' lays,
Clear rills and glowing skies.

"No," snappishly said the Summer boarding-house keeper to Mrs. Culture, who was inquiring as to the healthfulness of the locality: "No we ain't got no typhoid germs, and there hain't been no calls for 'em either. Folks is wanting everything nowadays, and ain't satisfied with clean beds and plenty of what's good to eat."

THE FARM.

Men Who Succeed With Sheep.

Under the above head the Breeders' Gazette makes some sound and sensible remarks: Depressed and unpromising as sheep farming and all other farming is just now, there are, nevertheless, some who make it pay.

The men who make a success of sheep husbandry are confined to no special locality, are found wedded to no particular breed or variety of sheep, evince no characteristic in common beyond a persistent, intelligent determination to adapt their surroundings to forcing the best possible results from their expenditure of labor and money.

They are found among the owners of high-priced lands dividing the busy cities of the eastern and older states, with round-bodied, early maturing sheep, always ready to respond to the metropolitan demand for first-class mutton.

They are found on the grassy hillsides of the middle and manufacturing States, where near-by markets and fleeces and carcasses render the flock a favorite investment for those who know how to get the best results from it.

They are found in the grain growing regions, where corn and oats and hay are marketed in the form of well-fattened mutton carcasses and weighty fleeces, leaving the land as rich as they found it and reducing the toll of the common carrier by many fold.

They are found along the frontier, where free pasturage for summer and cheaply raised grain for winter are assured facts.

Scattered as they are, all over the country, addicted of necessity to adverse systems of management, nevertheless the men who have made a success of sheep husbandry will be found to possess certain uniform characteristics. They are intelligent, experienced, prudent, persevering. Intelligent enough to appreciate their own surroundings and to know the type of sheep best suited thereto. Sufficiently experienced to know that their business is not necessarily a failure because prices for its product are not uniformly high. Prudent enough to escape the panic which periodically seizes their weak kneed co laborers, and to profit by the mistakes of those who persist in selling when sheep are low and buying when, as a result of such folly, prices again advance. Persevering, with faith in that average of results which has made sheep husbandry as good a record for profit as can be shown for any other agricultural specialty.

These are the men to whom those younger ones who think of becoming flock-owners should look for lessons, rather than to that class of talkers and writers who at times occupy the public attention.

Timely Suggestions.

The old saying is that one cannot eat his cake and have it too; but it is possible to dig some potatoes out of a hill early without disturbing the plants, and then by replacing the earth have the roots throw out a new set of tubers. This is an economy in growing early potatoes that may be practiced when the first tubers ready for market bring high prices, but not enough to warrant pulling up the vines for half a crop.

Canada thistles that have an even start with either oats or barley will ripen their seed before the grain is ready to harvest. This should be prevented, if possible, as thistle seed going with grain straw into the manure heap is one of the ways in which this pest is spread. A man with a sharp hoe will cut out the thistles in the grain while it is yet small, and in many cases the gain to the grain crop will entirely pay for this expense, leaving the check to the thistles as clear profit from the operation.

Lath make excellent bean poles. Drive in two to the hill, starting at an angle of say 75 degrees, remembering that 90 degrees is a point directly overhead. Let these lath meet at the top. When the vines reach the ends allow them to lap over a foot, and then pinch them off. You will get more beans, even of Limas, than if allowed to grow six or eight feet high. Try it in a small way and set me right if I am wrong. I have made mistakes a few times in my life and hope to again.

Thin out the fruit. If we would have large, fine fruit, a certain proportion of leaves to fruit must be established. It seems a waste to cut off a dozen bunches of grapes upon a single cane; a waste to destroy six young apples where there are but nine. Still a green plant can only do so much work. Take your choice between an abundance of inferior fruit or less of the best quality.

John Tucker says, in the Farm Journal, that it does him good to hear people talk about clover and hogs. There is no way a farmer can improve a field faster than by seeding it down and pasturing hogs on it—unless it is to sow peas in a lot and then let the hogs eat them on the ground. A pint of corn fed to a hog every day in a clover pasture will make it fit for killing before cold weather. Two quarts of middlings a day wet up and fed to a hog, wintered over, in connection with good pasture, will make it ready for the market in autumn. In this cheap way the hogs may be fitted for market early and the land fitted for a good crop of corn the next year. The shut-up system of making pork is mighty poor economy. The hogs will do a great deal for us if we only give them a chance.

"Tickled by a straw"—A woman with a new bonnet or a man with a sherry cobbler.

"Le Dogg, here's an item I wish you would read to our landlady," remarked De Wiggs. "What is it about?" "About a man in Mississippi who sold a petrified chicken for twenty dollars." "What do you want that read to her for?" "Why, don't you see, if she finds out she can get twenty dollars apiece for petrified chickens she wont serve any more up for dinner."

"Pretty girl that." "Yes." "She looked at you as if she knew you." "Yes." "Does she?" "Well, the fact is, my boy, she's my sister. But she married a fellow that wears a straw, an something of that sort, and they live in a bawding house, so I cawn't afford to wecognize her in public. But I always send her my cawd on New Yeah's. Paw girl! She has been foolish enough than swimmin', don't she know."

AN EXTRAORDINARY CASE.

She: "ONLY GIVE UP SMOKING FOR ONE YEAR, AND I HAVE NO DOUBT THAT YOU WILL NEVER TOUCH TOBACCO AGAIN."
He: "WELL, I DON'T KNOW; I DID NOT SMOKE ONCE FOR FIFTEEN YEARS, AND THEN I BEGAN AND ENJOYED IT HUGELY."
She: "FOR FIFTEEN YEARS! YOU MUST HAVE BEEN VERY YOUNG WHEN YOU BEGAN."
He: "I WAS FIFTEEN."

MARKDALE, JULY 15, 1886.

THE 12TH IN MARKDALE.

The day was dry and pleasant, but the streets and roads extremely dusty, rendering it most unpleasant to get about. By 12 o'clock ten lodges had arrived and some 8,000 persons. The Proton and Melancthon districts, numbering 15 lodges, were unable to secure a special train, owing to all the coaches being engaged elsewhere, thereby depriving them of visiting Markdale on this occasion as they had determined and greatly desired. Liberal provision was made for the wants of the inner man, and to spare.

About 2 o'clock a large number adjourned to Walker's bush where addresses, able and appropriate, were given by Revs. Cornish, McIntyre, Wilson, and Dr. Sproule and John Lyons, Esq. Good order and respectable conduct were noticeable and commendable features of the day, and the various lodges returned to their different homes early in the evening.

BAND CONCERT.

Evening cool and pleasant. Audience fairly large, and most all well pleased we judge. Part 1st.—Programme was opened by the band with a selection which was well rendered, and though old was good. Dr. Sproule M. P., then came forward and assumed the onerous position of chairman. He introduced himself in an off-hand little address, with quite appropriate references to the band, its organization, progress and benefit to the community, also some thoughts on the profit of musical culture. Audience sorry Mr. Anderson was not on hand, W. J. hardly filled the vacancy. Song, Mrs. Ketchum, a pretty air, rather difficult, sang with taste and expression, voice a light soprano; piano very much against her voice, tho' the accompanyment was tastily played. Duett, Jones & Mason, clarionet and cornet, pretty, and too short. Song, Miss Addie Armstrong, "When the heart is sad," a very hard song, given in good voice, and correct, but piano was below pitch, and out of tune, so she was at a great disadvantage; trust she will come again when help is more favorable. Song, W. A. Luke, "Ehren on the Rhine," a descriptive piece, nicely sung, and if he had used his guitar for accompaniment would have secured a re-call. This must not reflect on Miss Damude as she played her part well, but oh! that piano. Johny Dundas is an exception to most boys, as a piano player, and will make his mark yet we hope in musical circles. Song, Miss Lemon, "When the leaves begin to fade," a waltz song splendidly given, words distinct, and every note clear, she earned a re-call, and responded with a sweet ballad, "The Sunshine." We will all be pleased to hear her again at some future concert. Part 2nd.—After a short time to chat, the band started the program again with a quickstep; lead good, E. Bass good, all good excepting B bass and trombone, at ff. places were over-blown. Song, Miss C. Phillips, a pretty song, with good voice points in it, which the lady handled very sweetly. Duett, Jones & Mason, harder than the first one, and not so well played, especially at the finish. W. J. is good at the comic and brought down the plaudits so strongly as to come on with an extra piece. Duett, Russell & Barnhouse, "Army & Navy," well rendered, and deserved an encore. Song, Miss Damude did not sing; as she always pleases, Mr. Barnhouse made a weak selection, and should not attempt comic when his voice and manner takes better to solid songs. Song, Mr. Russell, a good song, well sung; he has a pleasant tenor voice, good expression, but pronunciation a little faulty. Miss Lemon again pleased all by giving a beautiful waltz movement, set to sentimental words; her response piece with alto assistant, was good. The farce, "Pete and the Pedlar," was indeed a farce. The concert wound up with the National Anthem by the band.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—The editor of the Thornbury Standard, in the issue of July 1st, commenting on the political situation in the East Riding of Grey, mentions, among the many aspirants for the position of standard bearer for the Conservative party at the next local election, the name of Mr. Thos. Kells of Artemesia; although further on in the same article he says that Mr. Kells has no claim on the party, and that all the others have. The assertion is made without any reasons shown, and seems to me to be but the result of some petty spite, or for the purpose of strengthening some other candidate at Mr. Kells' expense. As far as I know Mr. Kells has not signified to any one his desire to fill that position; but I have no doubt that if he got the nomination, and in no other event, he would accept it, although he would be at a considerable pecuniary loss in so doing. As to Mr. Kells' claims I think they are as good as any in the riding for 1st, he has always been true and loyal to his party as is evidenced by his being at the present date the President of the Conservative Association for East Grey and has been such for some time. 2nd. He is an intelligent farmer and therefore could be trusted to look after the interests of a large agricultural riding such as East Grey is. This is a cogent reason, for it is much to be deplored that in such a country as this there are so few farmers representing the interests of the largest affected class of the community. On all sides we see men of other callings in life in parliament but very few farmers. 3rd. Mr. Kells has shown a live interest in all matters pertaining to agriculture, and is always active in promoting any scheme, local or otherwise, by which he thinks he can advance the farmer as every farmr knows whoisin the least acquainted with him. I might go on further and show you at least that Mr. Kells has equally good righte with any of the aspirants named by the Thornbury Standard, but will refrain for the present from doing so, and bring my letter to an end, by thanking you for giving me the space for this letter in your valuable paper.

Yours truly,

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

A game of baseball, played between the picked nine of Eugenia and Flesherton clubs, was played on the grounds of the latter here on Friday last, resulting in a victory for the visiting team. The Flesherton boys were quite out of shape for a good match, some of their best men being away from home, among others their trusty, fearless backstop, W. Vokes, Esq.

Flesherton, the picturesque little town of northern Ontario, has now become a famous resort for summer holiday visitors. Among the distinguished visitors at present we might notice J. W. Henderson, Esq., and family of Toronto. Mr. Pratt and wife of Vermont, U. S., the guests of Dr. Christoe. Mrs. W. E. Dyer of Oshawa, daughter of Rev. W. Ayers of this place. Mrs. J. D. Clark of Hamilton and Mrs. T. Aikinhead of Toronto, daughters of J. W. Armstrong, Esq.. Mrs. Ansley of Parry Sound, daughter of W. K. Flesher, Esq. C. W. Moorey and wife of Creemore, the guests of Mr. W. Neal. Mr. Moodey and bride of Buffalo, on their wedding tour, the guests of Mr. James Brooks. Thos. Bates and wife from Sault St. Marie, visiting with his mother and relatives here. Mrs. Brown of Toronto, the guest of Mrs. Thos. Leitch. Miss Walsh of Uxbridge, teacher, is spending her holidays with Mr. and Mrs. Irwin of this place. Mr. Herbert Strain of Pembina, U. S., surprised his parents by his arrival home on Saturday evening last. Herbert looks well, and notices quite a change in our town after an absence of nearly four years. Mr. Strain also expects his eldest son, Joseph, home from Atchison, Kansas, this week. Will Keefer and wife are also expected to arrive in town during the present week. Mr. and Mrs. Bunt of Chatham, the guests of F. Bunt of this place, on their way through for Moose Jaw, N. W. T.

Your reporter took a stroll round town and jotted the above few personals. More anon.

The announcement has been made that the Rev. Mr. D'Argent of Maxwell will deliver a sermon to the Masonic fraternity of this place in the Presbyterian church here next Sabbath afternoon at 2:30 p. m.

Rev. Mr. Ayers preached a sermon to young men on Sunday evening last entitled "Sword Exercise," from the words "His hand clave unto his sword." The whole discourse was very interesting, abounding with rich thoughts and full of practical illustrations.

The 12th of July passed off quietly in this place. The sounds of the [illegible] the quietness for a while, but [illegible] while the several lodges were [illegible] to proceed to Kingsmill. McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.

When we say McGregor's Speedy Cure is the only perfect cure for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Indigestion and Impure Blood, we are telling plain facts, of which hundreds upon hundreds can testify who have been restored to perfect health by its use. We would therefore advise you, strongly if you are a subject of any of the above troubles to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial and be convinced. It is sold in 50c. and $1.00 bottles at R. L. Stephen's Drug Store. 2

A QUADRUPLE FORCE

The reason why diseases is so soon expelled from the system by the Burdock Blood Bitters is because that excellent remedy acts in a four fold manner—that is to say, upon the bowels, and Liver, the blood and the Kidneys, driving out bad humor, and regulating every organic function.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. Roller Mills.

For the first time in a milling experience of eighteen years we find ourselves so crowded with work that it looks almost impossible for us to catch up with it. We emphatically and unhesitatingly declare that we thank our friends the ladies for this, and we are proud and pleased to learn from them in so decided and practical a way that we are giving them satisfaction in the flour they get from us. We say we give the ladies the credit! Why? Because seldom a day passes but some new customer tells us the woman sent him. or some old one that he has mills near hand, but the woman won't hear of him going anywhere else now.

We were satisfied at the outset that if we could do anything that would improve the quality of the flour used in this country, and so relieve our women from part of the toil and worry baking, or even if we could not lighten the work, but could only give them a flour that would be sure, after their work with it, to always make good bread, that we would not only earn but receive the hearty thanks and earnest support of every woman in the county, and that very few men would get much rest or satisfaction until they had been at our mill or got some of our flour.

We are glad to know that the great expense of building and furnishing latest and most approved roller process machinery has been crowned with success. and that we make a flour that not only always makes good bread, but what pleases us fully as much is. that it also lightens the womans house work, for it dont require half the kneading or attention of the old style flour. Any one who comes to our mill and see the crowd there every day and the amount of work we have to do can judge for himself that our confidence in the gratitude of the woman of this county was not misplaced, and we may say at once that they have ressonded far beyond our most sanguine expectations, and to such an extent that we fear we will yet have to enlarge our grinding capacity. In return we have to assure you, ladies, that we will continue to do our very best to please you and give you the best article of flour that can be made. We will spare no expense to keep our mill to the front rank, judge by the quantity of its work, and we want you to know the feeling that we appreciate your hearty and unanimous response to the effort we make to lighten your home work and relieve you from the worry and announce of ever having in your house that article most productive of growlings and grumblings in men—bad bread.

While we are so crowded with work that we can't give all the attention to customers we would like we trust no one will feel slighted, but bear with us under present circumstances, and if any mistake occurs kindly let us know at once. so that we maw rectify it.

HOUSEHOLD.

Decorations.

Russian fire-irons of brass complete part of the necessary furniture of the modern tea-table.

Orange tints are useful in many cases for interior decoration, as they are warm and pleasant.

Coral is just now in large demand for embroidery work, combined with marine plants, showing delicate tracery.

Revolving flower-pot stands afford a ready mode of varying effects of groups of plants in parlor or sitting-rooms.

Carpets should never be shaken, as their weight inclines them to part, but be laid on a rope and then beaten at the back.

Pastoral, knightly and woodland scenes, and village festival tableaux, in Limoges, may be blended together in mantel facings with charming effect.

A suitable color for recesses holding marble statuary is cerulean blue; while one of the best backgrounds for gold and green bronze is Indian red.

A Japanese tea-tray of lacquered wood is composed of a series of divisions, each with a separate porcelain base, with design in gold and colors, and with varied molded border.

For picture frames, old brass elaborately designed is in much request. They are especially appropriate to pictorial designs in the same metal or in papier-mache.

Whilst we produce in tiles every variety of tint at will, the ancients used only two tints, red and white, employing brick clay, with a transparent glaze from powdered brick ore.

It is always well to give the stairway wall of the several stories a different decorative treatment; also to introduce horizontal lines, as giving greater breadth and stability of appearance.

A novel hall hat-rack, of simple hard-wood frame, is provided with protruding and erect ovals of nickel-plated wire, as a lodgment for silk hats; an inclined half moon wire device affords equal security for felt hats.

At a recent lunch party the napkin at each plate was slipped into gilded clothes pins; the pins were decorated with tiny bunches of forget-me-nots, rosebuds and other small flowers painted in oil, and were retained by the guests as souvenirs.

A pretty, healthful and economical finish for ceilings and walls is made of pulverized soapstone. It can be readily washed, takes a high, polish, is pearl gray in tint, presents the best possible surface for painting, either in oil or water color, and will neither crack nor chip.

The tile facing of a marble mantel shewing a continuous plant and floral design, in delicate hues, on a white ground, presents the novelty of birds in brilliant plumage, and bright, gaudy insects, rendered in relief in quartz grains in metallic colors, producing a picturesque effect. The importation is from Germany.

In a pint of spirits of wine dissolve two ounces of seed lac, and two ounces of white resin. The principal use of this polish is for the carved parts of cabinet work, such as standards, pillars, claws, etc. It should be laid on warm, and if the work can also be warmed at the time it will be still better. All moisture and dampness should be carefully excluded.

Choice Recipes.

CRUMPETS.—One and one half pints of flour, one-half teaspoonful salt, one teaspoonful sugar, two of baking powder, one egg, nearly a pint of milk and cream mixed all together; bake in well buttered hot gem irons; serve hot.

RIBBON CAKE.—I like this recipe very much: One and one-half cups of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one-half cup of milk, three eggs, one-half teaspoonful soda one teaspoonful cream of tartar, two cups flour. Bake half of this in layers. To the remainder add one-half cup molasses, one cup flour, a little soda, and fruit and spice to taste. Bake this in layers and put the whole together with jelly, using first a dark layer, then a light one.

CORN STARCH CREAM PIE.—One pint of milk scalded, two tablespoonfuls corn starch, three tablespoonfuls sugar, yolks of two eggs. Wet the starch with a little cold milk. Beat the eggs and sugar until light, and stir the whole in the scalded milk. Flavor with two teaspoonfuls lemon. Line a pie plate with pie crust and bake. Fill with the cream and cover it with frosting made of the whites of the two eggs beaten with two tablespoonfuls sugar. Set in oven a few minutes to stiffen.

TOMATO FIGS.—Take small red tomatoes, scald and skin them quickly, breaking them as little as possible, add one-third their weight of granulated sugar, boil slowly until they are clear, take them out and spread them on plates; boil the juice till it is very thick, pour it over the tomatoes, and dry them in a warm oven. When dry pack in layers in a clean paper box, first sprinkling sugar over the bottom of it and also between each layer, pack tightly and cover closely, and you will have a nice confection for winter.

LEMON PICKLE.—Choose a dozen fine, middle-sized lemons, fresh and perfectly sound, scrape the outside of them with a piece of broken quart bottle, and then cut them lengthwise down into four quarters, but not quite asunder; they must be left so as to just hang together. Rub these over with salt on the rough outside, and fill the cuts with salt in the same manner; put them into a china or earthenware bowl that will just hold them, sprinkle some more salt over them, and turn them once a day; let them lie thus four days. Parboil twelve cloves of garlic, or small onions cut into thin slices; add to these an ounce of white sugar, a handful of white mustard seed, and as much cayenne pepper as will lie upon a dime. Sprinkle some salt among these, and let them stand all the time the lemons are in the bowl. Then have a clean stone jar ready, take out the lemons one by one, squeeze them a very little, and lay them carefully in a jar; lay in the spices all about them, and tie them close down; let them stand a month and they will be fit to eat. Sugar can be added to taste when served.

AROUND LONDON ON SUNDAY.

[From Our Own Correspondent.]

Sunday can scarcely be said to be so well observed in London as in Toronto—that is outwardly. Cabs and busses lumber through the streets in every direction; trains shoot across the street overhead or rumble under foot carrying their hundreds and thousands away from the smoky city to the green lanes of suburban towns. (Who can blame those who go solely to get out of this great riot of humanity and hold a short converse of their own with the congregation of trees and flowers that stand ever ready to "clap their little hands in glee," as Longfellow would say, and never utter a harsh sentiment about song or sermon?) Fruit and candy store stand open here and there; costermongers display their cart loads of oranges close to the sidewalk and tempt the appetite of the thirsty stroller by showing a few oranges partially skinned and with a slice off the top exposing a depth of lusciousness beneath, while—sad feature of English life—dense crowds stand in front of every public house as morning draws on, waiting for the bars to open, and these crowds number old women, young girls and little children who are sent with jugs for the family's beer, if they do not come on their own account. We hear, by the way, of a deep depression over all Great Britain, but we forget that money enough is drunk in beer, whiskey and gin in a single day to provide employment for all the poor of the Kingdom for a week.

The first Sunday I spent in London I took the opportunity of hearing Spurgeon, the celebrated Baptist preacher. He had been ill for a long time and had just reappeared in his pulpit. He did not look—to a stranger at least—as if he were suffering, for he has a corpulent figure and a round and pleasant English face. The tabernacle was crowded as usual. All seats not occupied ten minutes before the time of starting service may be appropriated by strangers. I got a good seat in the body of the tabernacle, and with a sea of faces all round me was relapsing into reflections on the loneliness of being in a strange church, feeling that one is in somebody else's pew and surrounded by a multitude with not one familiar face, when—lo! up in the gallery near the preacher's chair I beheld Mr.—— of Toronto, while a few seats in front of me sat Mr.—— and Miss—— of Niagara Falls. I immediately felt at home. Mr. Spurgeon on opening the service referred to his illness, and hoped that if his voice was not as strong, or his sermon as clear as it ought to be, they would know the reason why. His sermon was founded on the incident of the Samaritan woman at the well of Jacob, or rather the conversation which takes place between Christ and his disciples when they return from the town with food. "In the meanwhile his disciples prayed him, saying, master, eat. But he said unto them, I have meat to eat that ye know not of." The disciples had been charged with grossness, for their incapacity to see any other than a physiological meaning to our Saviour's words, but the preacher thought these words were quite natural. No man could live without eating, and he thought men should devote a full share of their exertions to providing their tables with healthy food; but what he wished to show was the enthusiasm of Christ in the work he came to do. This Samaritan woman, whose past life had been none too good and who had come out for water at an hour when few people were about, was the first convert made by Christ. Step by step, in the conversation about the water of this life he had led the woman up to a degree of realization of the source of spiritual life, and as he looked into her soul and saw the first evidence of her willingness to receive the new "gift of God," a new enthusiasm filled his own soul and made him forget for the time his own bodily wants. Mr. Spurgeon's hearers might think it was a great thing to be able to preach before a vast congregation and have his sermons repeated in papers read by millions, but he assured them he felt a greater satisfaction and deemed it a greater honor to have some person come quietly and testify that he had been saved through his preaching. He never felt a deeper joy than when he read one day in some paper of a West Indian who had been converted by reading a translation of one of his sermons. There was more honor in doing the obscure work of Christ than in making a public noise. This first sermon of the greatest preacher on earth was preached to but one person, and that a woman of doubtful character, whom many a preacher of these days would not think it worth while to waste a word upon. And yet Christ's highest skill of illustration and his greatest tact were thrown into this conversation, and the reception of it filled his whole heart with joy and anticipation of the future of his gospel as he pointed to the crowd of Samaritans then coming up and said: "Lift up your eyes and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest." The whole sermon was an encouragement to those, who are willing to do the solid and unostentatious work of Christianity in this world.

There was no collection; but strangers, as they came to the porch, were handed a little envelope into which, if they wished, they could put something for the new college.

Spurgeon's is the eloquence of plain words, he uses no flowery oratory, but, like Moody, says what he means in words that any ordinary man may understand. This, with his earnestness, is the secret of his power.

Yesterday a friend took me to hear Dr. Joseph Parker at the Congregational church known as the City Temple, in High Holborn. Dr. Parker has a fame in the Congregational Church of England corresponding to that of Dr. Wild in Canada, except that Dr. Parker's gifts are not of the prophetic order. His talent is rather in the dramatic line. He is about 60 years of age, in physique, and especially in voice, he calls Henry Irving to mind at once. If he had not been a preacher he would have been a splendid tragedian. The church was well filled, as I suppose it always is. The interior is very handsome; having a gallery supported by columns with corinthian capitals, and just enough of gilt and light coloring about them, and the other decorations, to relieve it of the sombreness of most London churches. It has the everlasting stained glass on all the windows. In one close by us, our Saviour in a bright colored garb is represented talking to the Samaritan woman at the well, the woman also dressed in bright red, with the apostles so close about them that they must have heard all that was said in fact, they seem to be participating in the conversation. Again, in the middle of a sort of Catharine wheel window, behind the pulpit, the Saviour of the world in a garment of the brightest red, and——

But, to the preacher. It appeared that this was one of a series of sermons the doctor was preaching on the book of Job. The general design was not quite clear, but one point in this part was that the speech of Zophar, the Naamathite, in which he accused Job of indulging in too much eloquence, was justified by the facts—that Job insisted too much on his own virtues, and held up to a stronger light than needed, his sufferings. It was like a banker who was fond of telling how he could do the financing of the world. In hearing such a man we could not forget that it was a banker who was talking. Eliphaz, the Temanite, was presumed to be one who saw visions and had a turn for spiritualism; Bildad, the Shuhite, was versed in the literature and philosophy of the day, and Zophar, in his speeches, represented the contemporaneous thought of the time. These men could not help thinking, as was natural to them—that Job, for his sufferings, had committed some secret crime which he could not confess to the world. Job, on the other hand, appeared to have misunderstood the teaching of his trials.

So much for the sermon. Before the congregation had chanted one of the familiar church of England chants, joined they in singing the plaintive:—

"Sinful, sighing to be blest,
Bound, and longing to be free,
Weary, waiting for my rest,
Lord be merciful to me."

The effect of an English congregation's singing is that of a melodeon, compared with the thinner pipe organ sound of a Canadian congregation, I fancied.

Just before the collection the doctor reminded us that the contributions would be in aid of the annual Sunday School treat, and they proposed bringing the children down to the seaside and give them a breath of sea air, a romp on the sea shore, or a dip in the surf. It was also proposed to take a few of the poor old men—and the doctor lingered pityingly on the "o" till the people smiled sympathizingly—and it was remarkable when it was mentioned to the few poor old people, how many other old people had turned up during the week and said, "they had heard of it." In consequence the committee had more to provide for than they expected. The appeal was made with perfect art, and I noticed a good number of gold pieces in the collection box, when it came round. I had had a penny in my hand, but when he brought out that pitying o-ld I brought out a sixpence instead. If I had been anything but a newspaper man I would have made it a sovereign.

A Scene in Summer.

Turn out of the way a little, good scholar, towards yonder high honeysuckle hedge. There we'll sit and sing while this shower falls so gently upon the teeming earth, and gives a yet sweeter smell to the lovely flowers that adorn these verdant meadows. Look, under that broad beech tree I sat down when I was last this way a-fishing, and the birds in the adjoining grove seemed to have a friendly contention with an echo, whose dead voice seemed to live in a hollow tree near to the brow of that primrose hill. There I sat, viewing the silver streams glide silently towards their centre, the tempestuous sea, yet sometimes opposed by rugged roots and pebble stones which broke their waves and turned them into foam. And sometimes I beguiled time by viewing the harmless lambs, some leaping securely in the cool shade, while others sported themselves in the cheerful sun, and saw others craving comfort from the woollen udders of their bleating dams. As I thus sat, these and other sights had so fully possessed my soul with content that I thought, as the poet has so happily expressed it—

"I was for that time lifted above earth,
And possessed joys not promised in my birth."

As I left this place and entered into the next field, a second pleasure entertained me. It was a handsome milkmaid, that had not yet attained so much age and wisdom as to load her mind with any fears of many things that will never be, as too many men too often do; but she cast away all care and sang like a nightingale.—Izaac Walton.

Having Fun With a Snake.

During the noon hour among the workmen employed in improvements along the railroad west of Sterlington, Ala., station, one of the bosses noticed the other day that a gang of Italians had found some amusement in their shanty which kept them in a constant state of hilarity for nearly the entire hour. Just before it was time to resume work the boss walked to the shanty to see what it was that excited the merriment of the Italians. He found three or four of the laborers with sticks six or seven inches long in their hands. One of them stepped to one side of the shanty, thrust his stick quickly at something on the ground, and jumped quickly back, at which the spectators laughed heartily.

The boss made his way through the men to see what it was at which the Italian thurst his stick, and came in sight of it as one of the man had made a thrust, and jumped back just in time and far enough to escape the fangs of an enormous rattlesnake, which sprang at the man, and then quickly recoiled on the ground for another spring as another Italian advanced.

The snake's eyes glittered with rage, and its rattles filled the shanty with the noise of its vibrations. The boss shouted to an Italian who was advancing for his turn at the sport, and said a few words in Italian which caused an instantaneous clearing out of the cabin. The Italians had captured the snake in some way while at work, and, ignorant of its deadly nature, had dragged it to their shanty, where for an hour they had played with the reptile, escaping its fangs only by extraordinary good fortune.

The snake was killed. It was nearly five feet long and had a splendid set of rattles, seventeen in number. Even after the snake was dead not one of the Italians who had so fearlessly tempted death while ignorant of the venemous character of the snake, would go anywhere near it, and when they had occasion to enter their shanty crossed themselves and left again as hastily as they could.

HERE AND THERE.

Cholera is spreading with great rapidity and deadliness in Southern Japan.

Lieut. Gen. Rose has invented a method for firing dynamite shells from ordinary cannon, which has just been tried successfully in San Francisco.

A Utica genius has invented a farm harness that weighs less than fifteen pounds, and does away with whiffletrees, traces, and many of the cumbersome straps and buckles. Moreover it is cheap.

Mrs. John Wallace of Knoxville, Tenn., stepped to the gate to look for her five-year-old boy, and at that moment a runaway horse dashed by. It is thought that she supposed that her boy had been run over, for she fell to the ground dead.

Superintendent Apps of the Star and Crescent Flouring Mills of Chicago is a tough man. He was caught in the belting of the Mills the other day, whirled over three pulleys, thrown violently to the floor, and yet not a bone was broken, his only injuries being a few flesh wounds.

Mrs. Catherine Waggner, aged 111, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Rebecca Waggner, aged 109 years, live within sight of each other, near Bartersville, Ky. They have never seen a railroad, and each has had for fifty years a silk dress laid away in which to be buried.

The latest reported fasting girl is Julia Harris, the twelve-year-old daughter of a Methodist minister near Fowles Station, Texas. She is said not to have eaten anything in forty-six days. She was unusually fat when she began her self-imposed fast weighing 180 pounds. She is greatly reduced in fat now.

George Bail of Hartford has made a water bicycle. The rider sits on a high seat supported by two long, narrow floats rigged catamaran fashion. He propels with his feet a large wheel which gearing operates a little screw at the stern of the craft. A few trials show the bicycle to be fast and easily managed.

Mrs. Robert Skeech of Coral Mich., after bending over the wash tub until tired, sat down to rest taking her baby boy on her lap at the time. She felt faint, rose to go to another room, fainted dead away, droping the baby into a tub of water as she fell. Her husband, coming in soon after, found the mother unconscious on the floor and the little one drowned in the tub.

Mrs. Maria Farrow of Central City, Ill., is 76 years old. A year ago she got the contract for delivering the mail to the Post Office at $5 a month, and all through the winter she never missed a day. Her duties require her to hang the mail pouch on the crane at the depot, and once, doing this, she fell and broke arm. Now she is well and, though not an offensive partisan is a very faithful official.

William L Noyes and James B. Mudgett farmers of Richmond, Vt., quarreled over the ownership of a parcel of grain, and Noyes punched Mudgett with a pitchfork, making a slight wound. A doctor was called, and when Noyes saw him go to Mudgett's house he became very much excited, and, saying to his wife, "I will kill myself," went to the barn and shot himself three times, dying almost instantly.

A farmer, living near Luverne, Ia., asked a butcher of the same place if he wanted to buy a fat cow. He said he did, and that he would go after it soon. When the butcher arrived at the farmer's he found that the latter had no fat cow, but had been joking with him. The farmer won't joke that way any more, for the butcher brought suit against him and obtained judgment for $5.

While a gang of prisoners were waiting on a wharf at Philadelphia for the arrival of the police boat to take them to the House of Correction, Moses Kelly made a dash and jumped into the water. He disappeared and was thought to be drowned, but careful search revealed him in the mouth of a sewer sixty feet from where he went under. He was dragged out with a boathook, in much the same condition as Jean Valjean after his famous wade in the Paris sewer.

A citizen of Detroit has had his faith in human nature rudely shaken. One day when the rain was falling fast he saw a young man and a young woman paddling through the wet, umbrellaless. He was near his own door. So with rare philanthropy, he thrust his silk umbrella into the hand of the astonished young man saying. "Take this: you have a lady with you. You can bring it back to-morrow to that house there." The young man took the umbrella, and the good citizen of Detroit hasn't seen it since.

C. L. Badley, a notorious negro gambler of Nebraska, was shot near Crawford the other day. One bullet hit him in the back of the head, tearing off the outer plate of skull, another went into his eye, another hit him in the forehead, and the fourth went into his right arm. He never lost consciousness, and at last accounts was alive. The four wounds make bullet scars; he bears twenty-five. He was wounded four times in a fight last winter, and carried a bullet in his tongue a week before he found out what "felt so curious."

Let the timid women who are inclined to jump from a carriage every time the horse pricks up his ears read this story of a Westfield, Mass., girl. She was driving a spirited horse, when the headstall broke, and the bit came out of his mouth. Of course, he ran. The girl, perfectly powerless to restrain him, sat upright in her seat, while the frightened animal ran wildly through the streets. She never said a word, even when a daring man caught on behind and climbed into the buggy, only to find himself quite as powerless as the girl. But this added weight helped, for after a half-mile run the horse was tired enough to admit of his being caught, and the girl jumped out of the buggy, not much frightened, and not a bit hurt.

Talking about busy men who leave their homes early and get back after dark and never see their children, a man of that sort was hurrying away one morning when he found that his little boy had got up before him and was playing on the sidewalk. He told the child to go in. Child wouldn't. Man spanked him and went to business. Child went in howling. The mother said: "What's the matter?" "Man hit me," blubbered the youngster. "What man?" "That man that stays here on Sundays."

SHOT DOWN BY HIS BROTHER.

Stephen and Harvey Campbell Have a Fight in the Presence of Their Mother.

Harvey and Stephen Campbell lived with their mother near Arcola, Ill. The day their hired man, James Randall, went on a spree, returning at night pretty well loaded up. Steve upbraided Randall for leaving his work in a busy season, and they were soon engaged in a hot wordy quarrel. Harvey interfered to quell the disputants. Steve replied: "It is not your put in. I'll thank you to mind your own business." Harvey, who is much the older, and has long lorded it over his brother, intimated that he was ready to settle the dispute in the good old-fashioned way. Stephen produced a revolver, which he handed to Randall, saying: "Harvey wants to fight, and if I have this I am liable to use it: so you keep it." Badgering words were passed to and fro between the brothers until Harvey grabbed Stephen by the neck. The latter struggled till he got loose and backed into the room in the presence of their mother, Randall following with the revolver in his hand.

Stephen, standing behind his mother in the parlor while Harvey was yet in the sitting room said: "Now, d—n you, see what will do you but a fuse, so I will give you a good one."

Randall was standing close by. Reaching around behind him, Stephen grabbed from his pocket the revolver that had been given to Randall only a few moments before for safe keeping. Three shots were fired in quick succession over the mother's head. One passed through the body of Harvey within two inches of his heart, and was picked up on the floor by the mother. A second protruded from the back, and was removed with little trouble; the third inflicted but a slight flesh wound. Harvey kept endeavoring to reach a gun that stood in the corner. Stephen threatened to shoot again if he came an inch further. There was no need of the threat. Harvey sank to the floor bleeding.

Physicians were called, but nothing could to be done but administer stimulants. Harvey, who was in robust health, stood the shock remarkably well, but the physicians said that there was not one chance in a thousand for his recovery. Stephen, after shooting, went to Arcola and gave himself up, turning over the deadly revolver to the officer, but playfully asking to have the three empty shells for keepsakes. He was released on $3,000 bail. He signed his own name to the bond, and it is good for three times the amount.

The mother of the boys saw it all, but could not try to interfere. She said she knew one of the boys was bound to get hurt one way. Steve was pretty full at the time himself. The next day he said he wished they would hurry up and get through with the shooting scrape because he wanted to get back to the farm and boss his hands. His happy spirits found vent in singing facetiously, "I am gathering flowers for mother's grave." Stephen has been dead but a month. He is very well off, having inherited a 300 acre farm from his father's estate. Harvey is equally well off, Stephen is barely 21, and Harvey is about 35.

He Would Argue With the Highwayman.

Mr. McRoberts, new editor of the Leeds (England) Mercury was at one time a reporter in San Francisco. He was the most argumentative, and, at the same time, the calmest man that ever struck the town. He would stop work at a fire to argue. Mr. McRoberts was on his way home early one morning, when an American citizen suddenly popped up with a pistol levelled at his head, and said:

"Threw up yer hands!"

"Why?" asked Mr. McRoberts undisturbed.

"Threw them up."

"But what for?"

"Put up yer hands," insisted the footpad, shaking the pistol. "Will you do what I tell you?"

"That depends," said Mr. McRoberts. "If ye can show me any reason why I should pit up ma hands, I'll no say but what I will; but yer mere requalst wad be no justification fur me to do sae absurd a thing. Now why should you, a complete stranger, ask me at this oor o' the mornin', on a public street, tae put up my hands?"

"Dash you!" cried the robber; "if you don't quit gabblin' and obey orders, I'll blow the top of your head off!"

"What! Faith, man, ye must be out o' yer head. Come noo, puir buddy," said Mr. McRoberts, soothingly, coolly catching the pistol and wrestling it with a quick twist out of the man's hand; "come, noo, an' I'll show you where they'll tak care o' ye. Heeh! Dinna ye try tae fecht, or sood I'll sheot ye. By the way, ye might as weel put up yer ain hands, and jist walk aboot o' me. That's it. Trudge away noo."

And so Mr. McRoberts marched his man to the City Prison, and handed him over to Capt Douglass.

"It wuddna be a bad idea to put him in a straightjacket," he said, serenely, to the officer. "There's little doot but the buddy's daft."

And he resumed his interrupted homeward walk.

A Fatal Game of Cards.

Thomas Turley, aged aged 22, of Jersey City, was admitted to St. Francis Hospital, in that city, on June 14, suffering from a fracture of his right elbow. The surgeon told Turley that he could not live many hours. Turley then sent for one of the hospital Sisters, and told her that he really got in a fight with Charles Gallagher. He said Gallagher and he were playing cards on June 7, and they got into a dispute, which ended in Gallagher hurling a stone at him. The stone hit his elbow. Turley said he refrained from telling the truth about the matter before because he did not want to injure Gallagher, who, until the time of the fight, was his best friend. The Sister notified the police, and Gallagher was arrested. He was taken to the hospital by a policeman, and the dying man repeated his statement. Gallagher said nothing. Turley at first thought nothing of his injury, and did not realise his danger until inflammation had set in.

The difference between a dude and a cucumber is that the latter has no idea how sick it can make folks.

As Night Came Darkly Down.

The night came darkly down;
The birdies' mother said,
"Peep! peep!
You ought to be asleep;
Are my little ones were safe in bed?"
Sheltered by her wing in downy nest,
Every little birdlings took their rest.

The night came darkly down;
The baby's mother said,
"Bye-low!
You mustn't frolic so!
You should have been asleep an hour ago!"
Nestling closer to its mother's breast,
Baby prattler sank to quiet rest.

Then in the cradle soft
'Twas laid with tenderest care,
"Good-night!
Sleep till the morning light!"
Kissed the mother, as she breathed a prayer.
Curtains parted down, the gates of day were barred.
Holy loving angels were on guard.

Retribution At Last.

On the silver sands of Easthere Bay, Cecil Argent paced alone. Mr. Veriston and the clergyman had declined to descend the difficult path to the beach, and Cecil was only too glad to undertake the charge of the lady. It was a bold rocky coast, and an opalescent shimmer-ing sea.

At either side of the bay precipitous headlands cut the hazy sky, their grassy surfaces starred here and there with red poppies or tufted grass. Half way up one of these a white cottage nestled in a cleft of rock. Not a single sail broke the iridescent mirror of the sea, whose lips fell with the faintest murmur in one dreamy ripple on the shore. There was no sound, no sign of life, save the blue wreath of smoke from the cottage above, and the smooth sand was undisturbed by any feet but their own. The martins flying busily to and fro and a crimson butterfly were the only other animate creatures in sight. It was a charmed solitude.

After strolling a little way, Argent sat down, idly gathering the silver shells that lay here and there, scattered like pearls on the sands. His large soft eyes were fixed upon the level surface of water, a dreamy light in their blue depths. Standing by her side, his head bent, dwelling upon her graceful figure, and his heart beating with a very passion of intense love, Cecil's thoughts were busy. Would he ever find the key to this girl's nature? Would those blue eyes fill with tender sweet tremulous beams for him? Would that pale fair cheek ever blush, and his calm pulses quicken at his approach? Even as he involuntarily asked himself these questions his heart sank. The bright hopes of a few hours since seemed to be vanishing and slipping from his grasp, the happiness which had seemed so real and near disappeared in the far distance, even if not hopelessly lost. Should he ever win her? Was it not proverbial that men rarely got the prize on which their hearts were set? Why should he be an exception to the rule? The tender silence of earth and sky seemed to mock him, and the murmur of the sea seemed to fill him with vague indefinable melancholy. Why did Argent sit there so unmoved and still, and so forgetful of his presence? Was she so cold, so proud, and so unutterably fair?

"Oh, how beautiful it is!" exclaimed Argent suddenly; and the young man started at the sound of her voice—he had not heard of her breaking the long silence that had fallen upon them. With the sound, his doubts and his gloom vanished, and hope smiled on him once more.

"It is indeed," he said, seating himself by her side, "I have not been down here for years, and did not expect to see such a pretty little bay. How pretty these shells are too!"—taking one in his hand.

"'What is it? A learned man Could give it a clumsy name.
Let him name it who can,
The beauty would be the same,'"

"Yes," said the girl, with one of her rare smiles; "they are beautiful! "I have a long string of them at home. I am sure Mr. Stone robbed the mermaids for me."

"Mr. Stone again," thought her companion savagely; but all he said was "No doubt the mermaids would forgive the theft. I dare say they abound about here. When the full moon trails her white garment far across the sea, and all besides is hushed in slumber, then I can fancy a score of them out on yonder rocks, combing their golden hair and singing songs that would fire the blood with their eerie sweetness."

Argent turned her fair face to him with a look of interest.

"Ah, if one could but hear and see them!"

"But that would be death."

"Death! How fond you are of that dreadful word!"—turning away with a frown.

"Am I? Well, there is one word of which I am very much fonder."

"What is it?" asked Argent unsuspiciously.

"Love!" answered Cecil, his voice sounding unfamiliar in his own ears.

Argent rose, graceful and calm, yet with a slight shadow—else he fancied—on her face.

"It must be late," she said. "See—they are signalling us."

Mr. Veriston's long white handkerchief was indeed being frantically waved; but, when Cecil responded somewhat less vigorously, Mr. Veriston and the clergyman moved away; and once more in silence the young man and the girl climbed the path.

In after years Mr. Graham remembered the rest of the hours of that day as among the happiest of his life. He held his darling's little hand in his own during their ascent of the cliff, where assistance was a necessity; and the soft clinging touch of her fingers haunted him all night. It seemed to him that she was a little less cold and a little less indifferent than before as they walked slowly back across the heathery common, where large bees were booming in the purple blossoms, and numerous white and yellow butterflies fluttered lazily about the gorse. The fresh salt air, the vast sense of space, and the glorious dome of cloud-flecked blue above exhilarated the young poet. Of a temperament ever peculiarly open to the influences of nature, he was doubly so now in the first rapture of his love, which tinged with its own glory earth, sea, and sky.

Afterwards Cecil spent an enchanted hour in the drawing-room by Argent's side, having left the old gentlemen over their wine. She sat calm and tranquil as usual, half buried in a large arm-chair, languidly flirting a peacock-feather fan to and fro. The evening was warm and close, and the windows were open to catch every possible breeze. The shadows of the trees outside flickered across the girl's golden hair and white dress. She looked as ethereal as a spirit, unsubstantial as a thought in a dream—"A splendid angel newly dressed, save wings, for Heaven." The perfume of roses stole into the room, its quiet broken only by an occasional word from one or other of its occupants. Cecil was too dreamily happy to speak much; and Argent was always slow to speak—silent to a fault, some people would have said.

When Mr. Graham left the Mere House, which he did early, having important letters to write, he persuaded his companion to walk through the garden with him on the pretext of seeing the sunset. A strange sunset it was after a day so soft and calm. The sun sank blood-red, the whole sky was covered with streaks of crimson, fading to purple in the east. In this strange unearthly light the house stood out red and threatening. The leaves fluttered redly, and the flowers took each a deeper flush, a richer rose-hue, while the distant sea mingled with the glowing west.

"What a wonderful sunset!" exclaimed Cecil, as Argent paused at the gate. "There is something almost awful about it, something ominous of I know not what."

"As if the very elements were on fire," supplemented Argent, raising her eyes to the glowing vault above.

"As if the last dread day were dawning upon us," said Cecil solemnly.

The girl drew the shawl she were more closely round her shoulders with a quick gesture.

"Are you cold?" he asked, tenderly anxious.

"No, only——"

"Only what?"—still more tenderly, when she paused.

"Only I must go in now," she answered abruptly. "Good night."

"Must you? Good night, then"—pressing her hand as warmly as he dared. "This has been a happy, happy day; one I shall never forget! Have you been happy, Argent?"

He uttered her name tremulously, his lips lingering on its soft syllables; but Argent's thoughts were evidently far away. She merely said, absently—

"What? Oh, yes!"

Then he was fain to release her hand and depart with that last stab for company. Before he entered the path which led out of sight of Veriston, he turned round for one last look. And there, while his heart beat joyfully at the thought that she should watch him thus, leaning on the gate, her face turned towards him, stood Argent. In the crimson sunset her golden hair and her white dress seemed, as he looked more closely, to be dyed in blood. It was a strange and terrible sight! Like a cloud over his new-born joy a dark impalpable shadow of foreboding descended, not to be thrust away; and perfectly superstition-proof though he deemed himself, Cecil Graham turned hastily away with an involuntary shudder.

CHAPTER V.

The days went on, each laden with its dreams, its hopes, its flowers of promise, its passionate love, its attendant sorrow; and the poem progressed. In it Cecil poured out his soul. Its hero uttered all the eloquent love and longing the author dared not yet speak. In it Argent Veriston moved, a glorified vision of ideal womanhood. Something of the odors and flowers of summer-time breathed through its pages, and something of the wild storms of summer too. Cecil felt impelled, in spite of himself, by that strange power which governs the poet's will, to bring his poem to a sad and mournful close.

He read some of his verses to Nellie Mill as they sat together in the jessamine-roofed arbour in the little garden; for good Mrs. Mill, now that she knew her lodger better, made no objection to an occasional chat; and Nellie's tears had fallen thickly and fast over the poem, until Cecil had to soothe and pet her like a child, her tears flattering him not a little. Pleased with what he chose to consider her appreciation, he read her more and more, never thinking how dangerously sweet these readings might be to the young unsophisticated girl.

Even though madly in love with another woman, he found it pleasant to sit with Nellie when he could not be with his idol. He found it pleasant to watch her changing color and her heaving breast, to see the quick tears starting, and to read in her eyes the deepest awe of an intellect so vast, the most impassioned admiration for a genius so miraculous—ay, and a love strong and fervent for himself was there too, only this he did not see.

Foolish little Nellie loved the young poet, who was so far above and beyond her in every way. Her wild wrath on the day he left her to turn back alone had all evaporated in tears. Here was a weak, undisciplined, passionate nature, quickly roused, and quickly soothed. She had reasoned herself blindly into believing that Cecil cared for her, although she knew of his daily visits to Veriston. She suffered herself to float like a flower severed from its root on the false sparkling current, unresisting, heedless, full of hope, and full of pleasure—on, on; but whither?

The rain was falling with a soft sound on the quivering foliage that darkened with green gloom the windows of the dim drawing-room at Veriston. The drenched flowers bowed their heads beneath the fast-coming drops. It was going to be dark early that night, and already twilight shadows were falling.

Cecil Graham and Argent stood in the deep recess of one of the windows, which was wide open, for there was no wind, and the rain could not touch the broad sill. Immediately below, the beds were covered with white narcissi, while tall Ascension lilies stood on either side; the air was heavy with their sweet strong perfume. Argent caressed one of these lilies with her slight fingers, as she stood leaning gracefully against a corner of the massive window-frame, herself a very incarnation of the "flower of Heaven;" so at least thought her companion as his eager eyes rested upon her. Her white clinging dress revealed the delicate contour of her figure and trailed on the floor behind her; her pale face was bent, and a shadow from the leaves fell on her smooth head. A smile of dreamy sweetness parted her lovely lips as she spoiled the calyx of the flower she held, and gazed within at its golden heart.

Cecil had been spending the whole day at Mere House, which was no unusual occurrence now. He had become quite a favorite with the old man, since he was not only ready to listen to his meandering discourses on science, philosophy, and what not, but also, having a knowledge of the subjects which interested his host, he was capable of joining in and offering new ideas for consideration. But this was only when the two were alone. Whenever Miss Veriston was present a curious silence fell upon the young man. He answered absently and at random. He was always watching her, always on the look-out to pay her attention, to forestall her slightest wish, and to gratify her slightest fancy. Heart and soul he gave himself up to the wild worship she inspired.

Was she conscious of it? He could not tell; still less if she reciprocated his feelings in the very least degree. She would often smile upon him now, a smile clear and cold as starlight. She would talk to him as she never did to her father, would listen with some amount of interest when Cecil read aloud to her. Yet her eyes never brightened, her hand never trembled, and her colour never deepened at his approach. Often when he unexpectedly met her his heart would throb till he could hardly see, and his blood would course swiftly; but the first accents of her cold low voice would strike like ice on his veins. Many a time he had been on the point of telling her all his tale of love; but when her eyes rested on his with their remote unseeing gaze,

"Look calm, yet bland,
I shall not know, I will not understand," the words died on his lips. He must wait, he told himself, with a sigh; wait longer yet.

But now the hour had come. He was going back to town, so he told Mr. Veriston, whose regret had been unfeigned. Glancing at Argent as he said it, he had surely caught a gleam of interest in the quiet face, an unmistakable shadow had dimmed her eyes, and her voice had a ring of sadness when next she spoke. His patience, then, had earned its reward! His love had stirred the placid depths of her girlish nature at last! Now was the time to put out his hand and grasp the pearl, to pluck the lily and wear it on his breast!

"I am going away," he said, at length, abruptly, when the girl, having dropped her flower, was apparently absorbed in watching the rain. "Will you miss me a little, Argent?"

"Yes," she answered very gently.

"Are you sorry then?"—coming a little nearer.

Argent clapsed her hands before her, and looked out through the thick leaves to the troubled west, where a bar of amethyst light parted the gray clouds.

"Am I sorry?" she repeated dreamily. "Yes, I suppose so," sighing a long soft sigh. That sigh set his heart beating wildly; and, before he could go on, she said, "But you will come again soon—soon?"

Cecil paused a moment to command his voice. How beautiful, how sweet, how pure she was! And all his own, he knew it now! Stilling with a mighty effort the mad throbbing of his pulses, with a passionate movement he took both the fragile hands into his warm grasp, pressing them against his breast; and, while she stood looking up at him, pale and statue-like in the gathering gloom, with her eyes, full of some new emotion—was it pain or pleasure?—fixed upon his, he said, in tones that shook her to the soul—

"Argent, Argent, I will come again if you bid me; for I love you, darling, my darling!"

CHAPTER VI.

"Well, have the travellers arrived?" asked Madge Graham, throwing her hat aside, as she sank into a chair, apparently quite overwhelmed by the heat.

"No," responded Cecilia, one of her sisters, coldly. "It would be a relief to my mind if one of them never did arrive. Why could not Cecil have married some one in society?"

"Lady Mary Grainger, for instance," murmured the third sister, who was fanning herself languidly in the depths of a luxurious lounge. "But of all things that he, with his refined æsthetic tastes, should have tied himself—in this rash hasty way to a—to a mere country bumpkin!"

"Outrageous!" exclaimed Cecilia.

"My dears," remarked Mrs. Graham mildly, "you forget that your brother describes Miss Veriston as being a most beautiful and aristocratic young lady. He would scarcely be likely, you know, to admire a 'country bumpkin,'"

"Oh, don't tell me!" replied Cecilia sharply. "It is just your high-flown geniuses who do all the most ridiculous and outre things. He would get some rubbish into his head about this girl, and fancy her perfection, no doubt!"

"Really, Cis," cried Madge, "your language is elegant! You have got 'rubbish,' as you term it, into your head! Why, Cecil describes her as a lady of high degree, though out of the world if you like; and none the worse for that. He says"—pulling a letter from her pocket—"'She is as fair, as graceful as a lily, golden-haired as Eve when first——' Oh, I needn't read all that!"—smiling to herself. "Let me see, 'Their family boasts a much greater antiquity than ours. The house and park are magnificent! I should like you to see them; and I am sure no one could help loving Argent. There!"——triumphantly.

Mrs. Graham sighed contentedly; even Cecilia was silent for a moment.

"I wonder what she will think of our being in town now—actually August!" said Cecilia. "Everybody gone; and we, for papa's foolish whim, left vegetating here in the heat and boredom!"

"Well, well! But do give me a cup of tea!" implored Madge, burying her face in a mass of réseda, the offering of some favoured swain. "I must go and dress; they are sure to be here soon."

An hour or two later, just as Mr. Graham, senior, was growing impatient for his delayed dinner, there was a ring and a double knock, followed by the sound of voices without.

Madge rushed to the door in her impetuous way, and never heeded Cecil's arms as he was about to enter. Hastily putting her away, he turned to his mother; and, in a stern strange voice that struck a chill through the family circle, said—

"Mother, here is my wife—Mrs. Cecil Graham!"

Mrs. Cecil Graham! In spite of good-breeding all were taken aback, and his mother put her hand to her head perfectly confused. Instead of the fair elegant lady, whose description Madge had read so enthusiastically, a little plump girl scarcely more than a child, dark-haired, showily dressed, and covered with blushes, came somewhat awkwardly from behind the shelter of Cecil's tall figure.

There was a look of scorn on Cecilia's haughty face. Mrs. Graham, losing all discretion in her wonder, burst out with—

"Why, Cecil, is this your bride? I thought you said she was tall and fair?"

"This is my bride!" interrupted Cecil, with sarcastic abruptness. "Nellie, kiss your sisters-in-law."

Upon this Madge, who had turned from red to pale, and from pale to red, with a violent effort took the trembling girl's hand.

"You are welcome!" she said; and then, "I will take you to your room. Dinner is ready, and papa doesn't like to wait; so don't change your dress."

Oh, how the grandeur of the Piccadilly mansion overwhelmed the little country girl! She scarcely dared to tread on the velvet-pile carpets, or glance at the powdered footmen; still less could she stammer out a word to those soft-voiced, satin-robed ladies, who seemed to her like the inhabitants of another world.

In a whirl of awe and nervous excitement she followed her sister-in-law up a wide staircase to the apartments which had been prepared for the bridal pair. The bedrooms were adorned with every possible comfort and luxury; and a stifled exclamation burst from the young wife's lips as she entered.

"You like your rooms?" asked Madge, opening a door into a pink-lined nest. "This is your boudoir. Your dressing-rooms are opposite. I hope you won't mind being condemned to town for a fortnight longer? We cannot persuade my father to leave before then."

"Oh, no!" replied Nellie in a hushed tone, scarcely understanding this speech.

Madge forced back a sigh as she looked a moment at her brother's country bride; then, with a murmured "I will send your maid; but please don't change your dress," she left the room, and Mrs. Cecil Graham was left alone.

A most uncomfortable dinner was that which followed. Cecil, totally unlike himself, was silent and abstracted, replying in monosyllables to his mother's endless questionings. He seemed like one in a dream, whose heart and thoughts were far away, not indeed like a man who had won and wedded the woman he had chosen out of all the world to be his wife.

The bride, in her travelling-dress of brilliant hues and country make, her face excessively flushed, her hands trembling, painfully nervous and gauche in manner, felt herself to be the object of mute criticism on the part of her new relatives, as well as the servants, of whom she stood nearly as much in awe. The knowledge did not tend to improve either her manners or her appetite. It was easy to see that one and all disapproved of her, though the disapproval was veiled by a great show of politeness; and the girl's heart swelled within her with wounded pride and vanity.

As for Madge, she knew not what to make of it. There must have been some dreadful mistake. This little country girl was not in the least like the graceful, golden-haired creature his passionate adoration of whom Cecil had confided to his favorite sister. Plainly enough Cecil was miserable—plainly he did not care an atom for his bride. What was the solution of the mystery? Madge had a horrible feeling of the world's being out of joint, as she sat through the long stately dinner, painfully alive to all the gaucheries of her brother's wife, painfully alive to Cecilia's frown and sneer as the bride said "No, sir," to her father-in-law.

Later in the evening, when one or two people had come in and conversation was going on freely, Madge found an opportunity of drawing Cecil aside into the empty conservatory. Laying her hand on his arm, with a loving gesture, she said tearfully—

"Oh, Cecil! Tell me, dear, how all this has happened."

"All what?" he asked, a frown darkening his face for a moment.

"You know, Cecil. Don't pretend to misunderstand me. Won't you confide in your own little sister? I can't bear to see you so miserable!"

Cecil sat wearily down on an artificial rocky-seat; and, groaning, he hid his face in his hands.

Russian Peasant Courtship.

When once a paraeek (young Russian peasant) with his parent's consent, of course, has made up his mind to marry a certain girl nothing can make him go back on his way, he is as firm as a rock in carrying out his purpose. Whenever an opportunity of seeing the sweet object offers itself to him it is generally taken advantage of, and thus something like a courtship springs up between the young lovers. This, however, is of no long duration, and is of the simplest character. The parabok frequently visits his dyevka, but this is generally done when the parents of the latter are in the land of dreams. A stable or a pigshed, a corner of which is often found to be occupied by a peasant girl as a summer residence, answers the purpose of a reception room or parlour. It is there in that improved parlour where young lovers reveal their hearts to each other.

A Texas man tells this cheerful tale of the experimental school of medicine: "A woman came to a prominent physician and asked for a remedy for her husband's rheumatism. The doctor gave him a prescription and said, "Get that prepared at the drugstore and rub it well over your husband's back. If it does any good, come and let me know. I've got a touch of rheumatism myself."

WE were much pleased, and a little surprised, when we learned the other day that our young friend and former neighbor, Mr. Andrew S. Irving, had taken unto himself a partner, "for better for worse" Andrew is among our most industrious and well-to-do agriculturists, has made constant and substantial improvements on his farm, a mile out of Markdale, which is now one of the best in the Township. We sincerely wish the happy couple a joyus and successful journey through life.

Wonderful is the effect of West's World Wonder or Family Liniment in Rheumatism, Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Scalds and all diseases requiring external applications. It stands without a rival. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co Druggists Markdale. July GARDEN PARTY.—The lawn party given by Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Beattie last Friday evening in aid of the Markdale Methodist church building fund, was largely attended. Flesherton and Markdale was well represented as well as the country between. Mr. Beattie is one of the best and most progressive farmers in the district, and has his fields, fences, buildings and premises generally in applepie order. His commodious brick residence and beautiful grounds were well lit up, while the provision made for the enjoyment of the company, both refreshments and recreation was elaborate, and every possible attention paid to the comforts and entertainment of the large assemblage by both Mr. and Mrs. B. The brass bands from Flesherton and Markdale were on hand, and the friendly feeling which exists and is manifested between them, together with their liberality in contributing to the enjoyment of the company, was a subject of general remark. They played both separate and united, and the jury could not agree as to which took the cake (we would judge they both had their share). Everyone appeared to enjoy themselves, and we are certain it was a gratification to Mr. and Mrs. Beattie to have their arduous efforts crowned with success. It is no small undertaking for one family to provide for such a gathering, but Mr. Beattie does not do things by halves. The church trustees are very grateful for his appreciated effort. Receipts $24.15.

Holland Council.

The Council met at Holland Centre on the 10th inst., Members all present. The following correspondence was read: Creasor & Morrison re Ward; Jas. Dundegon and Duncan Mathieson for gravel, (Council refused to acknowledge on account of former motion in regard to the same;) Masson & Masson, re Alex Lyons; Trustee U. S. S. Holland and Artemesia (for B. Coleman); Clerk of Glenelg, re Holland granting an equivalent on town line; petition in favor of Angus McNiern for relief, ($5 granted). On motion the statute lobor standing against 53, 54, 55, con. 3 E, G, R., was received as performed, as per declaration of James Kennedy for 1886. The Clerk was instructed to issue an order in favor of Secy.-Tres. of police village of Chatsworth, for use of Town Hall for Court purposes. G. Little was allowed $6 as arbitrator on U. S. S. Holland, Euphrasia and Sullivan. Moved by Mr. Howey, seconded by Mr. Williscroft, That we grant the sum of $25 to cut down hill near Mr. Walker's. The Clerk was instructed to write to Stephen Edmunds to remove stones placed in water. On motion $5 were given to assist in paying expenses incurred in burying an old man, McNeevan. The Clerk was instructed to notify the petitioners in the Sullivan, Euphrasia and Holland School arbitration cases, to pay the amount coming to the arbitrators. The Council adjourned till the 13th Sept., when a collector will be appointed.

CARSON PRICE, Clerk.

AN INVISIBLE FOE

The poisonous germs of disease are lurking in the air we breath and in the water we drink. The system should be kept carefully purified and all the organs toned to proper action. This can best be done by the regulating, purifying and tonic powers of Burdock Blood Bitters.

Presbytery of Owen Sound.

The Presbytery of Owen Sound met in Division Street church on the 6th instant., at 1:30 p. m. Mr. D. Millar of Queen's and Mr. R. McIntyre of Knox, were examined and licensed to preach the gospel.

The standing Committees to visit the mission fields, dispense sacrements and make arrangements for the payment of the missionaries, were appointed.

Mr. Sym accepted the call from Wiarton congergation, and his induction was fixed for Monday, 19th inst., at 1:30 p. m.—Mr. Scott to preside, Mr. Stewart to preach, Mr. Morrison to address the minister, and Mr. McInnis to address the people. Mr. R. Intyre declined the call from Berkeley and Williamsford congergation. The question of the restoration of the Fredericksburg church, sent down from the Synod, was considered, and it was agreed to commend the scheme to the congergations of the Presbytery. In the beginning of the century the ministers of that congergation ministered to the spiratual need of a people scattered over nearly the whole of the area now covered by the Synod of Toronto and Kingston, Other matters of minor importance were attended to, and the Presbytery adjourned to meet in Wiarton on the 19th inst., at 1:30 p. m. and was closed with the benediction.

J. SOMERVILLE Clerk

[Owen Sound Times.]

Markdale is celebrated for its speckled trout, and the fame of the Revere House there for trout breakfast is spreading throughout the country. A hungry crowd from Owen Sound struck the place a few mornings ago, under the leadership of a certain young lawyer. The landlord had word of their coming and prepared for the invasion, and he had need to. We are afraid to chronicle how many trout they got away with; but some tall fish stories have been told since they come home. —[Owen Sound Times.

Sir John Macdonald is to resign the premiership on his return from the Northwest.

A Horrible Suspicion.

An Irish matron entered a lawyer's office: "Is this the place, sur, where people git divorces?"

"yes occasionally we engage in that kind o' business. What can we do for you, madam?"

"Faith, sur I'd loike to git a divorce from me husband Patrick."

"What is the matter with Patrick, madam?"

"Sure and Patrick gits dhrunk sur."

"That's bad. But I hardly think that alone will be sufficient cause. Have you no other complaint?"

"Indade I have sur; Pathric bates me."

"Yes, yes I see. That adds cruelty to drunkness. But, madam you don't seem to suffer much in your appearance from Patrick's cruelty. I think you must find a stronger reason before the court will grant you a divorce."

"Well sur, besides all that, I fear sur that Patrick isn't true to me."

"Ah! now, madam' you begin to talk business. What reson have you for thinking that Patrick is unfaithful to you?"

"Well, sur, I may say that it's myself that has a strong suspicion that Patrick is not the father of me last child.

During the funeral of William Norton on Wednesday Mr. John Bonnell's horse became unmanageable and ranaway, throwing Mr. and Mrs. Bonnell out of the rig. Mr Bonnell was considerably bruised and cut about the head, and the buggy badly wrecked and for a time it looked as if the horse would do serious damage to occupants of rigs ahead of it, but they escaped with the exceptions of Mr. Henry Bonnell, whoes buggy was broken and the occupants thrown out without injury however.

A BAD BREAKDOWN

It is a common thing now-a-day to hear one complaint of feeling all broken down with a faint, weary, restless languor, with strength and appetite nearly gone, and no well defined cause. This is general debility which Burdock Blood Bitters promptly relieves, and most invariably cures.

VOTERS UNDER THE ONTARIO LAW.—Doubts having arisen as to the rights of persons assessed for $300 income and land owners' sons to vote at municipal elections, the town clerk was instructed at last meeting of Galt Council to obtain the solicitors' opinion on the points. That opinion is the effects that persons assessed for $300 income can only vote for members for Legislative Assembley, the municipal voters income qualification being $400 Land owners' sons, the same opinion goes on to say, are only eligible as voters for members of the Legilative Assembly. The anombly in the latter case is that farmers sons always voted at municipal elections as well as at Parlimentary elections.—Galt Reporter.

An exchange lays down a sound principle in the following remarks, which apply with no little force to our own town:

"what makes business so dull in small places? This is a question often asked but not so often satisfactorily answered. We are of the opinion one good reason is, our business men mix up trade too much. There are too many general stores and none of them making a specialty of any particular line. If hardware were left to hardware merchants, patent medicine to the druggists, fancy goods to fancy stores, school books and note papers to bookstores and so on, trade would improve. It looks as if when any one man starts some line that takes well every body rushes into the same thing and away goes the profits. We think this way of conducting affairs wide of mark and disastrous to business. It should be a cause of rejoicing to see our neighbor prospering and instead of us pitching in and running a strong opposition let us stick to what legitimately belongs to our trade or our profession and in the long run we will see it pays best."

HEALTH.

Sleep Habits of Children.

Many habits and customs, the deleterious effects of which are recognised, would become things of the past if a practical and simple remedy can be devised. I have never met with any plainly written advisory articles on the training of children in proper sleep habits except as to time. A recent experience has taught me to "study up," on the subject, in the most practical way, by asking questions of mothers and nurses—My little patient, whose habits and conditions led to this investigation is ten years old. A serious and chronic affection of the kidneys has resulted from excessive use of sweets and consequently lack of appetite for, and assimulation of nutritious food. She persistently sleeps prone on the back with the arms flexed above her head; watchfulness results in her turning on one side from eight to ten times every night, but, of course, a farther result is diminished sleep, although it is not more restless than usual. Whether the habit can be permanently broken up is difficult to say. From her birth she exhibited a preference for that position, and had been indulged in it, with the inevitable results of catarrhal affections, dry throat, enervating, restless sleep; and aggravation of the kidney difficulty, as the spine was unduly heated by constant contact with the bed. From the hour of birth a babe should be laid down, to sleep, with great care, never should it be permitted to lie on the back while sleeping, after it begins to play, the restless limbs are very beneficially exercised while lying so, but so soon as sleep comes the little one should be gently lifted and placed on the side with the head raised only sufficiently to insure the spine from any curvature, seeing that there are no folds in the clothing to torture the tender flesh, especial care being taken to lay the ear smoothly back. Alternate the sides or there will be an unnecessary unevenness of contour when the child is grown; do not permit the knees to lie so flexed as to crowd the viscera. Lying on the stomach occasionally is not injurious if the arms lie at the side and the face if free to the air. Frequently that proves to be a very restful position to a play-weary child. It is not a difficult matter to teach a child to sleep with the mouth closed and without snoring or "gritting the teeth." A lady of thirty-five who had habitually gritted her teeth from their first possession was cured of the habit in a fortnight by persistent waking at the first indication of the sound, the habit has not been resumed during the five years since passed. If mothers could realize how many people suffer from bad sleep habits contracted in childhood, they would pay a little attention to their children at night-time, beyond the "hustling off to bed, out of the way," and the "keeping covered" which is a sort of "dim religious duty" kept sight of out of fear of the doctor's bill, rather than of any other consideration.—A Lady Physician.

Some Fallacies in Regard to Diet.

1. That there is any nutriment in beef-tea made from extracts. There is none whatever. 2. That gelatine is nutritious. It will not keep a cat alive. Beef-tea and gelatine, however, possess a certain reparative power, we know not what. 3. That an egg is equal to a pound of meat, and that every sick person can eat them. Many, especially those of nervous or billious temperment, cannot eat them, and to such eggs are injurious. 4. That because milk is an important article of feed it must be forced upon a patient. Feed that a person cannot endure will not cure. 5. That arrowroot is nutritious. It is simply starch and water, used as a restorative, quickly prepared. 6. That cheese is injurious in all cases. It is as a rule, contra-indicated, being usually indigestible; but it is concentrated nutriment, a waste-repairer, and often craved. 7. That the cravings of a patient are whims and should be denied. The stomach often needs, craves for, and digests articles not laid down in any dietary. Such are, for example, fruit, pickles, jam, cake, ham or bacon, with fat; cheese butter and milk. That an inflexible diet may be marked out which will apply to every case. Choice of a given list of articles allowable in a given case must be decided by the opinion of the stomach. The stomach is right and theory wrong, and the judgment admits no appeal. A diet which would keep a healthy man healthy might kill a sick man; and a diet sufficient to sustain a sick man would not keep a well man alive. Increased quantity of feed, especially of liquids, does not mean increased nutriment; rather decrease, since the digestion is overtaxed and weakened. Strive to give the food in as concentrated a form as possible.

The Biggest Cannon England Ever Had.

The steamship Elder has arrived at Woolwich from Elswick with the first of the 110-ton guns ordered of Sir William Armstrong for the British Government. It is to be proved at the butts below the Royal Arsenal, and after some experiments have been made to test velocity and other qualities, it will probably be taken to Sheeburyness for the customary range trials. The gun cannot be landed for a few days, and cannot at present be seen, being buried in the ship's hold under 150 tons of projectiles, and even after it is on shore will not be immediately taken to the butts, as it will be necessary first to test the canal bridge and ascertain if it is streng enough to bear it.

A great carriage or sleigh of iron has been built in the Royal carriage Department to hold the weapon while being fired, and this, which weighs about 90 tons, will be weighted with 110 tons more, and passed over the bridge before the gun is ventured upon it. The gun carriage, which is enormous in comparison with anything of the kind, has been named "The Juggernaut."

What It Will Do.

Polson's NERVILINE, the great pain cure, never fails to give prompt relief in the following complaints:—Sprains, bruises, cuts, tic douloureux, rheumatism, spinal pains, neuralgia, toothache, lumbago, sciatica. Get a bottle at any drug store. You will be made happy. Ten and 25 cents a bottle.

"GOOD NIGHT MY SON."

Convict Clark's Interesting Adventure with a Trusting Parson.

For obvious reasons the keepers of jails and prisons make it a point to suppress all particulars of escapes so far as lies in their power, and as escaping prisoners seldom boast of their deeds, the public remain in ignorance of much that is deeply interesting regarding convicts and those employed to guard them.

The escape of Charles Clark, alias Charles Stetsen, alias Red Charley, and alias several other titles, from the Ohio State prison some years ago, was a fair sample of the genius and desperation of a professional crook who had been "settled" for seven or eight years for robbery. From the moment Clark entered the prison he began making mental notes for future use. The number of doors, the location of the guards, the defences of various windows, the lay of the sewers, the thickness of the walls—every point was noted and stored up in his memory. He was assigned to a cell on the ground tier. In three days he had estimated the distance to the outside wall to a fraction of an inch. His idea was to remove one of the flagstones from the floor of his cell and tunnel out, and within sixty hours after being received in the prison he was at work. With an old chisel which he managed to secrete and bring in from the shop, he scraped out the cement from around the stone.

ONE OF THE CORRIDOR SENTINELS

passed his door every half hour during the night, and it was two weeks before Clark had the stone ready to lift out. He found a foot of concrete under the stone, and he went through that and hid the dirt in his bed. He calculated that the sewer for that wing ran within four feet of his cell, and he was right. He wanted to make use of it simply to carry off the dirt from his tunnel. For many weeks he dug away at night unsuspected by the sentinels, but as he had to carry the dirt out in his pockets each morning he made but slow progress. It was nine weeks before he struck the sewer, which was of brick. When he had made an opening, the sewer gas poured out in such quantities as to almost suffocate him. Indeed, it poured through the tunnel and filled the corridor until the prison officials were alarmed and began to search for the cause. Clark had to go down and stop up the hole, and he was made ill for a week. At the end of that time he tried it again, but the gas was worse than before, and he found himself obliged to give up the undertaking. He could easily have run the tunnel, but there was no other way to dispose of the dirt. He replaced the flagstone, cemented it with dough, and his efforts were unsuspected.

Clark had been in prison about five months when he concocted another plan. From some local convicts he got the name of a minister of the Gospel in the county who somewhat resembled him in general appearance. He also ascertained that the man was very timid and kind hearted. Pretty soon Clark was seized with an "indisposition," and, while not sick enough to be sent to the hospital, he was excused from work in the shop and permitted to remain in his cell. The prison chaplain found him an eager listener to his exhortations, and matters were soon so shaped that he was led to believe that Clark had something on his mind. When pressed to admit that such was the case, just long enough to put the chaplain's curiosity on edge. Yes, he had something on his mind. It was something the Rev. Tobias Green ought to know. If he would call at the prison some day he should hear a confession which would clear up a great mystery and set certain things right.

THE PRISONER HESITATED

For three or four days Clark beat about the bush, playing the chaplain for all he was worth, and the result was that the Rev. Tobias Green visited the prison with his mind made up to listen to some strange and wonderful confession. It was not Clark's day for confession. He realized that he was a bad—bad man, and was quite willing to talk about his soul and his future, but he would tell his story some other day—the day after to-morrow. An appointment was made for that day with the Rev. Tobias Green, and he departed feeling that he had greatly softened the heart of a desperate man. Clark's "indisposition" increased somewhat, just enough to keep him in his cell and to prevent him from being too closely watched. The chaplain came in and prayed with him, the doctor sent him a few doses of quinine, and whenever any one looked into his cell the man was lying on his bed.

At 4 o'clock on the afternoon of the day designated the Rev. Tobias Green put in an appearance. It was midwinter, and the day was so cold that the preacher was well bundled up, having on a heavy overcoat and a fur cap and muffler. The day was so dark that some of the halls were lighted. One of the hall masters conducted the preacher to Clark's cell and left him, and the good man took the convict by the hand and anxiously inquired after the state of his health. Not more than two minutes had elapsed before the preacher was lying on his back on the bed, and his thoughts terribly mixed up from a rap on the head. When he had got matters straightened out he was stripped to his shirt and drawers, and his hands and feet were securely tied. Clark had prepared himself for the job, and it was done in a prompt and thorough manner. Inside of ten minutes he was dressed in the preacher's clothing, while the latter was covered up with the blankets. Then the convict sat down with his back to the door and kept up a mumbling conversation for half an hour. During this time, as he himself related, he poured into the preacher's ear all he stories he had ever heard to the detriment of the "cloth." He finally ended by singing a hymn, and when he passed outside the cell door he turned and said, in a voice meant to be heard by the hall watchman:

WITH A GAG IN HIS MOUTH

"Good night, my son. I truly hope that this visit has been the means of doing you good. I will come again to-morrow, if possible."

With that he started for the hall, and the watchman passed him to the wicket. This was unlocked without question, as also were all other obstructions to liberty, and he reached the street without the slightest hindrance. He had relatives in the suburbs of the city, although the fact was not known to the prison officials, and he walked straight to the house and was taken in. The Rev. Tobias Green remained passive until the hour came for the man to be locked up, when he was discovered. An alarm was at once sent out, but Clark was safe. He remained secreted in the house for about a month and was then shipped away, and his recapture was never effected. In relating his story he said that the five or six minutes necessary for him to pass out of the prison aged him more than any two years of his life.

CALLED BACK.

Rescue of a Supposed Corpse from Being Frozen to Death.

A Reading, Mich., dispatch says: Mrs. Lucinda Faste, of Woodbridge township, while on her way to the Fourth of July celebration, fell unconscious from her seat in the carriage, and was to all indications dead. Medical assistance was called, but all efforts to restore her proved frutile and she was given up, although not having every appearance of being dead. The body was laid out and taken back home for burial. Arriving there, ice was procured in which to pack the remains, and they were so packed for more than 30 minutes, when an old physician, Dr. Necilch, called on the bereaved family. He was so struck with the life-like look of the "corpse" that he expressed doubts of her death. The body was quickly taken from the ice, and the doctor went to work to establish the fact of her living. He opened a vein in Mrs. Faste's arm next morning and the blood flowed freely. In a short time the lungs began to work, and the funeral preparations were abandoned. The patient now lies apparently asleep. Her house is filled with curious neighbors, and the local physicians are much puzzled over the case. It is said by the neighbors that Mrs. Faste's mother once had a similar experience; that she lay in a trance for many days, and when she came to evinced a full knowledge of everything which had gone on around her.

END OF THE ARCHER GANG.

Another Outlaw Meets Death at the Hangman's Hands.

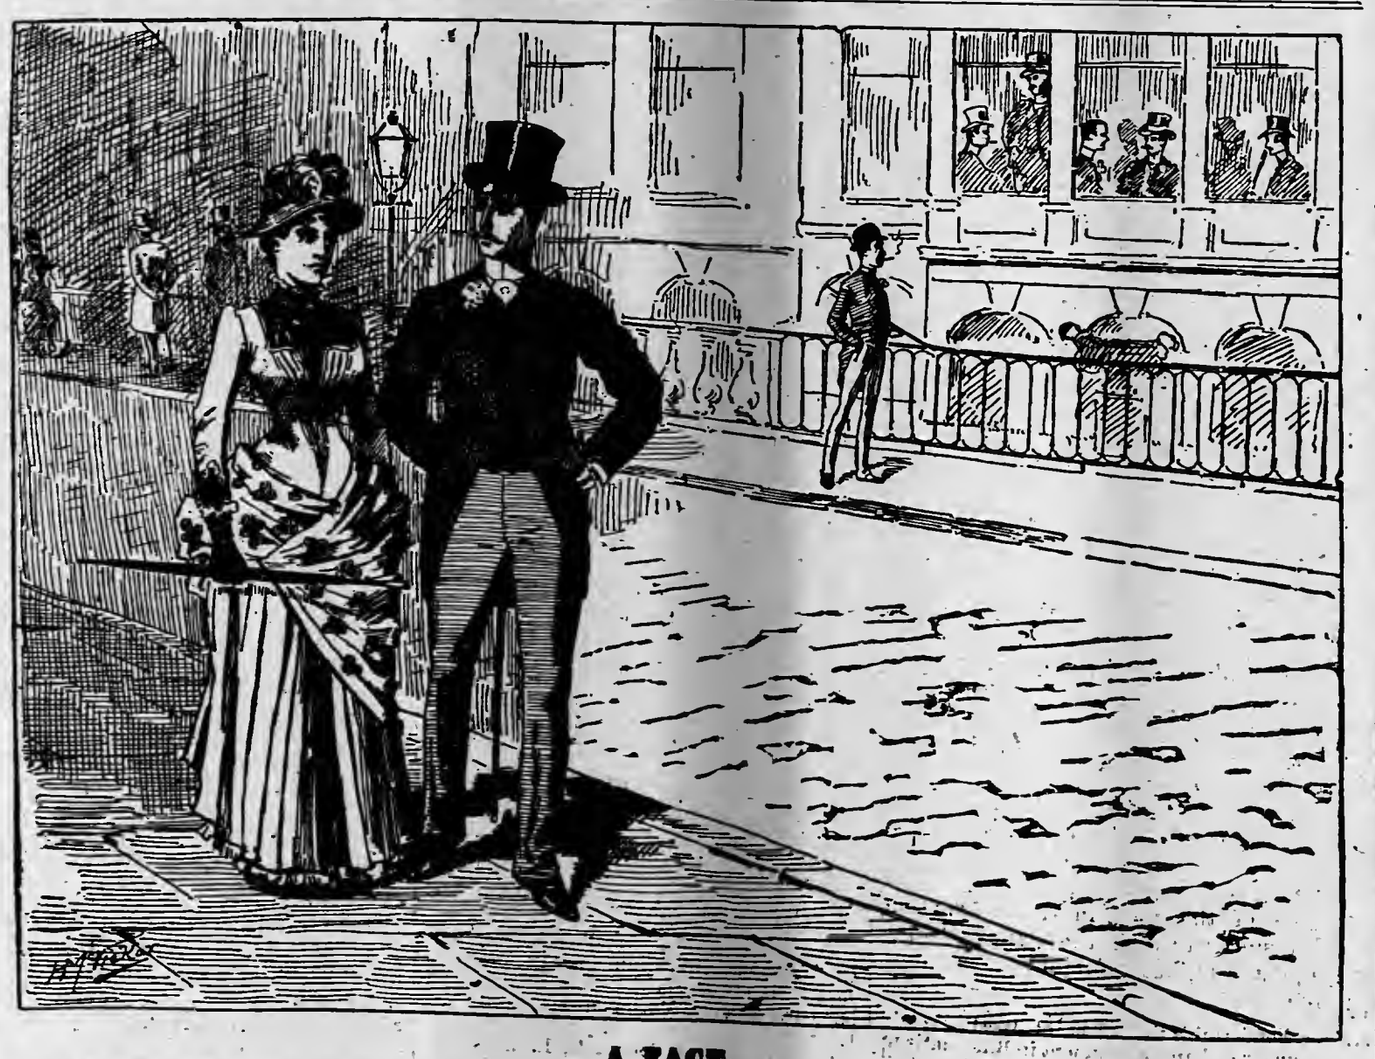
Sam Archer was hanged at Sheals, Ind., the other afternoon. He was convicted last January of complicity in the murder of Samuel A. Bunch on July 11, 1882. He escaped arrest until betrayed by John D. Lynch, one of the gang. In July, 1882, Sam Marley and Mart Archer quarrelled, and Archer was wounded by Marley. The older Archers determined to punish Marley, and they organized a gang of six men, including Tom, Mart John, and Sam Archer, John D. Lynch, and Dave Crane. Mart was chosen Captain. The work of ferreting out the hiding place of Marley began.

Bunch's house was watched constantly, as it was believed he was aiding Marley to escape. The Archers finally resolved to kill Bunch if he refused to reveal Marley's hiding place. They met on July 11, near the home of their victim, and sent Dave Crane to decoy him into the woods. Bunch accompanied Crane to the spot designated, where he was seized, bound, and subsequently taken to Saltpetre Cave in Orange county.

Before entering the cave they told the captian if he would reveal the hiding place of Marley he should go free. He answered, "I do not know where he is." They then descended into the cave with the prisoner. They seated him on a large rock with the lantern's light shining on his face. He was ordered to tell all he knew concerning Marley, and it was determined if his answers did not prove satisfactory he should die on the spot. He answered again that he did not know where Marley was.

Each man was ordered to fire at Bunch or suffer death himself. The word was given, and sixteen shots were fired into Bunch's body. The victim uttered a piercing cry and fell. Mart Archer then placed his pistol near Bunch's head and fired the seventeenth shot.

The search that Bunch's friends made for him alarmed the gang, and on July 18 they visited the cave and put the body into a box which they placed on a brush heap some distance from the cave. The whole was thoroughly saturated with oil and the torch applied. The fire was kept up for several days and nights, each one in turn standing guard and adding sufficient fuel to keep the fire blazing. After this work was ended a tree was felled over the spot to further hide the crime.



Little information concerning the fate of the missing man could be learned until the deserted wife of John Archer, who had taken refuge in the county poor asylum, gave sufficient evidence concerning the deed to cause the arrest of the older Archers for murder. A mob threatened them, and they were taken to Davies county for safety. The prisoners soon expressed a desire to return to Shoals, and their request was granted.

A party of lynchers made a successful attack on the jail on March 9, 1886. They marched quietly to the jail, battered down the doors, marched the three prisoners into the courtyard, and left them swinging from the limbs of maple trees. Thus ended the career of Mart, Thomas, and John Archer, father, son, and brother.

A week later the last of the gang, Sam Archer, was arrested in Fountain county and kept in the State prison until the January term of the court, when he was brought to Shoals under military escort of forty, who guarded him until the sentence of death was passed upon him.

A Scotch clergyman remarked to one of his flock that he heard he was about to be married for the third time. The reverend gentleman added: "They say, John, you're getting money with her. You did se on the last two occastonss. You'll get quite rich by the wives." "'Deed, sir," responded John, "what wi' bringin' them in and puttin' them out there's nae muckle made o' them, sir."

At a dinner party last Winter the cool weather had done considerable duty in supplying conversation, when a plump happy-looking married lady made a remark about cold feet?" Amid an awful pause she naively answered: "Yes, indeed, I am very much troubled—but, then, they are not my own." Her husband blushed scarlet.

Every Day Work.

Idols are trumpeted loud bells are heard turn round to see:
Echo peaks echo to the pæans sung
Some great victory.
Some great deed are few. The mightiest
Have opportunities but now and then.

Some sit idly through long days of peace,
Gather for walls to scale,
Wait but until some Golden Fleece
Calls him to face the gale?
Find work enough Why idly then delay
Work enough, no mits most who labors every day.

Some sweeps down the mountain's brow
With foam and flash and roar;
Its strength is spent—where is it now?
The short day is o'er,
But clear stream that through the meadow Flows
Long Summer on its mission goes.

Some the steady way; the torrent's dash
Leaves its rent track dry,
But we love is not the lightning flash,
Nor the midnight sky.
But the sweet sunshine, whose unfamiliar ray
Is the calm throne of blue light every day.

Truest lives are those to duty wed,
Whose deeds, both great and small,
Close knit strands of an unbroken thread,
Where love ennobles all.
No one may sound no trumpets, ring no bells;
The Book of Life the shining story tells.

Retribution At Last!

CHAPTER VI.—(CONTINUED.)

"Heaven knows I am miserable!" he cried. She was infinitely distressed. She had known he was unhappy; but to hear him acknowledge it seemed more than she could bear. She sank upon her knees by his side, and put her white arms round his neck.
"There has been some dreadful mistake!"
she murmured, her tears falling fast.
"It has been an act of mad folly, of contemptible idiocy!" he cried with sudden violence. "To think that I, who loved—who should have tied myself for life to that low-minded girl!"—pointing with a gesture of loathing to the room where his wife was disporting herself in happy ignorance. "Oh, my Argent, my beautiful, my love! Even if you could not love me,
I might have held myself pure for your sake!"

"Oh, Cecil!" exclaimed his sister, looking at the visible despair in eyes and voice. "Did not Argent—did not she love you?"

"No," he returned, hopelessly. "She looked into my face with the far-off unsee-ing look she has—as remote from me as an angel in Heaven—and said, when I dared to speak of my love, 'Do not speak so;
you pain me! I don't know what you mean;
I cannot understand!' And when I would have taken her in my arms, crying 'But I love you; only let me love you!' she shrank back moaning, 'No; never, never!
I do not love you, I do not want you to love me. Go—go!' She was as cold as a statue, and as pitiless There was no ser-row or trouble in her lovely eyes; only that far off gaze, more hard to bear than active hatred! And I left her, Madge—left her, full of madness, all the air like fire around me. What happened after I do not know; but I know, to my sorrow, that I married Nellie Mill, who loved me!"
There was an expression of intense bitterness upon his haggard face. "I married her three days afterwards. Who knows," he went on after a pause, during which the poor girl's tears had fallen silently, "but that if I had waited I might have won my darling after all? Ay, it is this thought that stings me to the quick. But for my cursed folly, my senseless rage, I might have had her; but now she is beyond my reach forever. Oh, Heaven, what a fool, what a cursed fool I have been!" And he groaned again.

"Madge," cried a hard voice at this moment, "Sir Horace Malcolm is asking for you; he wants you to sing with him.
You must come at once;" and Cecilia appeared in the curtained archway.

Madge brushed away her tears and sprang up.

"In a moment," she said; then, as Cecilia retired, she stooped over her forlorn brother and kissed him tenderly and solemnly. "Your own wife is the only one who has a claim upon you now, darling. She loves you; do not punish her for your mistake—let the dead past bury its dead.'"

"Ay," murmured Cecil bitterly, when he was left alone, "but is the past dead? No; it will never die; it will sting me, it will haunt me for ever; it will make life a burden to me! Oh, Argent! Oh, my lost, lost love!"

Meanwhile, things were looking a little brighter to the young wife. She had been introduced to several people who smiled encouragingly on her rustic beauty. One of these, a Mr. Lewis Deane, had remained by her side, and was entertaining her with much instructive conversation, when Madge came in. In appearance somewhat effemin-ate and youthful, "cheeked like Apelle," with his fluted voice," Lewis Deane was in reality a hardened blasé man of the world, utterly selfish and unprincipled. He was the very worst friend she knew it, that she could have made. In the present instance his curiosity was excited. He wanted to find out what had fascinated the eagant, æsthetic poet so excessively in this country-bred girl as to induce him to marry her.

"She is pretty, too," he told himself, as he looked with bold admiration into the dark, long-lashed eyes, noting the clustering curls, the rosy lips, and baby dimples.
"If only she were better dressed she'd be a charming bit of Watteau, but no doubt she'll improve in that line."

Such was his tact, that he soon made the shy girl feel at ease with him. Madge was surprised when she escaped from the piano, and glanced towards Nellie, to see her animation, the sparkling light in her dark eyes, and the gay sallies with which she was apparently amusing her companion, while her shrill laughter, as unsubdued as in her native wilds, excited the whispered comments of the guests, and nearly drove Claudia Graham wild.

"Do speak to your wife, Cecil!" she urged in an angry undertone. "She is not only disgracing herself, but us! Can't you do something to stop it?"

But Cecil never raised his eyes from the album in which he was apparently absorbed.

"No; I can do nothing," he answered absently.

"If you do not care for your own sake," remarked his sister, with cold contempt, as she moved away, "it seems to me you might think a little of the credit of your family."

"Cecil Graham must have lost his wits to allow his bride to flirt in such a bread—
I could almost say vulgar way!" observed a portly matron to her favorite gossip. "And with Lewis Deane too, of all men in the world! Not a very good beginning to matrimonial felicity, I fancy."

"I never saw a bridegroom's face less expressive of felicity in all my life!" said the other emphatically, shaking her shoulders.
"He looks the picture of misery, and doesn't seem to have a word to say for himself. I can hardly believe him to be the same man as the Cecil Graham I met at Lady Thornton's last winter. He seems to have had all the spirit driven out of him somehow."

"Well, I'm not surprised, if this is a specimen of his bride's manners," said the matron with asperity—she had intended her eldest daughter for the popular poet. "An ill-bred doltish chit of a girl! The family don't seem to like her either."

"No, and yet they say it's a love match.
Quite, I suppose, a King Cophetua affair.
Only I should have imagined Cophetua after his marriage with the beggar-maid to have been a little more devoted."

This conversation was but an echo of many others which took place that evening in the drawing-room of the Clifden House, the popular opinion being that the girl was a pretty dairy-maid, that Mr. Deane's attentions were very marked, and that Cecil Graham was more of a fool than poets in general are supposed to be.

* * * * * * *

"That girl's conduct is unbearable," indignantly exclaimed Lavinia Graham, about a fortnight later, bursting into Madge's boudoir, where she and Cecelia were gossiping with a bosom friend over a cup of tea.
"I believe she's lost her senses; at least, it's the most charitable thing one can believe."

"You allude to Mrs. Cecil Graham?" inquired Ella May, thoughtfully sipping her tea. "I confess I have often wondered what could have induced your brother, with his exalted ideas, refined tastes, and so forth, to have married her."

"'All the world wondered,'" quoted Madge rather flippantly; then, more seriously, "What peculiar iniquity are you bewailing, Lavinia?"

"Give me some tea, Cis dear," murmured that young lady in an exhausted tone, throwing herself upon a couch as she spoke,
"then I'll tell you; and see if you don't agree with me that she is a woman without honour or principle of any sort."

"I saw that plainly enough the evening she arrived," remarked Cecilia, as she poured out the tea.

"Poor Cecil!" said Madge in a low tone, her eyes filling with tears.

"Poor, indeed!" exclaimed Cecilia, catching the murmur. "Why, he must have been an idiot, or bewitched! I declare I am ready to cry whenever I think of it: he might have married any one." Here Ella May blushed ever so slightly. "Any one!
Half the girls were wild about him—and with his position, his talents, his appearance!" and Cecilia groaned. "Then to go and be befooled by this—this doll, this vulgar rustic!" searching in vain for a more withering expression. "To throw himself away, to disgrace his family—oh, dear, dear!" and the speaker fairly broke down and hid her face in her hands.

"Poor Cecil!" repeated Madge. "He is miserable. If he has been foolish, he is paying a bitter penalty for it."

"Well, to be just," said Lavinia, "I must say that I blame him partly for his wife's misconduct. He does not even shew her common attention. I have seen her look at him as a dog will that wants a caress from its master—as if hungering for a kind look; but Cecil is as cold as a stone, as blind and deaf as a statue."

"Of course; he's too disgusted to be anything else. But what made you so fierce just now, Lavinia? Anything fresh?" asked Cecilia, sitting up again.

"Why, you know, when luncheon was over, Nellie said she must go and write a letter, and she wished Mr. Deane good morning as she went out. After boring me for a quarter of an hour, he suddenly remembered an appointment in the Park, and bade me au revoir until evening. Half an hour later"—with solemn impressiveness—
"I went into the library for a book, and there he was, hanging over her chair, engaged in the most confidential of conversations."

"Just what I could have foretold," commented Cecilia.

"I will not positively say that his hand was on her shoulder, but I think it was.
The sight took away my breath.

"It might have been an accidental and innocent thing enough," faltered Madge.

"Accidental—innocent!" with bitter emphasis. "Why, then, did both turn as crimson as—as—the ribbon on your dress?
Why did he start away, and she give a scream? Oh, of course they pretended it was quite accidental, but the thing was too palpable. However, I shall acquaint Cecil.
After this, perhaps, he will see the necessity of rousing himself, and looking after his wife a little."

Madge sighed faintly as she went away to dress. Sad was the penny face she saw reflected in her mirror as her maid wound up the smooth coils of brown hair, and clasped a jewelled circlet round the fair neck. By the time her toilet was finished she had made up her mind what course to pursue.

"I must do what I can for dear Cecil," she told herself. "Nellie is but a child, after all—badly brought up perhaps, and utterly ignorant of the ways of the world.
I am sure she loves Cecil. Yes, I will speak kindly and plainly to her; I will warn her gently and try to like her better, poor girl! Cecil has made her his wife, therefore he ought to treat her as such—to guard her youth, to protect her from insult and from danger." For the first time Madge felt a sentiment of disapproval for her brother, who had been hitherto perfect in her eyes.

Entering Nellie's room in answer to her "Come in," she was startled at the pretty picture which met her eyes. The young bride was dressed in white satin, with pearl ornaments, and the splendid simplicity of her attire contrasted admirably with her dark attractive style of beauty. She was paler than formerly, and the loolier all the better for it—more refined and more delicate. She was alone, and she had been trying the effect of some flowers in her hair.
She flushed in an embarrassed way when she saw who was the intruder. Madge—all unused to such an errand—dashed at once into the subject.

"Nellie," she began, taking her sister-in-law's hand, "I want to speak to you about Mr. Deane." Nellie flushed yet more, and her eyes drooped; but she said nothing.
"You are young, and do not know the world," went on nineteen-year-old Madge, "or you would understand, dear, how very undesirable are the attentions of any man—especially such men as Mr. Deane—to a married woman. You would be horrified if you knew the surmises to which your conduct has given rise. Cæsar's wife, you know should be above suspicion."

Nellie pulled away her hand, sat down on a chair close by, and burst into passionate tears. Very quietly Madge knelt by her side.

"You will not talk to him any more?"
she asked gently. "You will not grieve us all? You will not grieve Cecil? Don't cry, dear! I know you thought no harm.
If I had my way"—with a burst of indignation—"such men should be outcasts from society!"

"I—I am so lonely!" sobbed the little bride at last. "No—no one cares for me, or notices me but him! He is kind to me.
I don't want to lose my only friend."

"I fear we have all neglected you," replied the other soothingly; "but I will be your friend, dear—we shall all learn to love you; and Cecil, do you not think of him?"

"Cecil?" cried the girl, her eyes flashing.
"He hates me! And, oh, how I have loved him! When I married him I thought he loved me, and I would have given my life for him. He doesn't care—he never thinks of me; he hates me, I say, and I—oh, how am I to bear it?" And again her sobs broke forth wildly.

Madge was shocked and a little frightened. She felt angry with her brother. That he should visit his misery on the innocent girl he had married seemed to her an unjust unpardonable thing; but it was not her task to tell this to the weeping wife.

"Listen to me," she said, drawing the curly head on to her breast. "He does not hate you; if you shewed yourself in your true light to him he would love you; he could not help it. Don't let him learn to regard you as a mere flirt, a frivolous vain creature! Let him see you love him and value his approval above all things in the world. Begin afresh, Nellie, and win his love—will you?"

"I will—I will!" cried the young wife impulsively. "Kiss me, dear Madge. Bless you for those kind sweet words!"

Madge went down to the drawing-room with a lighter heart and a glad hope that all would now be well. Alas, she little knew how his rejected love had warped Cecil's kindly nature, how it had turned the healthful currents of his life into gall and vinegar, how enclosed he was in his selfish sorrow—dead to all but vain, passionate longing and remorse!

CHAPTER VII.

There was a large dinner-party one evening at the Clifden House, which was to be followed by a soiree musicale. Nellie Graham was quite the belle, as her husband was the rage. The two were as great a contrast in manner and in personal appearance as could possibly be—she so small, so dark, sparkling with animation, naively pleased by the admiration she excited, charmed by the novelty which surrounded her, and fresh and piquante as a child; he so tall, fair, and cold, icily indifferent, palpably weary, bored by the worshippers who would swing their censers before him, bored by everything.

"Can't think what's come to Graham!" remarked one of his friends, who was an aspirant to the fair Cecilia's hand. "He hasn't a word to say for himself! In my opinion it's this confounded poetry-writing that's turned his head. 'Another good man gone wrong,' Jim, my boy!"

"Aw, aw!" responded his languid companion. "Depend upon it it's mawiage—mawiage has done it!"

When Mr. Lewis Deane found himself for the first time repulsed, and the simple country girl, with whom he had been amusing himself, far from being as enthralled as he had imagined, he resolved to make her own his power, resolved to make her care for him. Choosing to think himself in love with her, he vowed that she should love him. He could have ground his teeth when, in spite of his utmost fascinations, he saw her eyes wistfully following her husband's tall figure as he moved amongst the crowd, the lines of her baby-mouth taking a mournful droop as Cecil passed her without the slightest notice.

"Little fool!" muttered Mr. Deane.
"He cares for her no more than a stone would; she is infatuated. But I am not going to be mocked by a country-bred child. I'm not going to be thrown over now. Even if I hated her, I would not let her off. One thing I can't bear, and that's ridicule. By jinge, if I were to lose my bet and get my conge, how the fellows would laugh! I should lose my prestige for ever."

All unconscious of her companion's thoughts, Nellie sat musing sadly over Cecil's changed looks, longing sorrowfully for the golden days when she had dreamed he loved her, watching, while she mused, the tall figure threading the vari-colored crowd, and finally pass through a velvet-shrouded window to the balcony outside.

Now was her chance—he was alone. She would follow and speak to him, she would make an appeal to him from her very heart. Yes she would shew him that she loved him and none other. Surely he would respond to the devoted love of his own wife!

"Excuse me, Mr. Deane," rising awkwardly enough. "I am going to my husband. No, thanks, I will go alone."

Mr. Deane looked after her with a sardonic grin.

"Go!" he muttered. "Nevertheless, my fair lady, you will come to me again,
and with a difference!"

On the balcony Cecil Graham stood alone.
In truth, the prospect thence was a poor one by daylight. It consisted of a general view of smoky gardens and melancholy trees with a background of stucco mansions. But night concealed the dull-ugly realisms of a commonplace view. A large golden half moon hung in the purple sky, edging tree and shrub with a line of mystic gory; and a faint wind stirred the heavy branches.
Sweet-scented flowers lay pale through the spacious balcony, and the coy but powerful though grimy shyness glimmered amongst them, pallid and dim in the gloom of summer night.
Through the heavy velvet curtains came notes of the host and noise within; but strains of music and the full liquid tones of some professional singer stole soothingly on the ear and died in the darkness beyond.

Cecil Graham stood buried in mournful reverie—dreaming, mourning over the past, as he always did when alone. It was as though Argent Verliston had indeed thrown some subtle web around him, which he could not break. He was fast becoming a mere visionary, an indolent dreamer of unprofitable dreams. Deaf and blind to all things around, his old ambition dead, the duties of life neglected, he yielded himself up a prey to useless regret, to bitter-sweet visions of what might have been.

He started when his arm was touched softly, half expecting to confront the angel of his reverie. Instead there stood by his side a little shrinking figure, robed in white, the large eyes fixed half timidly, half imploringly on his face, with an expression that would have touched any heart less self-centered than his own.

"What do you want?" he asked sternly,
a frown deepening on his brow.

With a desperate effort the girl summoned her fleeting courage.

"I am his wife, and I have a right to speak," she told herself; then aloud—"It is so long since I had you to myself, dearest, and, when I saw you come here, I—I thought I would come too."

"You have taken a great deal of unnecessary trouble then," he said rudely. "I came here because I wished to be alone, as you might have guessed."

"But, oh, Cecil"—taking his unwilling hand between her own—"you will not send me away—your own wife?"

"I cannot think why you bore me like this. I tell you I want to be alone."

"Are you angry with me, Cecil?" There was no reply. "Is it—is it—because you think I have been—flirting—with Mr.
Deane? Oh, Cecil, if I have done so, it was because I was so miserable, so lonely, and he was kind to me; but, if you will love me a little, I don't care if all the world besides hates me!"

All the young wife's soul was in her eyes as she looked up into the rigid face of her husband of one month—yearning for one relenting glance, one kind word; but neither was given. He only answered, icily impassive—

"It is a matter of perfect indifference to me, madam, whether you flirt or not. I think we have had enough of this nonsense;"
and he stood aside to let her pass.

But with a sudden movement she fell at his feet, clasping his knees within her white arms, her face upraised, and tears streaming from her eyes.

"I will go—I will go!" she breathed, between her sobs. "Only tell me the truth,
Cecil! Do you love me? If ever so little,
I can be content—I can live and hope for more. Oh, Cecil, we have only been married a month—say you love me a little! I am so miserable, Cecil!"

It was a pitiful sight—the childish face and figure, the pleading voice, the passionate abandon of the attitude; but it did not move the man's hard dead heart. Angry and annoyed, he said, roughly unclasping her fingers—

"Don't degrade yourself like this. If you will have your answer, here it is—I do not love you!"

"But you loved me once, Cecil—at least you loved me once!" she cried, resisting his will with the force of despair.

"Get up, I say!" he answered, enforcing the words with an imprecation. "You knew well I do not love you—I never did.
You knew it when I married you!"

"Then you love Argent Verlston?" said
Nellie, rising to her feet, her face whiter than her dress, and her voice as hard and cold as his own.

"Yes!" he exclaimed, raising his face to the sky in a sort of rapture. Then in hopeless tones he added, "Yes, I love her. Heaven help me!"

"And may you be forgiven the wrong you have done me!" returned the injured wife, her violent nature completely in the ascendant, all her sweet impulses crushed by his scorn.

* * * * * * * *

As Cecil Graham was dawdling over his toilet late the next morning he found a small note on his dressing-table addressed to himself in sprawling tremulous characters, which he had evidently overlooked on the previous night. It ran thus—— "Since you do not love me, since you never have loved me, I leave you. Since you are a liar and deceiver instead of the good, true, noble man I believed you, you cannot blame me for the step I take. In heart and soul you are more false to your marriage vows than I am, and all my guilt is on your head. If there is justice in Heaven you, whose cruelty has driven me to this, will answer for it!"

That was all. There were no irrepressible words of outraged love, no broken-hearted plea for forgiveness. Yet these few lines were written by a broken-hearted, loving woman, whose very love and pain had maddened her until evil seemed to be as good, and good as evil. Always weak, always passionately impulsive, goaded to frenzy by her husband's cruel scorn and loathing of her presence, the misguided girl, in the hour of her mortal weakness, had listened to the voice of the tempter and had fled from the scenes she could no longer endure—alas, not alone!

Nellie's shaft had struck home, and the suddenly-awakened conscience would be heard. She was right; he was false to his marriage vows, and her guilt was on his head. Her guilt! At the thought he started to his feet. There might yet be time to save her and to save his honor, for even now he thought most of that. But no —and again he groaned; the sin and the disgrace were irremediable; it was too late —too late to undo the past, to alter the in-exorable present, too late to retract the cruel words which had driven his young bride into—he shuddered to think what depths of misery and despair. For the time Cecil writhed in anguish beneath the torture.

Then there was a knock at the door, and Madge, [illegible] in her morning dress, came [illegible] in her hand.
It was a telegram. Tearing it open, he read——

"From Lewis Deane, Wyantet Hotel, Dover. Cumbrett dying; where has been a railway accident. Your wife is dying."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

A Shower of Lizards.

Judge Belden, Major Smith, and Col.
Sykes came into Laramie the other evening with a big story about a storm in which it rained lizards that they had passed through a few evenings before on the Laramie plains. They had been over the divide to the Kellogg ranch, and on returning were overtaken by a furious gale, which presently brought rain. For an hour or so it poured in torrents, and then, just at dusk, they felt something solid striking them occasionally. At length the Colonel, who was sitting on the back seat, reached down into the wagon box and pulled out a "water dog" about six inches long. This convinced the tourists that an extraordinary storm was in progress, and to some extent prepared them for what was to follow.

"Little by little," said the Judge, "the bombardment increased, until lizards and toads were thicker'n flies. We turned up our coat collars and pulled down our hats, but it did no good. They'd strike us in the face, in the lap, on the back and all over,
and the horses became wild with terror.
We lost our way and the Major got out to look at the ground, but jumped back in the wagon again with an unearthly yell, saying it was knee deep in lizards. By this time it had stopped raining, and we came to the conclusion, after mature reflection, that the area of the storm could not be large, and that, if we moved straight ahead in almost any direction, we would soon be out of it. Acting on this determination we started up again, and in the course of half an hour we struck hard ground. We camped near there, and when daylight came we went back a ways and examined the lizards. There were millions of them, the great majority of them being dead as the result of their fall; but there were plenty of live ones, and the way they were crawling around was a caution.

Some one having asked what theory they had to advance in explanation of this strange visitation, the Major said that there was a lake on the summit of the steep mountain that was full of lizards and he had no doubt that the wind, which was very high, had scooped out that body of water with all its contents and dumped them on the Laramie plains. He had known of a similar case in Kansas once. A cyclone had followed the line of a river and scooped it out so clean for a distance of nineteen miles that farmers living thirty miles from the stream found fish, turtles and frogs in their front dooryards, and believed they had rained down. The Colonel said he had brought a few of the lizards in to show the folks, and would get them, but after searching the wagon box in vain he was forced to apologize by saying they had probably come to life and crawled away.

The Use of Homing Pigeons.

The use of pigeons by Mr. C. T. Arneus as message-bearers, in the yacht races of last September, proves conclusively the value the birds might have as messengers from off the water. The purpose was the thought of the last moment, and when almost too late to make the necessary preparations. The arrangements were hasty, and the material hemed at several centres, some of them miles away from the centre of use.
Still, with all drawbacks, insufficiencies and mistakes, it was evident to the most prejudiced that with birds trained for the work, and with the atmospheric conditions at all favorable, the birds would six times out of seven prove to be of the greatest value; and failing the seventh, we would be only where we are without them. The messages were each not less than ten pages of manifold note, and were carried upon the middle feathers of the tail, to which they were fastened by fine copper wire, wound around and pressed flat to hold the message close to the feather. The editor of a newspaper served by these pigeons said: 'It gives me a peculiar sensation to receive copy from the hand of one I know to be out of reach upon the water, and to feel that he may talk to me but I can't answer back. It is a wonder to me after this experience that the officers of any vessel, excursion steamer, yacht, sail or tug-boat should be willing to leave the shore without this means of communicating with it.'

Very many of the merchant marine, especially in European waters, have pigeons on board for use in communicating with the vessel from the small boats away from it or from shore. These birds, it is said, never mistake another vessel for their own when at dock or in the harbor. It has been remarked of several flights that the birds in exercising, when far out of sight of land, will go away for hours at a time, and upon their return will have dried mud on their feet and legs, showing them to have been upon shore.

Mr. A. P. Baldwin experimented with pigeons for sea service twice in 1885, and to his satisfaction. One bird liberated by Officer Croom of the Waesland at one o'clock in the afternoon, when three hundred and fifteen miles from Sandy Hook, was in the loft at evening. Another let go from the Otrcasia at nine in the morning, when two hundred and fifty-five miles out, brought a message before evening."

Quick On the Trigger.

An insurance examiner and adjuster, who was called upon to investigate a loss, inquired of the policy-holder:

"Where were you when the alarm was given?"

"I vhas asleep in my bedt."

"Did any one wake you up?"

"Vhell, my clerk comes und pounds on der door und says our shtore vhas gone cop.'

"What did you do?"

"I goes down town to telegraph to Boston to see if your insurance company vhas gone cop too."

"Ah," said Jobskus, taking his friend's baby, "he has got his mother's eyes—and my hair," he added, as the youthful prodigy grabbed him by the forelock.

MARKDALE, JULY 22, 1886.

Church Notes.

The Methodist church at Inistioge has gone through important repairs this summer, being vaneered with brick and painted inside. The brick was done by Isaac Stinson and the painting by R. O. Whitby, both of Markdale. The Church will be re-opened on Sunday, the 25th, when Rev. G. H. Cornish, Chairman of Markdale District, will preach morning and evening, and Rev. W. Ayers of Flesherton in the afternoon. A tea splash will be given the following evening.

The new Methodist church at Riverview, Melanchon, was opened a week ago last Sunday.

The Rev. Mr. Cornish has now got settled down, and is making his first call on members and congergation. He is evidently a persevering systemtic worker, and has created a very favorable impression. Mrs. Cornish and daughter are also filling important offices in the sabbath school and other Church work.

Rev. D. McLeod, Presbyterian, of Priceville. has gone on a trip to the North-West for the benifit of his health.

Mr. McIntyre, Presbyterian Student of Holland Centre, has accepted a call fron Hamilton and Nelson.

Rev. Mr. Scott, Presbyterian, of Owen Sound, started on Tuesday for the lower provinces to resusticate.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND SUNDY SCHOOL CONVENTION.—A meeting of teachers was held at Markdale on Friday last for the purpose of forming an association for the county. After a short service in the church the meeting was convened in the school room, and Rev. J. Ward was called to the chair. A paper was read by Rev, J. C. Farthing on "The subject of our lesson and how to teach it," and another by Mr. A. Turner on "The teachers aim," followed by discussion on both. After some discussion on the topic connected with Sunday School work, it was resolved to form a Church of England Sunday Schcol Association for the county, and the following officers were elected:—D. Creighton, President Miss Mockler, Vice-President; A. Turner, Secretary; Miss M. Spragge, Corresponding Secretary. It was arranged that the meeting next year would be held at Owen Sound on the second Friday in July.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the STANDARD

DEAR SIR,—Your issue of last week indicates that you have made a change in musical reporters. Changes are sometimes desirable and greatly beneficial. We strongly suspect that your new musical reporter, who so ably reported the brass band concert held here July 12th, firmly believes he is the peer of the best musician the world ever produced. As a vocalist he may be a grand success. He undoubtedly possesses a gigantic brain, overflowing with melody and song, and polished by fine musical culture and training; but, as a brass band reporter and critic, he is evidently a pretender and an ignominious failure. Refer to your paper of last week and notice his gross ignorance. He says, "After a short chat the band started the programme again with a march; lead good, E bass good, all good excepting B bass and trombone at ff. places were over-blown." Is'nt it amusing and surprising that this would-be critic is so shamefully ignorant of band music. The fact is the band plaid a quickstep instead of a march; and there was no trombone part at all, as the man who plays the trombone is and has been for more than two weeks away from Markdale on his summer vacation, and the trombone was not plaid at all. but was quietly and unobtrusively hanging upon its peg in the band room. If Barnum's notorious steam calliope had been plaid in the band at that concert I have no doubt but that your new musical reporter would have called it a lovely little picalo well played, but "ff places" blown too soft. However, we do not wish to be severe, and the poor fellow's report on the whole was very good, but before sending him out to report a band concert again. print some large labels, paste them on all the instruments, then your musically intellectual reporter will know which is which. Criticism is good, but let not the ignorant or assuming egotist attempt it, as it is a most difficult task.

THE BEST YET

There is no preparation before the people to-day that commands their confidence more or meets with a better sale than does Dr. Flower's Extracts of Wild Strawberries—the infallible remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints.

Walter's Falls.

(From our correspondent.)

Monday last would doubtless have proved a red letter day, as well as an Orange one, in the annals of Walter's Falls, but for the sad accident of the afternoon, and any misgivings that may have been entertained, regarding the progress and prosperity of the place, were surely dismissed as idle fancies, upon witnessing the magnitude of the preparations and the general enthusiasm that prevailed. On Saturday evening while engaged in erecting the arches, a number of our citizens became immensely excited over the operation; one, in an outburst of wild exhiliaration, imagined he could fly, and, it is said, even made the attempt, but was speedily convinced on coming to the ground rather forcibly in a horizontal position, that he was of the earth—earthy, and not adapted by nature for taking aerial flights. Others contented themselves with pulling down fences and various exuberant demonstrations, showing their prospective elation at the great coming event. The "glorious twelfth" was bright and clear, not a cloud dimned the blue expanse, a cool refreshing breeze blew gently from the west; all nature seemed in unison with the celebration of the day, which promised to be one of supreme enjoyment. A handsome arch tastefully decorated with evergreens, had been erected across the street, opposite Bonnell Bro's store and Tuck & McLeod's hotel, from top of which proudly floated the British flag, a row of evergreens also had been placed in front of the sidewalks. Dr. McLellan, in place of evergreens, had a great stretch of crimson cloth suspended across from his place, which, in the sunlight, looked grand and imposing. From fully half a dozen different places moved the Union Jack, that emblem of freedom all over the world. About 10:30 a.m. the lovely notes of fife and drum were heard in the distance, and shortly after. the Sydenham and 10th line lodges entered the village, with music playing and banners waving, and were soon followed by the Massey lodge, who came in waggons. After dinner the various lodges were marshalled in front of the hotel, when the bands struck up and rendered several soul-stirring airs — airs which thrill the whole frame with martial ardour, and makes it easy to understand how our ancestors could defy the "Pope, the devil, and the Pretender," while under the influence of such music. The brethren then formed in line and proceeded to the Methodist church at the north of the village, accompanied by a vast crowd, to hear the speeches expected to be delivered there. The church was soon filled to overflowing. The meeting opened bp singing the first hymn, and Rev. Mr. Johnston was deeply engaged in prayer, when a sudden stir was observed amongst those near the door, this increased to a commotion; something very unusual must have happened to cause the interruption. Subdued voices were heard in eager discourse, then in low tones passed from one to another throughout the church, the words, "Willie Norton is drowning in the mill pond." Everyore was astounded at the news, and deeply affected. His parents were present. When it reached his mother's ears she fell back, completely overcome into the arms of those beside her. O, the mother's feelings, who can realize them? None but those who have passed through a similar agonizing ordeal. The meeting immediately broke up, and all hurried down to the scene of the disaster, his distracted father being among the first; he at once plunged into the water to search, but in vain, for his dear boy, and was with difficulty prevailed on by friends around to leave the fatal pool. Expert divers had already tried to find the body but without avail. It seems that some boys, after being engaged in a base-ball match, had ran down to the mill-pond to take a bathe, and were amusing themselves by holding on to a boat with their hands the rest of their bodies being in the water; Willie Norton was at the one end by himself and a number of boys at the other; all at once the boys let go of their end, and the other, suddenly descending, came against Willie's head, partially stunning him, so that he could make but little effort to save himself, although it is said he was a good swimmer. Had there been any assistance at hand it is probable the boy might have been saved, but all were so much engrossed in witnessing the proceedings up town and at the church, that there was but little chance of any one coming near the place, and when they did arrive it was too late. Over three hours elapsed in dragging the pond before the body was recovered. It is needless to say that the sad occurrence cast a gloom over the village and all those assembled. Faces that in the morning, beamed with bright anticipations of enjoyment, were in the afternoon "sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought." No further demonstrations could, under the circumstances, take place, and the visitors, who had so much honored us by their presence, took their departure towards evening in sadness and silence.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. Thos. Gilbert is having his house rough-casted, and a new roof on it.

Mr. John Holly comes out with a fine new buggy.

Mr. Wm. Buchanan, jr., is putting up a number of stone fences along the front of his farm. They are splendid for stopping the snow-drifts, and will not blow down.

Mrs. Wm. Hutchinson is away on a visit to the old settlements.

Mr. Adam Hislop has a field of fall wheat almost ripe.

Messrs. John and Thomas Ross are running the Davis saw-mill.

Last week's rain has made a great improvement in the crops.

Haying is now the order of the day, and dry weather anxiously looked for.

The C. P. R. pays Up.

OTTAWA, July 15th.—The last of the loan of the Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway was retired on the first of this month, and the Company is now entirely out of debt to the Government.

National Council.

From our own correspondent.

The case Mr. Norton vs. Holland Township came up at the Division Court on Monday last; Mr. Morton lost it.

A horse belonging to Mr. Wm. Minions, kicked one of his cows last Sunday and broke her leg.

Mr. McIntyre is about to leave our village about the 1st August, having received a more lucrative call near Hamilton.

One of the men working in Lilburn's saw-mill was suddenly brought to his risibilities recently by sitting down too close to an edging saw while in motion. He received a slight flesh wound.

The sad news of her son being drowned, was almost fatal to Mrs. Wm Norton. She is, however, we are pleased to learn, recovering the shock. The occurrence has cast a gloom over the neighborhood.

Councillor Galbraith threw down fence on disputed deviation re Ward, and a suit is expected as a result.

Mr. Spears cow had her leg broke by being dogged on the road. There is need of a dog tax to thin out the usless ones, and that is at least 99 per cent.

Jas. Foster gets another two weeks to recuperate, by the doctor's orders.

HE ACTS WISELY

"I am so weak I can hardly move, all run down with a Chronic Summer Complaint," said one gentleman to another on our street the other day. Now, take my advice," replied his friend, "go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Flower's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I have never known it to fail in curing any Summer Complaint.

The British elections are over, and the result, a crushing defeat for Gladstone, there being a majority of nearly 300.000 votes against Home Rule.

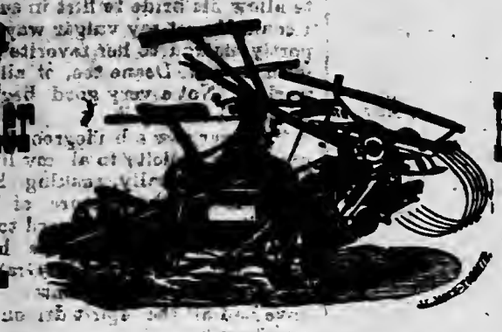
THE JOURNAL.



allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years' also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat My throat, for weeks so badulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a goose quill through It is now entirely healed, and as I am able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor and also recommend any one who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat,

Yours truly
W. H. Cox.

Dr. Washington will make monthly visit the last week in each month.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

System and Saving.

A lady writes about system and saving. When a woman gets married she knows she has a house to keep and has no business to get married unless she expects to keep house; and having accepted the position of housekeeper, if not fit for it, she should proceed at once and cheerfully to fit herself.

You would despise yourself, if tossed into a great sea, you made no struggle for a boat, a buoy, or the shore. So, when you find yourself almost overwhelmed with worries and care, and the steak is burning, the baby fallen out of bed, and your husband suddenly wants a button sewn on—hold the babe with one arm, lift the steak with the other, and tell John to bring you a needle and thread. Say no more. There are times when silence is not only golden but diamonds, and this is one of them. Thoughts are ghosts when unspoken, and troop harmlessly about, but once spoken they are living, sentient beings; therefore do not speak of a trouble or annoyance, unless speaking of it can remedy it. Very likely silence will in twenty-four hours lay the ghost, but once give it a voice and it may live forever.

Next to silence is order. If that is Heaven's first law it is twofold, the housekeeper and cook's. "A place for everything and everything in its place" might well be framed and substituted for "Home Sweet Home," over our doors.

To misplace a kitchen fork or spoon may burn to a cinder the most carefully prepared dish. The convenient holder lost from its nail may burn the cake or ruin the pie, and incense the cook. A cook table, full of drawers, where flour, spices, rollingpins, and cake-cutters are kept, with bake-pans hanging over it, will save you miles of travel and hours of time. A small shelf near the stove, kept for an extra pepper and salt dish, has saved me fifty miles' travel, I think in ten years. Only for one day count how many times you go from cook table to stove, seasoning various dishes, and you will see what this means.

Before putting a stroke in your kitchen stand by the stove or range as the objective point, draw a straight line from that to every object which is often used there, and place it as near as possible. Keep kettles and gridirons so near that you need but to turn to reach them, and always, if possible, wash them as soon as used, because they wash easier and it saves time.

In finding places for kitchen utensils study every time to place them where it will take the fewest steps to reach them.

The walk, walk, walk, step, step, step, all day of some housekeepers remind us of the tread-mill work of a horse on a wheel. The poor, dejected animal looks always down, and counts the same rounds hopelessly interminably.

There is no use of it. If brains do not save steps in housekeeping, then brains should go to the wall and machine work come in. If a sane woman will go twice or thrice a day down cellar and bring up five or ten potatoes at a time, instead of a peck, and wash them at once, then my talk is not for her, for I cannot simplify housekeeping.

A japanned server is the keystone of the kitchen arch, and a dumb waiter between the cellar and the pantry or kitchen is one of the supporting pillars; a ventilator over the stove is another.

In the sitting room the greatest aid to simplify housekeeping is a work-table with folding-leaves and the sides full of small drawers, so that when the housekeeper sits down to sew she can put her hand at once, and without arising, on crochet and knitting needles, tapes and darning cotton, and every possible need.

I reiterate. Put all the articles of every day use at the point where they can be reached with fewest steps. Once a year weed out the foolish knicknacks of beads and cardboard, and the like, which seem to accumulate like frogs of Egypt, over night, and drop from our ceilings, cumber our walls, load our shelves, and require hours of dusting. They are a delusion and a snare, and a caricature on true art at best.

A Chat About Oatmeal.

No one can live long in a Scotch community without noticing the healthful look of the children, whose food consists largely of oatmeal, compared with those fed on fine grains, or even groats, which are the same, only without the husks. This chaff or husk however, which is left in the meal, contains some points that act as a stimulant on the coats of the bowels to keep them active without medicine and render this food of great benefit to the dyspeptic. There is no method of cooking oatmeal equal to the making of porridge, and when properly prepared it is generally a favorite dish for breakfast. "What makes your oatmeal porridge so good?" is a frequent question in our house from strangers, and they think the meal must be of superior quality. But to prepare it properly the water must be boiling, necessary salt added, and the oatmeal then stirred in slowly sifting it through the fingers. The process not to be hurried if lumps would be avoided. When it begins to boil up well stop stirring and close the pot tightly. Set at the back of the stove while you cook the rest of the breakfast. Lift the porridge without any more stirring, as it is this that breaks the grain and makes it waxy. The Scotch do not stir with a spoon, but with a smooth flattened stick called a "spurtle," that any one can make according to their own idea. This gives more evenness to the mixing, and if cooked in this way the porridge will be sweet, wholegrained, and wholesome.

He Cured the Horse.

A Connecticut farmer drove a horse attached to a rack-wagon to the wood lot for a small load of wood. The animal would not pull a pound. He did not beat him, but tied him to a tree and let him stand. He went to the lot at sunset and asked him to draw, but he would not straighten a tug.

"I made up my mind," said the farmer, "when that horse went to the barn he would take that load of wood. I went to the barn, got blankets, and covered the horse warm, and he stood until morning. Then he refused to draw. At noon I went down, and he was hungry and lonesome. He drew that load of wood the first time I asked him. I returned and got another load before I fed him. I have drawn several loads since. Once he refused to draw, but as soon as he saw me start for the house he started after me with the load."

Money lenders take more interest in business than any other class of men.

Some girls are said to be so modest that they will not work on ill-proper fashions.

"I am to tell the truth." "Yes," interrupted an acquaintance, "but you are a very bad shot.

Speaking of drinking it may be observed that the man who "can take it or leave it alone" generally takes it.

Committeeman—"What animal is the most capable of attaching itself to a man?" Head of the class—"The leech, sir."

"Ah," said Jekokus, taking his friend's baby, "he has got his mother eyes—and my hair," he added, as the infant prodigy grabbed him by the foretop.

"I am coming by and by, you will hear my plaintive cry, in accents mild and gentle as a lamb. I'm not coming on a frolic, but to give small boys the colic, sing hey! the small green apple that I am."

"How is this, son-in-law; you went to the ball last night and here it is scarcely two months since you lost your wife?' "I acknowledge it, my dear mamma; but then you know, I dance so sadly!"

Old Strictum—See here! what makes you so late this morning?" Office boy—"I had to get my hair cut." Strictum—"Well you could have sent some one else to attend to that. Don't let it occur again."

Fond mother (to bachelor uncle)—"Why, John, don't let the baby play with that gold toothpick. He'll swallow it." Bachelor uncle—"Oh, that won't do any harm. I have a string tied to it so I can't lose it."

A dealer advertises: "I am selling fine corkscrews in men's pants at $5" Unless there is a loaded flask in the hip pocket the inducement of a fine corkscrew in the pants will not capture many purchasers.

The hopeful 6-year old son of one of Waterbury's best known lawyers walked into the District Court room the other morning and presenting a black kitten with a string about its neck said: "Papa will you take care of my cat until school is out?"

Eastern young lady to Western young man—"We were disappointed in not getting cards to your sister's wedding, Mr. Breezy. Were there no cards?" "Well—er, sister didn't play any, but some of us had a little two dollar game after the minister got away.

It is asked how editors pass their leisure moments. Bless your dear soul, they don't pass them. They never catch up to them. An editor is usually from ten to forty years behind his leisure moments, and he always dies before he gets within gunshot of the rearmost of them.

"Mary Ann," says one chambermaid to another engaged in filling up vacated rooms. "are ye there?" "I am," says Mary Ann. "Thin, Mary," says the other, "the gentleman ent of twinty-siven has left pomade." "Willye take it into the office?" "Faith, I'll not; its me own hair that requires the same."

A jealous woman a few nights ago went through the pockets of her husband while he was in bed asleep, expecting to find a love letter from another woman; but, instead, finding only an old pocket-knife, a dime, two nails and a dun for house rent, she went back to bed and imprinted a kiss on his calmly sleeping forehead.

A wag who is often merry over his personal plainness tells this story of himself: "I went to a chemist the other day for a dose of morphine for sick friend. The assistant objected to give it to me without a prescription, evidently fearing that I intended to commit suicide. "Pshaw!" said I "do I look like a man who would kill himself?' Gazing steadily at me for a moment he replied: "I don't know. It seems to me if I looked like you I should be greatly tempted to kill myself."

Making a Man of Him.

George Augustus Sala says: I had a schoolmaster who was a clever and excellent man, but a little mad, and who had a craze about making boys "hardy." He was pleased to fix upon me as a "chilly mortal," and expressed a determination to "make a man of me." The process of manufacture demanded that when I was snuggling over the fire and a book in playtime, I should be driven forth into the bleak and bitter open "to play." Now I never could play. At this date, when I am grizzling, I scarcely know a cricket bat from a stump, or a prisoner's base from a rounder. I never could throw a ball or catch one properly; and in childhood I was utterly unable even to "tuck in my two-penny" at leap-frog or to drive a heop. So, while a hundred merry lads around me raced and gambolled, a used to lurk in the corner of the playground and shiver. We had a large bathroom and (always with the benevolent idea of "making a man of me") I was put through a bastard course of hydropathy. I declare that in the midst of the most biting Winter weather I have undergone the cold douche, the cold shower-bath, and the cold sitz; that I have been packed in wet sheets; that I have been made to put a dry pair of socks over a wet pair, and thus accoutred have been ordered to walk from Hammersmith to Key Bridge, before breakfast, in the dark, to make me "hardy." Unless another boy of the same "hardy" breed was sent with me to see that I went through my training properly, I used to perform the journey from Hammersmith to Key Bridge by sneaking to the widow Crump's shop at Turnham Green—she sold fruit, toys, periodicals and sweetstuff—and sitting by the fire in her little parlor, drinking warm ginger beer and reading the lives of the pirates and highwaymen.

As it chanced, my good crazy master did not make a man of me. I grew up to be only a sickly, long-legged, weak-kneed youth, with premature pains in the bones, which developed in later years into chronic rheumatism and intermittent neuralgia.

It can not be too deeply impressed upon the mind that application is the price to be paid for mental acquisitions, and that it is as absurd to expect it without it as it is to look for a harvest without seeds.

FOREIGN ECHOES.

Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt has been blackballed by the Paris Jockey club.

Spain will try to sell $60,000,000 worth of forests, and build a navy with the money.

A copy of "the Whig Bible," which was printed in Geneva in 1562, is announced as for sale in England. The phrase which gives the book its appellation occurs in Matthew v., 9. It reads: "Blessed are the peacemakers." The edition is a rare one; it is not often found in a perfect state.

The late King of Bavaria's favorite beverage was a mixture of white wine and champagne, prepared in a bowl with a thick layer of fresh, strong-scented violets floating on the top. The violets gave a delicious perfumed flavour to the mixture, much to the King's taste, as Ludwig was so fond of scents that the air around him was generally redolent of perfume. This fancy cost him quite £10 daily.

Recent arrivals from Egypt, "weary, and worn, and sad," have terrible tales to tell. Active employment for Europeans, with the thermometer 120 degrees in the shade, seems almost out of the question. Yet the troops are described as "rotting for want of work" at the stations up the Nile, in a country where no kilns are required by the members of the ancient brick-making craft. The sun is there so scorching in its power, that in twenty-four hours the bricks are baked as hard as our best "home-made." At one station on the Nile, where there is barely sufficient work for half a dozen men, upwards of fifty specially trained soldiers are maintained in idleness, to sicken and die. Those who have just returned from this valley of the shadow of death state that at Wady Halfa there were forty-two funerals in fourteen days, and in descending the Nile they passed a station where 710 invalids were awaiting transport to convey them to Cairo.

In Berlin, says the Pall Mall Gazette, there is an association of theological students bearing the name "Wingolfites" which has for years observed on the Wednesday before Ascension Day the curious custom of divining for the Emperor's destiny. The way of doing this is unique. The members of the association proceed from Berlin to the village of Pichelswerder on the Haval and here they celebrate the anniversary of the guild at the Wilhelmfhohe Restaurant. They immediately climb up an oak tree in the centre of the garden and seat themselves on the branches. Beer is handed up from the ground and after the third glass has been drained the president delivers the anniversary speech, after which a cheer is given for the Emperor. Then at the word of command all glasses are hurled to the ground and the notion is that the Emperor will live as many years as there are broken glasses. This year twelve glasses were broken, so that the Emperor should yet be a centenarian.

The First Seen in Those Waters.

The fishermen of Gabarus, N. S., have been excited over the appearance of a mermaid seen in the waters by some fishermen a few days ago. While Mr. Bagnell, accompanied by several fishermen, was out in a boat, they observed floating on the surface of the water a few yards from the boat what they supposed to be a corpse. Approaching it for the purpose of taking it ashore for burial, they observed it to move, when, to their great surprise, it turned around in a sitting position and looked at them and disappeared. A few moments after it appeared to the surface and again looked toward them, after which it disappeared altogether. The face, head, shoulders, and arms resembled those of a human being, but the lower extremities had the appearance of a fish. The back of its head was covered with long dark hair resembling a horse's mane. The arms were shaped exactly like a human being's, except that the fingers on the hands were very long. The color of the skin was not unlike that of a human being. There is no doubt that the mysterious stranger is what is known as a mermaid and the first seen in Cape Breton waters.

A South African Adventure.

The barking of the jackals and hyenas woke me twe or three times; but, with that exception, I never slept more soundly than I did that night in the bush. At dawn I woke and was rubbing the sand out of my eyes, not feeling quite sure where I was, when my eyes lighted on a human face, only a few yards off, its gaze steadily fixed on mine. I seized my gun, but the being, whoever it was, did not flinch, and I thought I must be mistaken, and rubbed my eyes harder, but the only effect was to drive the sand more firmly in than ever. There, straight in front of me, was a human being—a bushman by his color—staring and grinning at me, all but his head and shoulders concealed behind a bush, or beneath a slight covering of sand. I approached and called out, but the being answered not or moved. It would never speak again. It was the dead body of some poor bushman who had perished miserably while out hunting, for at his side lay a gun and on the bush was hung a bunch of ostrich feathers, somewhat weatherworn, but still worth, £20 The desert winds had performed the last offices of burial, covering his body with a pall of sand leaving only his head exposed. Not an animal had molested this grave, a sure sign that the man had died of thirst; at least so the natives held, asserting that nothing will touch the body of such a man.

George A. Forschler's Death Said to be Due to an Evil Influence.

A white man named George A. Forschler, 24 years of age, died the other afternoon at his residence in the old French section of New Orleans, from the effects, as his friends believe, of a voodoo charm. The symptoms which the young man exhibited were like paralysis. He could not move his limbs and complained of a terrible noise in his head resembling that made by a steam car. His legs and body were very much swollen. The belief in the power of the voodoo fetisch to work good or evil to human beings at the will of the magician or medicine man, who controls the mysterious secrets, is not confined to the colored people. Many whites have implicit faith in these conjurations, and hold them in dread.

It is said that a mysterious drug was administered to him, and that a fetisch or charm has been buried somewhere on the premises to destroy his senses by some occult power. His father said that his son, some three months ago, was taken sick. He called a colored doctor—Dr. Solemon—who said that his son had been given something to hurt him. On St. John's Day the young man was sent for by Dr. Solemon to come to the lake, and told that he would there be bathed.

St. John's Day, the 24th of June, is a time peculiarly sacred to the voodoo mysteries, and at that time the negroes are accustomed to gather on the shores of Lake Pontchartrain, where secret, and mysterious rites are said to be performed. Dr. Solemon did not show up at the lake on the appointed day, although the sick man was duly carried there, and the patient's friends then lost confidence in the sable physician. A medical man who could combat the powers of voodoo magic was necessary, and the family next called in Dr. Glapion, another colored practitioner, who declared that the patient had been made a victim of the accursed powers of the voodoos. The father of the victim said:

"On the 25th of June, in the evening, I requested Mr. Glapion to see if there was anything like a voodoo fetisch buried on the premises. Mr. Glapion examined the premises, and found that there was something buried under the house, and that it was necessary to cut the flooring to get at the buried fetisch. This was done by one of my employees, and after half an hour's work Mr. Glapion caused the charm to show itself, and took it out. It consisted of a package showing red silk cord, wrapped around gold leaf, stuck full of large steel needles in all kinds of positions, the whole enveloping a bottle. Mr. Glapion took hold of the package and unwrapped it. The silk cord was of unusual length, fully sixty feet. The gold leaf was folded square in four folds, and the needles rudely represented the shape of a star. The bottle was uncorked by Mr. Glapion, who found it to contain a mixture of vinegar and gunpowder, with other substances whose nature was not ascertained."

The same evening the fetisch was thrown into the river. After this the patient appeared to improve, and his appetite, which had disappeared, returned. But Glapion was unable to overcome the evil spells, as the patient took another bad turn and died.

Glapion is of medium height, spare, nervous, and sinewy. His almost jet-black skin is lustrous and of a peculiar color. He wears a thin moustache, pointed at each end, and affects a nice way of talking the French language, which he speaks rather fluently. His eyes are large, prominent, and restless.

Ebony can be imitated on wood by first painting with a 1 per cent. solution of sulphate of copper. When perfectly dry the wood is painted over with a liquid consisting of equal weights of aniline, hydro chloride and spirits of wine. The blue vitrol acts on the aniline and forms nigrosin, a black which can not be affected by acids or alkalies. A lustre can be added by coating with simple copal varnish.

THE FARM.

Horticulture for the Young.

A few years ago as I was driving down the street I noticed a little ragged girl alone, as she stopped on the walk to look through the enclosure of a beautiful residence with its spacious lawns and beds, and I thanked my Heavenly Father that while that little waif could not enjoy the inside grandeur of the palatial mansion, He had ordained that the [illegible] beauty must needs have his free share of sunshine, so that the poor as well as the rich might enjoy it.

Young persons may learn much of horticulture in their earlier years before they have shown any special fitness or bias for any profession, and their acquirements in the cultivation of plants will render them all the better prepared physically and mentally for other spheres of usefulness. It is true that one may learn quickly how to perform an operation in horticulture after a while it is almost impossible for one to ever become proficient, and yet its many departments afford opportunity for various capacities.

I once employed a young man for the summer, who I think was inclined to be lazy and industrious as well as anxious to learn, and yet he never betrayed any special fitness for the various manipulations of business until along in September, when at once he exhibited an interest in horticulture, which could only be measured by the ten or ten pounds or good ripe Concords per day in the week as long as they lasted.

I think it is well for a boy or a girl to have a little patch of ground, and with the understanding that it shall be [illegible] let them grow what they choose and sell the proceeds to be used for a good purpose. This helps them to think and plan for themselves. When children are too young to work let them help arrange the flower beds, make bouquets, and they will love them all the more.

It is well to learn them to observe the processes of development and compare the different forms and colors.

In my boyhood days I showed a lady teacher of a country school a little [illegible] and she at once exclaimed, "What a beauty! Where did you get it? It's a perfect gem, I never saw anything like it. What is it?" It was a buckwheat blossom and she had seen acres of it.

The young as well as older persons are prompted very much by the anticipated reward of their labors, and if successful are stimulated to further efforts.

A father I once knew told his 12-year old son that if he would plant and raise for an acre of corn he might have the use of team, tools, land, seed and the proceeds. That boy faithfully performed his part of the contract and now is the owner and chief manager of extensive nurseries in Western New York.

Some years ago a wild boy in Michigan who had been furnished with too much supply of pocket money, wanted his father to buy him a new buggy. His father replied, "If you want a buggy, take the [illegible] team and put in a piece of wheat, and I will you one."

The wide-awake boy went at it, worked forty acres, harvested 1,000 bushels, sold for a good price, bought a buggy, put the rest of the money in a bank, and from that time began to work for a home of his own and to-day he is the proprietor of a good farm, and a useful Christian man.

It is a mistake to think that "any thing is good enough for a boy because he will do much any way."

If anything will make a boy sick of clerkship it is an old-fashioned [illegible] of a scythe.

If anything will make a boy hate farming it is dragging in a hot day with a slow team and a crotch drag.

A feeling of proprietorship is worth something to anyone, old or young.

If "Mary has a little lamb," and likes it, let it be Mary's sheep.

It don't sound just right to say "bub's steers have grown to be father's oxen." I am confident that whatever would do for the young, future will [illegible] and love of home, must begin with good examples, purity of thought and speech, industrious habits and strict integrity of character.

To Prevent Lamp Accidents.

Both in constructing a lamp and in the care of it, the following rules are worth knowing, for choosing, in the first place, and for keeping it in good order:

1. That portion of the wick which [illegible] the oil reservoir should be enclosed in a tube of thin sheet metal, open at the bottom, and in a cylinder of fine white gauze, such as is used in miner's safety lamps (twenty meshes to one inch).

2 The oil reservoir should be of [illegible] rather than of china or glass.

3. The oil reservoir should have no [illegible] ing place nor opening other than the [illegible] ling into which the upper part of the [illegible] is screwed.

4. Every lamp should have a proper extinguishing apparatus.

5 Every lamp should have a broad heavy base.

6 Wicks should be soft and not [illegible] plaited.

7. Wicks should be dipped in vinegar and dried at the fire before being put [illegible]

8. Wicks should be only just long enough to reach the bottom of the oil reservoir.

9. Wicks should be so wide that they quite fill the wick-holder without being squeezed into it. Wicks should be [illegible] ed with oil before being lit. The wick should be quite filled with oil every time before using the lamp.

10. The lamp should be kept thoroughly clean, all oil should be carefully wiped off and all charred wick and dirt removed with a twisted lamp-lighter or other piece of paper before lighting.

11. When the lamp is lit the wick should be first turned down and then slowly [illegible]

12. Lamps which have no [illegible] apparatus should be put out as follows. The wick should be turned down until there is only a small flickering flame, and then a puff of breath should then be [illegible] the top of the chimney, but not [illegible]

YOUNG FOLKS.

The Bee Republic.

Did you ever spend a day at a bee-hive? I once knew an apiary which I visited not long since discovered Italian, Syrian and Holy Land bees living in harmeny with each other. Canadian brothers and sisters. The Italians are a docile race, but not as busy as the Holy Land bees, though the latter have a bad name for docility, being easily excited. The Syrians wear Burnside whiskers. Between their sides. They are indefatigable workers.

A bee-hive is a small two-story house. The lower floor is the brood chambers, and the bees fill first with stores for the hive. It is also the royal residence of the queen. The upper story is for the surplus honey, and the bees fill this for the time. Honey is the nectar of the flowers. The bees do not make it. They simply gather and place it in the store-house.

The bee-hive is a republic in one sense, but a constitutional monarchy like Britain. Although there is an imperial personage to whom great respect is shewn, she does not appear to possess much governing power, and resigns the throne as soon as maternity cease. Uncovering a hive I found the bees at their labor. The whole comb of cells was covered with the workers. One would stop at a cell a moment and then go along, then another would work a little or two, and all seemed rather desultory of regular werk; but still there was a regular plan of labor and a direction. Sentinels are constantly on duty at the door, but no particular bee appears to have been assigned the task. The honey-gatherers or comb-builders seem to change constantly with the honey-gatherers and the nursing bees that guard the cells where the young ones are hatching. The queen alone appears to have a regular task. She moves about the comb depositing eggs in the cells. She thus places about two or three thousand eggs a day. A colony of bees in good ferm is composed of about thirty thousand bees, and their average being only from forty to sixty days there must be a constant addition to keep up the population. A queen reigns from two to three years. The eggs seem all alike and are made to produce workers, or drones, or queens, as the colony nominates. The workers are imperfect females, the drones are the males, while the queens are perfected females and each has a cell of her own. When a queen is wanted the workers select a cell on both sides of it, and build a balloon-shaped cell about an inch long. This is carefully guarded and the grub is fed the richest food, usually the juice of flowers mixed with honey and pollen. Some of the cells are used as magazines in which to store the queen's food. The grub of the young queen is called royal jelly. The queen cells are never disturbed by the old queen during the swarming season, that is, during the time when the bees have concluded that the swarm is getting too large, and it is time to divide the family. When a new queen is about to be born, the old queen generally organizes a new colony, the accounts having been sent out by her to find a good location, she departs with her followers and guides to the new country. In their high councils of beedom, if it is concluded that the colony can again be divided, the first new queen takes off another colony. If not then her first act is to sting the cells of the other queens and put them to death. If two queens are hatched at the same time a ring is formed and they fight to the death of one of them and the other queen. The marriage ceremony of a new queen is performed in mid-air, and after the wedding the drone husband goes off and dies, and the queen lives a happy widow the rest of her life.

The new queen is full of business. She sees everything in perfect order about the hive. She will not keep the drones over winter, but commands the workers to carry them out to die. The young bees that are found imperfect are immediately dragged out and put to death. If a foreign substance is too bulky to be removed it is immediately cemented over.

Frequently a scout comes around the cells from a neighboring hive. He endeavors to discover the strength of the colony. Seeking his chance he will pass the sentinels undiscovered, and when he comes again he will have an army at his back. The resistance is made at the sentry gates, and very often fierce battles occur, many of the fighters being killed and injured. If the attacking party wins the battle the conquering colony helps to carry its own honey home with the victors. They believe that to the victors belong the spoils.

One of the most important facts about the bee is that it cannot sting but once, and is soon after.

Religious Intolerance in Russia.

The deplorable intolerance in religious matters which distinguishes Russian rule has just obtained fresh victims—one named Tikhanoff, an inferior functionary of the telegraphs; the other, Vekadine, a country-gentleman. These were a few days ago summoned before the court of Novgorod for an offence against orthodexy, an offence detailed in the 190th paragraph of the Penal law.

The two men charged with the offence were sentenced to hard labor. A great crowd attended the trial, consisting for the most part of sympathizers with the defendants. Only one of all the Russian papers and reviews has had the courage to make any remarks about this sentence. That exception, a review, called the Vestnik Tevropt (The European Messenger), asks what the accusants of Tikhanoff and Vekadine, who attended the trial, can think of the case? Can scarcely be supposed, the writer says, that this sentence will, in their eyes, be found a sufficient proof that Tikhanoff and Vekadine are wrong and the Orthodex Church right. It is much more probable that the condemned men will be considered martyrs to truth, and that the number of their secret adherents will increase. All that the Orthodex Church can gain by its cruelty is to increase the number of religious hypocrites.

A late invention is a match which may be struck over and over again. This will fill an long felt void. If there is one match that has been struck, lying in a box with 10,000 good ones, a man is always sure to get that identical second-hand match when he has occasion to light the gas at midnight.

Legendary Weapons.

Curious and interesting particulars of the actual construction of legendary weapons are found in some of the Vedas and the commentaries on the ancient writings. The bows varied in length from the length of a man's arm to 4 cubits or 6 feet, of which the latter dimension was considered the best. They were made of metal, horn, or wood; but the best bows were constructed from the bamboo cut at the end of Autumn. The arrows also varied in length from 3 feet to 5 or 6. They were tipped with steel points variously shaped, needle or lance pointed, semicircular, dentiform, double-edged or jagged like a saw, and these forms of points are to day to be found on the arrows of many of the aboriginal tribes of India. The shafts were greased or anointed to facilitate their flight; but they never appear to have been poisoned. Some were altogether made of iron, and it is perhaps these to which Curtain's alludes when he says that some of the Indian archers shot with arrows which were too heavy to be very manageable. One characteristic of the archery of the ancient Hindus seems to have been peculiar to them alone, which consisted in shooting a number of arrows at once, from four to nine at a time. The swords were, as in later days, of various shapes and sizes, and many localities were credited with producing the best blades. Those of Bengal and Behar were praised as tough and capable of taking a fine edge. The sword considered in the Veda of the best size must have been a two-handed weapon, as it was 50 fingers long, with a hilt guarded by an iron netting, probably resembling the modern pata, or the long kanda of the Rajput. There does not appear to have been any special distribution of weapons to combatants of different ranks, though bows and arrows, maces, javelins, swords, and shields seem to have been the principal arms of the chiefs, who went to battle mounted on chariots, while their followers carried in addition spears and axes of various forms, and other missiles of different kinds.

Killing His Brother.

In the Wilson case, Montrose, Col., the defence put their client on the stand. He told his story in a plain, straightforward way, without emotion, giving a minute description of how the tragedy occurred. He said:

"Prentiss was my brother. When in a passion he was a maniac. On Sunday he struck me in the face, nearly breaking my nose. Toward evening he ordered me to get supper. I told him I did not feel well, and asked him to get it. I then went in and laid down on the bed. Soon after Prentiss entered with a lighted candle in one hand and a butcher knife in the other. He asked me if I intended to tell the people what he said about his being a highwayman, and striking at me with the knife. I jumped and grasped a hammer and hit him over the head, striking him again as he fell on to the bed. Then I grasped the Winchester and fired without aim.

"Then all was quiet, and I realized that I had killed my brother. I saw his pocket-book half out of his breeches pocket, and I took it. It contained $142. I walked the trail back and forth all night, not knowing what to do. I did not want our mother to know of it, and, to hide the act from all, I dragged the body to the well and buried it. I had been in Paradox nine months, but owing to Prentiss's wish I did not associate with any one; in fact, I hardly knew anybody there.

"On Tuesday morning I went to Mr. Galloway's, intending to tell him all about it, but he was not there, and I returned to the cabin, took the horses which father had bought for us and started to leave the country. I drank liquor in Montrose to drown my grief."

Lock-Jaw Cured.

That form of lock-jaw which is produced by a wound is known to physicians as traumatic tetanus. A New York paper recently reported a case of this disease which had been treated by Dr. Robert Tayler. The patient recovered, and according to the reporter, the Doctor declares that it is "the only case of cure of traumatic tetanus in the history of the world."

Is not this statement erroneous? In the London Lancet of June 12, 1886, Mr. William Thomas Jackman of the Royal College of Surgeons describes a case of traumatic tetanus which came under his care in the March previous. The patient was a lad fifteen years old, whose fingers had been crushed by cogged wheels, and the lock-jaw was complete. Chloral hydrate was administered in twenty-grain doses every three hours for ten days. The results were not satisfactory, and Mr. Jackman determined to try the new hypnotic drug urethan. The chloral was discontinued during the night, and four grains of urethan were given him every two hours from 6 o'clock in the evening to 6 in the morning. "The first night of this trial showed a marked decrease in the severity of the symptoms, and the patient made gradual and uninterrupted progress until April 20, when his recovery was established."

In the case treated by Dr. Tayler, morphine appears to have been the only drug employed. Any physician who is fortunate enough to treat this disease successfully is entitled to credit and congratulation, but the Bronxville case does not seem the only one which has resulted in recovery.

SHORT SUMMER SERMONS.

BY BROTHER GARDNER.

When I h'ar an indiwidual ris up an' declar' disgust wid de world I set him down as a passon who has contributed his 'ar share to'rds bringin' de world to its present condishun.

Dar' am sartin people who war' bo'n into dis life fur no partickler reason. Dey am as outer place as a blind hoss befo' a lookin'-glass. Dey haven't de smartness to steal ner de spoerit to work. Dey am too cowardly to suicide, an' not brave 'nuff to face de problems of life. Dey am mean 'nuff to covet, but not reckless 'nuff to steal. Dey begin on Sunday mawnin' to predict short crops, an' wind up Saturday night by a prophecy of airthquakes or cholera. On de front desk of dairy stan' should be nailed a sign readin': "It am better to pass on to de next corner an' take de small-pox instead."

I sit down wid my pipe of an evenin' an' boil sartin matters down an' frow away de skimmins. I'se bin gainin' two or three pounds of flesh a y'ar fur de las' ten y'ars. What rich man has done better? I'se got a tight roof ober head an' a good cellar below. Jay Gould's roof may be higher an' his cellar bigger, but why should I envy him when I have room 'nuff?

On my table am ce'n beef, 'taters, cabbage, bread, an' edder fings which please my taste, satisfy my hunger an' put fat on my ribs. Does any millionaire do mo' dan eat to please himself?

De panes in my windows am small but clear. I kin look out to de east, no'th, south or west. De Vanderbilts can't do any better. Deir glass may be larger an' cost mo' money, but it dean' keep out any mo' weather.

I'se got a bit of a garden in which I'se growin' 'taters, lettuce, onions, beets an' de like. De Queen of England kin have a bigger garden, but her wegetables must grow in de same way, an' would taste no better.

I'se got plenty of fuel fur cold weather, an' fly screens to keep out de dust an' flies in summer. De king's palace am warmed by de same coal an' his screens made fram de same wire. I want neither his heat nor his 'skeesters.

I'se got good health an' a perty fa'r job. Dar am plenty of millionaires who haven't got no health 'tall, and whose werry am mo' tiresome dan my labor.

I'se got a lot all paid fur in de graveyard. Some men may have two, but I doan' envy 'em. By an' by me'n de old woman will be laid away up dar. By an' by de rich man an' his wife will also be laid away. Dey may have a monument towerin' above our tombstuns, but dey'll sleep no sweeter nor awaken any sooner. Dair coffins may be richer, but de same airth will bring all to decay.

De great trouble wid alverage humanity, as I see it, am de fack dat people grasp fur too much. What was riches to de las' ginerashun am jist nuff to make dis one discontented. What was comfort den am poverty now. De wages of our granfathers would hardly buy ap'ens fur de wives of workin' men to-day. We am full of froth an' show. Hypocricy an' deceit am part of our stock in trade. Envy an' jealousy am driven' out charity an' contentment. Fifty y'ars hense, if dey should dig down to my coffin an' find dat I had turned ober, de papers needn't make any sensashun. It am quite sartin, onless a great change takes place, dat de nex. generashun will make us ole dead folks tired.

A Radical Change

The best eradicator of foul humors of the Blood is Burdock Bloon Bitters. A few bottles produce a radical change for the better in health and beauty. It removes the blood taint of Scrofula that terrible disease so common in this country.

Speedy Trip.—Mr. W. J. Ford returned last Friday from Winnipeg, Brandon and Wolseley, having made the round trip, twenty six hundred miles, in eleven days, and did his business. Mr. Ford speaks very highly of the comfort and goahead facilities of the C. P. R., having had only four minutes delay on his whole trip, trains being sharp on time throughout accept that trifling delay. We expect to give a short account of his trip next week.

He Acts Wisely

"I am so weak I can hardly move, all run down with a Chronic Summer Complaint," said one gentleman to another on our street the other day. Now, take my advice," replied his friend, "go to your Druggist and get a bottle of Dr. Flower's Extract of Wild Strawberry. I have never known it to fail in curing any Summer Complaint.

Picnic.—The English Church Sunday School annual picnic was held last Thursday afternoon in Mr. S. Coleman's bush, and was well attended, a large number being present from Berkeley and surrounding country. Kind invitations were extended a number of the young people of other denominations, most of whom were there to join in and partake of the pleasures that were offered. The usual games on such occasions were entered into with a zest by both young and old; in fact a very pleasant time was spent by all. The "spread" was bountiful and seldom equalled in taste and quality. The ice-cream and lemonade was cooling and refreshing. About 8:30 the picnicers dispersed for their homes, well pleased with their afternoon's enjoyment.

"Reader," in informing you of the wonderful remedy for Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Consumption, and all affections of the throat and lungs, we feel that we are doing you a great kindness, as if you have any of the above complaints, if you will only try it we will guarantee satisfaction in every case or money refunded. Ask for McGregor' Lung Compound. Price 50c. and $1.00 per bottle at R. L. Stephen's, Drug Store, Markdale. 3

The agitation for a change of name has been revived in Orangeville. The Advertiser alleges that "the name Orangeville has been so associated with dynamitism, incendiarism, and scoundrelism, that our inhabitants can not go abroad and make known their residence without being assailed with reproach and treated as a tarred stick," and that, "the name, 'Orange' savouring of sectionalism, 'ville,' of insignificance, and other matters connected with the early history of our town' has long made its name odious to the residents." The name most in favour with the advocates of change is Dufferin, but many of the old settlers prefer the familiar cognomen, and others cannot see that Dufferin would have any special terrors for dynamiters and incendiaries which Orangeville may not possess. It will be remembered that some years ago the old settlers defeated an application to the Legislature for a change of name, and at least some of them do not seem reconciled to the proposed reform.

The latest remedy for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, etc., is McGregor's Lung Compound. There is no remedy in existence containing any one of the active ingredients composing McGregor's Lung Compound, so do not say you have taken everything until you have tried this for your cold or cough, and your opinion will be the same as all who have used it, viz., that it is the best. Church Re-Opening.

The Methodist church at Inistioge has been undergoing extensive improvements, and has been very much beautified and sclidified in the changes made. The building has been raised higher, and placed upon a substantial stone foundation, with brick veneering, rearrangement of seats, choir station, painting, upholstering, &c., by the ladies, all of which lends grace and strength to the structure. On Sunday, July 25th, the Rev. G. H. Cornish, Superintendent of the Markdale District, preached morning and evening to large and delighted congregations. The sermons were beautiful expositions of the Word of God; and were not only listened to with rapt attention, but were doubly welcome by reason of the Heavenly grace with which they were infused. In the afternoon service, the Rev. W. Ayers, of Flesherton, preached an excellent sermon to a very large congregation. Mr. Ayers' discourse upon the reign and triumph of the Messiah's kingdom, the earnest spirit with which it was given; and the glowing language employed, all tended to heighten the intensity of the occasion.

On Monday, July 26th, a sumptuous tea-meeting was held. A most bountiful repast was provided by the ladies of Inistioge, at which a goodly assembly sat down and did ample justice to the same. Notwithstanding some down-pouring of rain, a very large number were present from Markdale, Flesherton, Dundalk, Riverview and vicinity.

About 8 o'clock, Rev. Dr. Strongman, Pastor, called the meeting to order, and Dr. Christoe, of Flesherton, was called to the chair, which he filled throughout with his accustomed urbanity and good cheer. The following gentlemen addressed the friends present: Messrs. W. A. Brown, Markdale, and M. Richardson, Flesherton; Revs. Dr. Strongman, J. W. Mahood, Pastors; Rev. Mr. Wright, and Rev. A. Murphy, Church of England clergymen, of Honeywood and Dundalk; Rev. J. Ross, B. A., Presbyterian, of Dundalk; Rev. W. Ayers, of Flesherton. It was the opinion of all that better speeches were never heard upon a similar occasion; and the whole proceedings were marked with the most delightful Christian spirit and fraternity. The Dundalk choir, both on the Sabbath, and at the tea-meeting, won golden opinions and profound thanks for their efficient and excellent services. Proceeds—Collections and tea-meeting, $80; former and present subscriptions, $150. Whole cost, about $375. Not the least among the names of those who have hastened this work is Bro. W. Hames, who has spent a good portion of his time in furthering this object.—Cor.

An Invisible Foe

The poisonous germs of disease are lurking in the air we breath and in the water we drink. The system should be kept carefully purified and all the organs toned to proper action. This can best be done by the regulating, purifying and tonic powers of Burdock Blood Bitters.

What Grew from a Negro's Foot.

It was rather an amusing incident that first brought to the attention of a truck farmer, of Charleston, S. C. the importance of firming the soil. It seems that a gentleman of color having the constitutional weakness for chickens pecular to some of his race got into a hen.roost and helped himself bounitfully. In evading the high-road, he struck a bee-line through a new sown turnip field, where he left tracks that led to his detection. But these tracks did more. They showed to Squire Buncome whose chickens had suffered, that wherever the foot of the lored citizen had fallen, there he had a "stand" of turnips, and nowhere els (for they had been loosely sowed and the weather was dry). The lesson was heeded and has been worth tens of thousands of dollars to the farmers of south Carolina, who, it seems, were never before sufficiently alive to the importance of firming the soil until the unfortunate negro showed them the way.—Peter Henderson in Americvne Agriculturist for August.

CONSUMPTION CURED.

An old physician, retired from practice, having had placed in his hands by an East India missionary the formula of a simple vegetable remedy for the speedy and permanent cure of Consumption, Bronchitis, Catarrh, Asthma and all throat and Lung Afflictions, also a positive and radical cure for nervous Debility and all Nervous Complaints, after having tested its wonderful curative powers in thousands of cases, has felt it his duty to make it known to his suffering fellows. Actuated by this motive and a desire to relieve human suffering, I will send free of charge to all who desire it, this recipe, in German, French or English, with full directions for preparing and using. A Strange Story, Indeed.

Cincinnati, O., July 24.—A strange story comes from Bradford Junction concerning a farmer there. Simon Wilcox was formerly an enthusiastic church member, but on Tuesday when he surveyed the ruin of his crops wrought by a hailstorm he began to curse God for allowing such destructitr, and vented a tirade of horrid blasphemy. In the midst of his cursing he was suddenly stricken with paralysis and could not leave the spot. There his neighbors found him, and their story is that they could not realease him-that he was surrounded by a circle of intense heat, and that they tried to push him outside of it with a pole he to pole burned off and, that it was not until towards evening that the mysterious heat d isappeared and he fell down unconscious and was picked up a raving maniac.

Saving Dry Earth.

The cheapest disinfectants is dry earth and a supply shonld be secured during a dry time. Dry earth does not mean dry sand, but a good, strong loam. No matter how dry the surface of the soil may appear to be, it never becomes perfectly dry, as more or less moisture will come up from below by capillary attraction. To completely dry the earth, a drying platform of old boards should be constructed, upon which the surface soil may be thrown being cut off from all moisture from below, a few hours exposure to the sun will dry it completely. It should then be run through a sieve or riddle to remove stones and thrash, then the fine earth placed in barrels or boxes, and stroed under cover. The use of a road-scraper to draw the earth upon the platform will greatly diminish the labor. Lay in an abundance, for use in earth closets, privy vaults, hen-houses, or wherever an unpleasant odor is to be stopped.—Americae Agriculturist for August.

HEALTH.

Enlarged Hearts.

Why does the heart sometimes become enlarged?

For the same reason that the muscles of the blacksmith's arm become enlarged—unwonted work, that increases the blood supply and the power to assimilate nourishment In one case of the disease, an enlarged heart weighed nearly three pounds, and in another over four pounds—the common weight being rather less than three-quarters of a pound.

What is the cause of the heart's undue action?

Some obstacle to the circulation, which compels the heart to work harder to propel the blood A small increase in the force of each heart-beat involves immense additional work.

What are the causes of the obstruction?

The following are the most common:

(1) Disease may have narrowed some one or more of the heart-valves, so that the the heart has to force the blood through a smaller opening—in extreme cases not larger than the diameter of a quill.

(2) A valve may have become so affected that it leaks, and the contraction forces the blood backwards as well as forwards, the backward flow thus distending the rear cavity, which is meanwhile filling from the valve in the other end. The latter cavity must do extra work to propel the superfluous blood.

(3) A certain condition of the lungs, or of the arteries leading to them, may constitute the obstruction.

(4) Obstructions may be due to tumors, or to aneurisms, pressing against a large artery.

(5) The obstruction may be due to roughening of the internal surfaces of the arteries—a condition not uncommon in old age.

(6) Bright's disease is apt to be followed by cardiac enlargement. How it comes about is not certainly known.

(7) Such enlargement may be due to over-physical exertion. All long-continued muscular strain results in it, as in case of soldiers from long-forced marches. Boating and some other prize contests are a frequent source of enlargement.

Enlargement of the heart is not in itself an immediate evil. It is that by which nature overcomes a serious obstacle. But the enlargement tends to go on increasing until it results in a dilation and thinning, at some weak point, of the walls of the heart, in which case some slight extra exertion or excitement may cause a fatal rupture.

Treatment of the Opium Habit.

In the course of a very long practice I have treated many cases of the opium habit according to different plans, but unsuccessfully at first by limiting the treatment to too short a time, not appreciating the fact that chronic remedies to cure them. Finally, a case fell into my hands which I was compelled to treat through a long course on account of the lady's physical condition, she being worn out by the long continued use of the drug, and unable to withstand any sensible revulsion. The habit had been indulged in for eighteen years, and the amount of morphine taken in twenty four hours when the treatment began was a drachm a week, or eight grains a day. The following is the plan by which she was cured in four months, and a number of patients afterwards by the same:

Taking the whole amount of morphine she had used in the last seven days, I dissolved it in a three-ounce vial containing twenty-one teaspoonfuls of water (making three doses a day for seven days,) adding five drops of tr. nux vomica, and one-fourth grain of quinine to each teaspoonful, and enough spirits of lavender to color the solution. The maximum quantity of morphine was employed for the first seven days to establish the patient's confidence that the process of treatment was not adverse to her craving. Then, for twenty weeks, I went on lessening the amount of morphine every seven days by one-twentieth, and at the same time increasing the tincture by one drop, and the quinine a one-fourth grain at each change, until the morphine was left entirely out. In the meantime, however, I ceased to augment the quinine after the ninth week, but added ten drops of elixir of vitriol to each dose taken afterwards. The diminution of morphine was so minute and gradual, and the taste being the same, the patient was unable to detect any change whatever during the four months' treatment. For a week or two after the morphine had been left out I continued the same solution, which was clamored for whenever I proposed to dispense with its use; and when I became satisfied that the habit was then all in the mind, I announced that she had not taken a particle of morphine for two weeks. She was dazed, covering her face with her hands and remained silent for some time. She wanted no more morphine; her health had become very much improved, and her gratitude seemed unbounded. Any physician may succeed by this plan, I think, if he will prevent the patient resorting to stimulants; at least I have never failed when stimulants are strictly avoided.

Equal to the Occasion.

"Who is that horrible whiskey bloat?" asked a female of an acquaintance, while they stood viewing the guests at a fashionable reception. "Which one?" "That one with the red moustache and awful nose, don't you see?" "He is my husband." "Oh," laughed the lady, "I see you are not sensitive," although she saw vengeance in the eyes of the insulted lady. "Several nights ago a friend of mine made a similar remark about my husband, and I became very angry. I declared it would anger any woman, but my friend said that you, having the best husband in the world, would not care, and I wagered a pair of gloves that you would, but you see I have lost. I hear that your husband is spoken of as an available candidate for the City Council. How clever he must be!"

THE STOVE-PIPE HAT.

Points From a Discussion in a Leading Scotch Paper.

During the past few weeks the columns of the leading paper in Glasgow have been opened to correspondents who desired to present arguments for and against the wearing of the tall silk hat To judge from the number of letters that have been published on the subject, one would suppose that hundreds of people had devoted the best part of their lives considering the merits of the proper covering of the heads of men, and that nearly all of them had come to the conclusion, after diligent study, observation and reflection, that the tall silk hat possessed advantages over every form of headgear that had been worn in ancient or modern times.

A commercial traveller states that when he first took to the road he wore a suit of light tweed cloth and a soft slouch hat. These, he thought, would be very comfortable, well suited for travelling, and sufficiently dressy for a person engaged in his occupation. His trip was not successful, though he abstained from all the vice common to "drummers" and attended strictly to business. The few bills of goods he sold were to small dealers of somewhat doubtful commercial standing. He was so discouraged by his failure to secure trade that he was thinking of giving up the business when an English commercial traveller suggested to him that his dress was not in his favor. He recommended him to discard his tweed sack and low slouch hat, and to wear in their place a black frock-coat and shiny stove pipe, and to try "his luck again." He followed the advice, and succeeded far beyond his first anticipations. He was welcomed at places where he was not received before, and generally made large sales.

THE VALUE OF GOOD CLOTHES.

This statement is followed by one from a prosperous city merchant. He writes that he entered the house of which he is now the manager and senior partner as an office boy. He at once resolved "to work himself up to the highest round," if that could be accomplished by study, care, industry, and the exercise of all the ability he possessed. His progress was slow at first, but he attributed this to the fact that he was young. When he became a man he dressed plainly, ordinarily in tweed clothes and low hat, so as to save all he could out of his salary. He made himself useful to the house and was more than once assured that his service was duly appreciated. Still nothing was said to him about taking him into the firm or giving him an interest in the business. Becoming discouraged at his prospect of advancement, he concluded that he might as well spend more of his salery in dress and making a better appearance. He accordingly appeared at his place of business one Monday morning in a black broadcloth suit, while a tall silk hat was on his head. He entered on his duties as usual, and no remarks were made about his change of dress, but more customers addressed him than was customary, and before the week ended he was invited to become a member of the firm.

A German commercial gentleman, temporarily residing in Glasgow, adds his testimony in favor of the tall hat. He states that merchants from London and Paris are better received in Berlin than are those from Glasgow and Edinburgh, and he is inclined to think that the preference to them is due to the tall hats they wear, as the soft hats worn by the Scotchmen present a very cheap appearance. The testimony of these three men appears to be sufficient to establish the value of the tall hat in the world of trade and commerce. Its value in promoting respectability and morality is declared by many persons.

FROM A MORAL STANDPOINT.

A woman states that she has for many years observed the men taken to a station by the police, and that not one in 200 wears a tall hat. Another has noticed while travelling that the men who wear tall hats behave in a more dignified, respectful and refined manner than those who wear caps or low hats. The former are not addicted to the use of profane or low language. A lady who has given much attention to the matter of dress thinks that no covering for the head is so becoming or tasty as the tall silk hat, and she regrets that they are so expensive and so liable to cause headache and baldness. This letter calls out communications from a physician and a dealer in second-hand goods. The doctor states that the tall hat is the most healthful covering for the head, and declares that the men who wear them very rarely have the headache. If the hat has a ventilator at the top of it the wearer is not likely to become bald. It causes the top of the head to be surrounded by air, which is the poorest conductor of heat, thus keeping it warm in winter and cool in summer.

The dealer in second-hand articles of dress states that he pays more than twice as much for cast off silk hats as he does for felt hats that originally sold for the same price. He thinks if they were generally worn that dealers would pay half-price for them when they had seen six month's service. They would be cleaned up and shaped so as to conform to the latest style. Finally, the testimony of a professor of science and navigation is given in regard to the tall hat as a life-preserver. He says it is more serviceable in case of shipwreck than any buoy he has ever experimented with.

It now seems evident that the stove-pipe hat is the most potent agent in every department of progress and reform that we possess. We now understand why there is so much wealth, refinement, culture, and intellectual activity in London and Paris. The men who live in these cities generally wear stove-pipe hats. In view of the testimony that has been given on the subject it seems likely that we have not yet discovered half the virtues of the tall hat.

Dictates of Fashion.

Miss Style (to coachman)—"James, your whiskers are not in harmony with Fido's. It mortifies me dreadfully when I go on the boulevards. I wish you to take Fido with you to the barber's and have your whiskers trimmed to match his."

James—"Mightn't I have the dog's hair cut to match mine ma'am?"

Miss Style (sternly)—"How can you think of it? Fido is just in style."

Why Some People Marry.

Some marry for the fun of the thing and never see where it comes in. This is discouraging.

Some marry for the sake of a good companion and never discover the mistake. This is lucky.

Man is a fickle "critter." Even Adam who had his wife made to order, found more or less fault with her.

Don't marry a man for his reputation. It is liable to be only a second hand affair borrowed from his ancestors.

Many women have married men for their fine exterior. But that's all there is to an ancient egg worth mentioning.

Marriage resulting from love at first sight is not generally wedded bliss on a par with sour milk. One or the other gets swindled, and often both.

Many a man has married for beauty only to learn that he paid twenty dollars for what can be purchased for twenty-five cents at all druggists. This is hard.

But few people marry for pure love, and they in after years suspicion that what were at the time promptings of the tender passion were, in all probability, but the first symptoms of cholera morbus.

The man who marries a woman simply because she is a handy arrangement to have about the house does so from a pure business stand point, and in the end, if not compelled to support him, she has done better than many women I know of.—H. V. Nasby.

DIAMONDS OF THOUGHT.

Choose the right way, however rough, it will certainly prove easier than the wrong way.

He who has learned the science of silence may hide ignorance, and even acquire a reputation for knowledge and wisdom.

We instinctively applaud the courage of self-assertion; we should honor with a still higher approval the courage of self-restraint.

Let a man try faithfully, manfully to be right, he will grow daily more and more right. It is the condition on which all men have cultivated themselves truly.

Denouncing the vapid verbiage of shallow praters, Carlyle exclaims, "Even Triviality and Imbecility that can sit silent, how respectable are they in comparison."

Impracticable theories grew out of thought without knowledge or lack of conscience. The man who wishes to help the world must bear a part in the world's interests and occupation.

All admit that a miser is not right to hoard his gold in a box when he might so invest it as to add to the welfare of multitudes. But every one does the same thing practically who holds in his own possession anything from which he cannot or does not extract the value, thereby rendering it useless.

A Step in Advance.

It is said that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has fitted up a number of cars with baths. This is a decided step in advance, and it is not a little surprising that Mr. Pullman did not do the same thing long ago. The need of such refreshment as a bath alone furnishes must have been felt by all who have occasion to make long railroad journeys. So general is this want that bathing cars would be certain to pay well, and now that our neighbours have introduced them it is to be hoped that they will soon appear on American railways, and especially on the Pacific routes.—N. Y. Tribune.

A Patagonian Paradise.

Not long ago Patagonia was believed to be one of the most desolate and uninviting parts of the world. It has been learned within the past three years, however, that a great deal of Patagonian is not to be judged by the bleak and verdureless Atlantic seaboard. The Argentine Military expeditions have brought home some astonishing reports, which are now supplemented by the discoveries of Col. Fontana.

This gentleman, the Argentine governor of the Chubut province, has just explored the Chebut river from itt mouthen the Atlantic coast to its head streams in the Cordilleras, travelling 3,000 miles, and crossing in various directions a large region extending 250 miles south of 4 20 south latitude. In a letter which the president of the Argentine Republic received from him a few weeks ago, Col. Fontana said that he had discovered many fertile valleys, well-watered plains, immense tracts of rich pasturage, a number of lakes, and extensive forests containing trees of unusual size.

"I have found," he writes, "new lands of a superior quality, well adapted for colonization and cattle raising, and a healthful climate, an abundance of wood, and useful minerals. This region, I believe, is destined to become one of the most beautiful and prosperous parts of the Argentine possession."

The country explored by Col. Fontana lies just a little south of the regions concerning which previous expeditions make almost equally glowing reports.

LATE DOMINION NEWS.

Arnprior stores close at six o'clock.

Prince Albert has a cornet band numbering fifteen pieces.

Battleford Presbyterians have decided to build a new church.

Frosts have injured the potato and other crops in Cape Breton.

At Summerside, P. E. I., during a recent storm, a cow, a cat, fifteen sheep, a horse, and a dog were killed by lightning. The dog was trotting along under a wagon when struck.

Brampton has a dog that has howled regularly every night for twelve months, and the effect on the dog has been to reduce a powerful baritone voice to a hoarse yelp. The animal's early decease is anxiously desired.

The first of a great drive of logs started through the drive at Eganville a few days ago. At the time of starting the tail of the drive was in Golden Lake, and it was thought that when the tail would reach Eganville the head would be at the mouth of the Bonnechere, over thirty-five miles distant.

The Sabbath School statistics of the Nova Scotia Methodist Conference show an average attendance of 1,000 in excess of last year. The number of conversions reported was 634, and the number of children pledged against intoxicating liquors, tobacco, and profanity, 3,187, an increase of 1,599 over the previous year.

Mr. George Park, a leading farmer of East Garafraxa, was found dead in a field a few days ago. Heart disease is supposed to have been the cause of death. He was a native of Scotland, much respected in the community in which he was known. His widow and family are well provided for.

Mr. W English, of Peterborough, proposes that his children shall bathe without drowning He has constructed a box thirty feet long by [illegible] feet wide, and four feet deep, and has moored it to a large boom in the river, near the shore. It is so arranged that the bathers may raise or lower the box to suit their requirements. With a prudent engineer the contrivance should effectually answer the purpose in view.

Israel McLaughlin, who attempted an assault on Miss Stewart, of Hampton, N. B., has been sentenced to imprisonment for life. He is a notorious character, and has been guilty of the same offence in Truro, Chatham, Newcastle, and Woodstock. Previously he had served a term of six years for assault on a young lady of Carelton. He is a native of St. John, and was a soldier in the Union army during the American war.

Mr. H. P. McCraney, son of Mr. W. McCraney, M. P., was in Vancouver during the first conflagration. He had a narrow escape with his life, and, as it was, lost all his clothes, except those in which he stood. Mr. McCraney having finished a heavy contract on the Vancouver Island Railway, recently purchased an interest in a sawmill in Vancouver city. He was one of the few fortunate ones whose premises were not burned out.

Advices from St. Catherines report an epidemic of black eyes. The trouble began with two young men connected with the retail coal and wood business. The first round resulted in nothing serious, and was followed by an hour's adjournment. The second round was participated in by half-a-dozen of the friends of the principals, and all succeeded in having themselves finished in more or less attractive colors. The police were at lunch.

An ex-student of the Agricultural College, now employed near Eden Mills, made loud professions of his abilities as a fisherman. Some persons, however, had so little faith in his attainments in this line that they made a wager that a young lady of the neighborhood could outfish him, he, however, to catch six to her one. The result was that the young woman caught nine fish, one of which was a trout weighing a pound and a half, while the ex-student caught six shiners.

Mr. Asa Fillmore, of Albert county, N. B., about three years ago changed what was apparently a fifty-dollar bill for a stranger The bill proved, however, to be only worth $5, a cypher having been ingeniously pasted beside the figure 5. The first person suspected proved his innocence. A second party was arrested, tried, and acquitted, and nothing calculated to throw light on the mystery transpired until a few days ago, when Mr. Fillmore was approached by one of his neighbors who acknowledged that he had the bogus bill changed, asked to be forgiven, and restored the money with interest.

A singular case was reported from Bristol, Que., recently. Miss Minnie Baird, aged about 22 years, daughter of Mr. John Baird, is just recovering from an illness of three months, and for four weeks and four days of that time she took no nourishment but a little lemon water. She became greatly emaciated, being reduced to a mere skeleton, and grave fears were entertained that she would not recover. Physicians were called in, but the case was beyond their power—they did not understand her case, and could do nothing to benefit her. A short time ago her appetite returned and developed to such an extent that she has a continual craving for food. Her complete recovery seems assured.

Mr. N. C. Blair, a landscape painter of Montreal, is supposed to have been drowned while sketching on the Upper Ottawa, near the outlet of the Chalk River. The guide who accompanied him says that about ten days ago he took his pencils and portfolio and started up the Chalk River in a canoe, presumably for the purpose of pursuing his daily work. He has not been seen since. His canoe was found bottom up in the river, and the hat he wore when leaving camp was discovered floating with the current. The river, at the point where he is supposed to have been lost, is neither wide or wild. To suspect him of suicide is out of the question, and there seems to be no reason to apprehend foul play. Mr. E. Alexander and Mr. F. Botsford, of Montreal, have started for the camp with the hope of finding some trace of the missing man.

"Pa," said a 5 year-old son, "can a rope walk?" "I think not my son," answered the father, "but it might if it were taut."

A Modern English Officer.

I had just sat down beside some comrades who were having their breakfast, and lifted a sardine to my lips, when Captain F—— came hastily up and told me that there was an officer dancing with rage on the water tins and calling for me; and he added in a whisper: "I think, by the nature of the language he is using, he must be a very big swell." So I put the sardine down untasted, and went off to see what was the matter. True enough somebody was there, and I could perceive a large solar tope bobbing above the water depot like an agitated mushroom. Its owner was a small man, and to secure a more commanding position, had mounted on a pile of empty tins, from which point of advantage he fired off his remarks like shrapnel shell. "Look here," he said, as soon as I came within range, "did you give orders for the mules to have water?" "Certainly not, sir; animals are only to be watered when the wells have been captured." "Very well; here is your representative, the officer!"—with withering scorn—"you leave in charge, breaking the orders and watering mules." Here the luckless A—— was understood to say that he was not doing anything of the sort, but was only looking at a paper on which some one had written a request for water for mules. "I don't care, sir! I saw you with my own eyes take this paper in your hand, and if you were not going to water the mules, what were you doing with it?" "Pardon me, sir," remarked A——meekly, "but if you are not more careful those tins will come down;" for he saw the pile beginning to tremble beneath his superior's wrath.

Down jumped the other as if they were red hot, but as soon as he found himself on firm ground continued the attack. "I'll tell you what it is, sir," he said, "this water is as precious as our life's blood, and there is only one thing to do to prevent its being squandered; we must make an example of an officer." Here he fixed his glance sternly on poor A——, whose enormous big eyes and somewhat cadaverous face gave him a most melancholy expression. "He must," continued he slowly, "be taken outside the zareba and shot." "Why, certainly, sir; a very good thing, too," I replied cheerfully; but just for decency's sake, before consigning my friend to an early death, I added: "If you will trust me, I will be responsible that the mules get no water, and there is still a large reserve in store." I did not dare to look at A——, who, notwithstanding his solemn face, was perceptibly shaking with internal spasms of suppressed mirth, which threatened at any moment to be too much for him, though he pulled himself together and managed to look as sober as a criminal at the bar, when the other replied, severely: "I am glad to hear you say so, and I will trust you; but—" and here he again fixed A——with his eye before turning away, as though regretting his leniency—"mark my word. If that officer attempts to give water to the mules he must be taken outside the zareba and shot." "You evidently are not good enough to be shot inside the zareba." I said to A——, as, bidding him prosper at his post, I returned to my breakfast. I feel I have described this scene very feebly, but there was a fine, old-fashioned flavor about the idea of casually shooting an officer before breakfast that tickled me immensely.

Killed in Time.

A husband who had been out shooting, but had not been successful, rather than return home empty-handed, stepped into a shop and purchased a hare.

"There, my ducky," he said to his wife on reaching home, "you see I am not so awkward with the gun after all."

"Let me see!"

"Isn't he a fine fellow?"

"My dear," said the wife, as she carried the hare to her nostrils, and put it down with a grimace, "you were quite right in killing him to-day; to-morrow it would have been too late."

"How is this, son-in-law: you went to the ball last night, and here it is scarcely two months since you lost your wife?" I acknowledge it, mother-in-law, but then you know I dance so sadly!"

SUMMER SMILES.

People going on excursions are so happy to get home that they are glad they went.

"What pretext did your husband have for beating you?" "It wasn't pretext your Honor; it was a club."

A fellow named Carney fell through a Montreal sidewalk last Spring and has become one of the users of the city.

Contributer—"Here is a manuscript I wish to submit—" Editor (waving his hand)—"I'm sorry. We are all full just now." Contributor (blandly)—"Very well; I will call again when some of you are sober."

"I am convinced that the world is daily growing better," remarked a reverend gentleman to a brother-clergyman; "my congregation is constantly increasing." "Yes," replied the other, who happened to be a penitentiary chaplain, "and so is mine."

In these times of "money lying idle" we heard of a man in New York who, when he attends church, occupies a pew the furthest from the pulpit to save the interest on his money while the collectors are passing the plate for contributions.

Father—"What ought I to do to a boy who is lazy and disobedient, who has no respect for his parents? What should be done to that kind of a boy?" Son—"Don't, for goodness sake, talk him to death. Give me the lickin' that's comin' to me, an' be done with it."

Missionary (to newly-converted chief of a cannibal tribe)—"Well, Luke, how about cannibalism? Four weeks ago you slaughtered your father; have you not improved since?" Cannibal—"Yes, indeed, my teacher; since then I have only eaten a couple of very distant relatives."

Mr. Isaacstein—"Ah sir, you rentered mine poy a goot service, sir, in pulling him out of de vater, und I shall nefer forget it, sir, nefer." Life Saver—"Oh, well, that's nothing." Mr. Isaacstein—"Nothing, mine frent? Did you know mine poy had on vun of mine twenty-five dollar suits?"

A poetess, bewailing the inconstancy of man, says: "If I should live a thousand years—of course none of us can—I'd never forget those broken vows nor love another man." Considering the character of her poetry, her declaration that she can't live a thousand years is cause for widespread rejoicing.

The baby was doubled up by the cramps and yelling at the rate of a mile a minute as the father and mother stood over the crib with the laudanum bottle between them. "No, Julia," he said gently but firmly, "you pour it out; that child is growing so much like your mother that I can't trust myself."

An Irishman, owing to dreadful misfortunes, resolved to commit suicide. But as he did not wish it to be known, lest it should leave a stain on his family, he left a note on the table to the following effect: "I hope you will not think that I committed suicide. The pistol went off as I was cleaning it."

"My dear," said an anxious wife to her husband, who is running for office, "we must economize in every possible way." "I do economize," he replied. "Yes," she replied bitterly; "you spend $10 or $15 a day treating a lot of bar-room loafers to beer and whisky just to get them to vote for you. Do you call that economy?" "Certainly; that's political economy."

"Well, pop," said Jimmy Tuffboy, "be a goin' ter the circus in the afternoon or evening." "James," said his mother, "I hardly think your father intends to take you at all." "Not take me! Then the circus might as well not show." "You can go this evening, my son," interjected his father. "Evening! I was in hopes you'd take me this afternoon, 'coz Uncle Ben's promised to take me in the evening."

WOOD PILE DISCIPLINE.

Burdette gives his Adirondack Experiences.

Every human male man, who possesses even a lingering taint of temper, should keep an axe and a wood pile somewhere handy, that he may rush out and work off his wrath when it waxes fierce. There is nothing in this vain old world that will send a man back to his appointed work, with a more wilted collar, and a truer comprehension of himself, than thirty minutes wrestling with a full flavored axe. He can use it so fiercely on the wood. All the fury of his nature, all the hate he feels for his enemy, he can infuse into that axe handle, and how the chips will fly. Not very artistically, probably, but they will fly. And presently it begins to dawn upon the man that he is feeling more calm. Evidently he is experiencing a change of heart. He does not hate his enemy so bitterly, after all. The axe weighs about eighty-one pounds on the up stroke. He does not hate his enemy at all. He changes his stroke and begins to chop on the system of Italian penmanship, the up-strokes heavy and the down ones light. He rather loves his enemy now. At last he puts all his failing strength into one terrific blow. He misses his tip with the axe and smites the chopping block with the handle. A tingle as though he had swallowed an alarm clock goes from elbow to hip, and back again, and the axe drops from his powerless hands, and a weak, limp, nerveless, perspiring, trembling, gasping thing, he staggers into the house, lies down on the first thing that looks like a lounge and is ready to die. There isn't a fear or a fault in his heart. Death has no terrors and life has no temptations for him. He has chopped out all his baser nature and is just as ethereal and spiritual as he can be on this side of the Jordan. It is great medicine.

People with whom I have been quarrelling all Spring would be amazed to see me now. I foolishly contracted, two weeks ago, to keep a camp fire going. I didn't know then that it took all the forests in the Adirondack spurs to keep up one little camp fire. I am not a large, broad, tall, sinewy man, and the axe they gave me might have beaten down the brazen gates of what you may call it that what's-his-name beseiged, if ever he did beseige it. I have fallen trees with that axe that would have made Mr. Gladstone shudder. They tell me I must say felled, not fallen, but I know better, because I only cut down fallen trees. My wrists are larger than my knees, which goes to show that I don't pray as hard as I chop, but I haven't strength enough to hate anybody; I am too limp to commit the lightest sin, so I haven't much need of prayer. I didn't write last week because I couldn't close my fingers over anything smaller than an axe helve. We tried tying the penholder to my elbows, but they wouldn't bend with that kind of an implement. My hands are a little better this week, but I am as badly axe-ridden as ever. I hear voices calling even now for "More wood," though I assure you I have cut a cord between every paragraph. At least, I think I have. Farewell. I will go out and chop until the axe flies off the handle, which is every five minutes, and then I am going to heap high the faggots, and crawl into the camp fire and show the old martyrs how sweetly and joyously a man can roast himself rather than cut one solitary stick of wood more.

Married Women's Names.

It is becoming the fashion among married ladies to keep their maiden name in addition to their husband's surnames. This practice has long been in vogue among actresses and other ladies who have made a reputation for themselves before marriage, the benefit of which they are unwilling to lose. The names of Mesdames Goldschmidt-Lind, Trebelli-Bettini, Lemmens Sherrington, and hosts of others, will readily occur to everyone as cases in point. But until lately the fashion was confined to actresses, singers, authoresses, and other ladies whose loss at marriage through the change of name would have been so substantial a pecuniary one that it might be estimated in thousands of pounds. It is only now that ladies in private life have begun to realise the fact that their own let in unchanging their name, and thus, to a great extent losing their identity, is quite as real, and quite as important to themselves as the actress' would be to her, although possibly no one would go so far as to say it had a monetary value.

When a girl marries, it is usually only the favored few who are present at the wedding breakfast who really manage to remember her new name and address. How often we hear the question: "What is Mary Sa-and-so's name now, and where does she live?" How often the answer brings the rejoinder: "Dear me! we must have been quite close to her the other day; what a pity we did not know, we should have liked so much to go and see her." Hence the present movement on the part of married women. It certainly will have many advantages if it becomes general, not only to the ladies themselves, but to all their friends and acquaintances, especially if the double surname comes, in course of time, to be the distinguishing mark of a married woman, for as it would form part of a lady's ordinary signature, which the title of Mrs. or Miss does not, many a correspondent would be relieved from the harassing doubt which now besets him as to whether he is to address his reply to Mrs, Miss, or Esq.

He Wasn't That Kind of a Hindoo.

"And do you," said the visitor to the circus to the swarthy Hindoo in the Mother Hubbard pants, "do you actually worship yonder white elephant? Do you heathen go out each morning to offer crimens while clustered around his feet? Do you actually worship such ungainly animals on the fellaged banks of the sluggish Nile?"

"Phat's that?" inquired the exhibition Hindoo.

"Do you—eh—hold those white elephants as sacred animals in the land of the Lotus Eaters?"

"Be jabers, an' that's all poppycock to me. Phat kind av guff be yez givin' me? Ol am here fur $10 a week an' found an' while I quit worshipin' the Virgin Mary and fail to payin' me respects to a rael illephant yez may lose all faith in Paddy O'Hara."

MARKDALE, JULY 29. 1886.

—The new British Parliament will meet the 5th of August. Lord Salisbury is endeavoring to form a Codlition Ministry, while the Queen is using her personal endeavors to that end.

—Sir John Macdonald is now in British Columbia. His health is already much improved from his trip, and he is being enthusiastically received. He travelled from Calgary by daylight and describes the scenery as the finest he ever witnessed.

—Important developments were recently made in court at the trial of Anarchists for rioting in Chicago. A Pinkerton Detective had been put on track, and attended their meeting previously. His testimony was a stunner for the ringleaders.

—It has been decided to extend theC. P. R. from Ingersoll to London. The extension is expected to be complete by the 1st January next.

At the Reform Convention held last Saturday, Mr. B. Allen received the unanimous nomination for the Commons. A vote was taken for canndidates for the Local Legislature resulting in 66 votes for Mr. Alfred Frost of Owen Sound and 60 for Mr. Jas. Cleland of Meaford. The convention adjourned without deciding the matter.

—The Crawford—Dilke divorce case which has been prominent in the English Courts, having been re-opened on the petition of Sir Charles Dilke in order that he might be given an opprtunity of proving his innocence, was concluded last week, and the former decision confirmed. The leading London papers are unaminous and severe in condetration of Sir Charles who is now banished from high society and will reside in Paris.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

Markdale. July 24th, '86.

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR,—"One of the boys" evidently thinks he has "plaid" a strong card against your concert reporter, in the letter that appears last week. He certainly knew who wrote the report for you,else his rapid production would have been less personal, and more to the point of criticism I made. He states that the concert was 'ably" reported; and then follows with a denial, saying—"the reporter is a pretender, and ignominious failure." The report was fairly given in every way, and no animus displayed toward anyone, making it more of a success, than "one of the boys" attempts to spell played, three different times. So easy to look up the "big" words, but ignorant of words like "played" and "piccolo." The boy fails to see that, music is not a thing for the eyes, but for the ears; therefore, the tone, and not the horn is judged. You wonder I was misled by one of the horns, thinking it was a trombone: question, how? By hearing a very discordant "trombone" tone blown from a baritone horn, which is considered to be bad execution, especially in a hall. The march was played, but I admit that it was not at the time mentioned. "One of the boys" can learn yet, and should accept so slight a criticism for his profit, thus aiding the whole organisation. If he wishes, your reporter will give him instructions on the following points, he knows very little about, viz: Instrumentation, attack, tone, harmony, time and sight-reading. Charges moderate. Also orthography, it desired. If "one of the boys" does not improve his tone on the upper notes, he will ere long become a permanent imitation of the calliope he so argumentively refers to. I am thankful he refrained from being severe, and extend him my thanks for so pointedly refering to my several abilities; when he evidences like characteristics at his future public performances,if present, your com. will be glad to extend pleasant recognisitions of them. Trusting he will realize that his letter shows, that I have a parallel point against him, in that, this time he has "over-blown" himself.

I remain,
In Harmony,
W. A. BROWN.

Church Notes.

Quartely meeting in the Methodist church next Sunday.

The Methodist church of Walkerton have bought the St. Paul Presbyterian church of that place for $4,000. The church originally cost $9,000

Rev. Dr. James received a public reception by his new congregation, Knox Church, Walkerton, last week.

Rev. J. W. Manhood of Dundalk filled Rev. Mr. Cornish's pulpit last Sunday very acceptably.

THE BEST YET

There is no preparation before the people to-day that commands their confidence more or meets with a better sale than does Dr. Flower's Extracts of Wild Strawberries—the infallible remedy for all forms of Summer Complaints.

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

The return match of baseball, between the Flesherton and Eugenia teams was played on the grounds of the latter on Monday afternoon last, resulting in a victory for the Flesherton boys. The score stood, Flesherton 48, Eugenia 24, with one innings to play for Flesherton.

The picnic to Bell's Lake last Friday, under the auspices of the Masonic fraternity of this village, was well patronized by the Masons and their friends. There was a very large turnout from Flesharton; a good number of the brethren and their friends joined the company at Markdale. The day was very favorable, just all that could be desired. The company, arriving at the lake, encountered some little difficulty and fatigue for the ladies in reaching a wharf where the handsome little steamboat (belonging to Moffat Bros. of Markdale) could land. the water in the lake having so lowered that the boat could not run in to the first wharf built; however, after all had been taken on board and sailed across the beautiful sheet of water and had landed where a beautiful picnic grove was found and all had satisfied their keen appetites, the afternoon was spent by all in a very happy manner, boating, sailing, &c., to the entire satisfaction of all. Among those interested in making all feel happy and enjoy themselves, we could not help but notice the efforts of W. J. McFarland, Esq., of Markdale, and R. J. Sproule, of Flesherton, ready and willing to go at everyone's bidding and do all in their power in the most pleasant manner to please all. We think all returned home well tired but pleased at having enjoyed so pleasant a day in recreation.

Dr. Christoe preached in the Methodist church here on Sunday evening last. Notwithstanding some very unkind and bitter words from one Norman Boyles, a simplefon, at the beginning of the service, the Dr. delivered a very interesting discourse. It appears poor Norman holds something in his heart against the Dr. which he cannot forgive. When the Dr. rose to open the service, poor Norman's conscientious scruples would not allow him to remain; putting on his hat, started for the door; on his way out, took some very bitter glances at the Dr. and uttered some very unkind words; however, he was soon outside and out of hearing, and no doubt went home feeling very dignant but rather justified that he had not violated conscience. The Dr. knew Norman too well to be at all discomfitted.

Special Ordination services are announced for, to be held in the Presbyterian church here on Sabbath afternoon next; the Ordination of the members elect to the Eldership in said church.

LEFT FOR THE WEST.—After a pleasant holiday the Strain Bro's (Joseph and Herbert) sons of our most highly esteemed citizen, Wm. Strain, Esq., left here on Tuesday last for their respective places of employment, Joseph returning to Atchison, Kansas, and Herbert to Pembina. Both young men have the kindest wishes and love of all which was manifested during their short stay with us. Our band serenaded them at their father's residence on the eve of their departure.

A large number of our citizens held themselves in readiness to witness the lacrosse match which was to have been played between the junior team of Markdale and Flesherton on the grounds of the latter on Tuesday afternoon last, but the visiting team failed to put in an appearance.

Our boys were all on hand in good time, had ordered a sumptuous dinner at A. Munshaw's palace hotel, and waited patiently the arriv al of visitors until the 4 p. m. mail arrived which conveyed, shall I say a note of apology, no, but an Scurrilous letter couched in language such as could not have been dictated nor written by a gentleman. Our boys do not feel much hurt nor think the stream more foul than the source from whence it flows.

A MIDNIGHT ALARM.

There is scarcely any fright more alarming to a mother than the ominous sound of croup—so liable at the hour of night. When Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam (for the throat and lungs) is at hand, croup and distressing coughs lose half their terrors. It cures coughs, asthma and bronchitis.

Personals.

Mrs. R. B. Currie is visiting friends at Elora.

J. E. Crone returned last week from a visit to Nottawa.

D. Dwyrre returned from Lampton Co. last week.

Mr. Dumbar formerly teacher in this village, made Markdale a visit this week.

A HEAVY BURDEN.

Mr. George Russell, of Aurora, Ont., says he was a great sufferer from a running sore of the worst description, which baffled the best medical skill, and his life was a burden. He was cured by B. B. B. to his great joy and surprise of his friends.

Not Too Soon.

A NEW extradition treaty has been signed by the British Government and the American Ministers in London, and is now before the United States Senate for ratification. It has long been a matter of complaint among honest people in both countries that criminals and scoundrels of various degrees had only to get across the line into the United States or Canada as the case might be, and they could snap their finger at the law. That such a state of affairs should have been so long tolerated seems extraordinary; but Governments move slowly, and although the need for an extended treaty has been long talked of, the proposal had not till now assumed definite shape. We see no good reason why either country should harbor criminals of any kind, and why they arrest and return to the jurisdiction where the crime was committed should not be facilitated to the utmost (always excepting offences which are political.) and even the proposed treaty does not go far enough, but it is an advance in the right direction, and we hope nothing will occur to prevent its ratification. It includes dynamiters and embezzlers to the extent of $50, two classes it was very desirable to get at. It has long been a disgrace that cashiers, confidential clerks and others in positions of trust could make off with their thousands and live openly in the other country on the preceeds of their embezzlements, safe from any punishments; while on the other hand the scoundrels who tried to blow up public buildings, endangering the lives of hundreds, had only to get off to the States and they were safe. Neither class are a desirable acquisition to the country to which they come, and we are glad to see that at last a move is being made to give them up.

For DYSPEPSIA and Liver Complaint, you have a printed guarantee on every bottle of Shiloh's Vitalizer. It never fails to cure. For sale by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale. A

St. Thomas, June 29, 1886

The JOURNAL.

Allow me through your paper to thank Dr. Washington, throat and lung surgeon, for his great skill in curing me of catarrh which had greatly troubled me for years, also an exceedingly bad form of ulcerated throat My throat for weeks so badly ulcerated that it was almost impossible for me to swallow the left palate being eaten through, a hole big enough to pass a goose quill through It is now entirely healed, and as I am able to attend to my work once more, I wish to thank the doctor and also recommend any one who may be affected with catarrh or any disease of the throat,

Yours truly
W. H. Orr.

Dr. Washington will make monthly visit the last of each month.

From our own correspondent.

Farming operations are now in full swing. The yield in some cases is heavy, but upon the whole will be an average crop. There is not much fall wheat grown in this locality. All other crops look well. Barley is about ready for cutting.

Mr. Hugh Johnston has growing on his farm a cabbage which now measures 30 inches in diameter. It is the largest we have heard of. We think Mr. Johnston will be entitled to rank as champion cabbage raiser as well as champion butter maker.

Miss Kate Wilson, daughter of Mr. Thomas Wilson, of Fairmount, the energetic secretary of the E. A. Society, is home from Hamilton spending her holidays.

Messrs. John Noble, Miss Noble and Mr. Jamieson, of Markdale, spent a few days with Mr. John Irwin's, "Poplar Grove," adjoining Rocklyn, last week.

The new Town Hall is ready for painting. The belfry is erected and Taylor is about to apply for the position of bell-ringer. It is understood that the Markdale Brass Band will give one of their popular concerts in the Hall as soon as it is completed. The Hall is much appreciated here, and we have no hesitation in predicting a crowded house.

Mr. Wm. Neely's new barn is completed. Mr. Neely expresses himself highly pleased with the workmanship performed by the contractor, Mr. Walter Ormsby. Mr. Geo. Hicks' barn is nearly finished.

There is some talk of fixing up the township hall for a church.

Sad havoc was made among the fruit in Mr. Alex. Erskin's orchard last week. Some of the young men in Rocklyn can tell you more about it than we can.

We are sorry to say that Mr. David Stead is seriously ill.

Mr. Thomas McConnell is able to be out though he still carries his arm in a sling, as a result of the runaway accident on 12th July.

Mr. Wm. Cook is slowly recovering from his recent severe illness.

A BAD BREAKDOWN

is a common thing now-a-day to hear the complaint of feeling all broken down tired, weary, restless languor, with loss of sleep and appetite nearly gone, and no apparent cause. This is general debility and Sherlock Blood Bitters promptly relieves and most invariably cures.

June 13, 1885.

For two years my wife suffered from lung and heart disease through rheumatism. She was greatly emaciated and too weak to do anything for herself; she was given up by five doctors, they all passed their opinion that she could not live. She commenced using Dr. Jug's Medicine in December, 1884, and after taking six bottles she was so much improved that she could look after her household duties duties.

FARM FOR SALE

[illegible]

MONEY TO LOAN

THE FARM.

To Prevent Rust.

The rusting of iron causes endless inconvenience in all branches of mechanical work. Iron rust impairs the value of the farmer's machinery, and the rusting of nails and bolts causes wood-work to lose strength, become leaky and fall to pieces. Rust may be banished and thorough protection given to iron whenever it is in such a position that a coating applied with a brush does not interfere with its usefulness. Bright and rough work can be alike protected, and so may nails, wood-screws and bolts.

Get two or three pounds of red lead and some boiled linseed oil; do not be persuaded into using raw oil. Get also some Japan drier; this will be needed at the rate of perhaps a tablespoonful to the pint of oil. Red lead cannot be bought ready mixed because it hardens too rapidly. Remove all the red rust from the iron, steel, tin or other metal; if painted, take off all that is not hard and firmly attached to the iron. Mix up a small pot of the paint, but not more than will be wanted for the work in hand. The Japan is used because quick drying is convenient. One-tenth as much litharge in powder as lead is sometimes an advantage. Give the articles a thin coat; keep the paint well stirred up as it settles very rapidly. When one coat is dry mix up another and apply as before. If closely covered the mixed paint will keep twenty-four hours or more.

This paint is water-proof, and in making a tank or trough it is better than the best white lead for putting into the joints when they are put together. Dip a nail into red lead and put a drop under the head before it is driven home and there will be little or no danger that the wood will ever become "iron sick" around it. Swab screws or bolt holes with it, and give the screws or bolts a coating, and they will not rust in the wood.

Tin pails covered with two or three good coats of red lead paint, resist water as though they were rubber. The coating is hard and very durable; in this respect being greatly in advance of any other paint. If the color is objectionable on iron, a coat of ordinary paint may be put on the outside.

Red lead paint actually forms a perfect protecting coating for iron, as well as a cement of no mean strength. The reason why it is not generally used by manufacturers may be asked. The answer is simple. It cannot be mixed in large quantities, in advance, as it hardens too soon; it is heavy and somewhat costly, as compared with other paints; it settles in the bottom of the bucket and is not so easily applied as white lead and other paints. To the farmer none of these things are special objections. The superior protection is worth all the trouble required. Finally, try red lead in putty or make a putty of it when a water-tight job is wanted. Joints of carriages, wagons or wheels, set in red lead putty or paint will not open, and a red lead coating or priming on a carriage, cart or any other farm tool, will insure most perfect protection for the wood. By all means, try it and test it before discussing its advantages with a wagon maker. Individual knowledge and practical experience is worth considerably more than good "trade" reasons.

Plotting Out the Prairie Farm.

In starting a home on the prairies one can easily show his good sense in the location of the buildings. Here you have one hundred and sixty acres, take pencil and paper, and upon the supposition that you locate your buildings all in one corner, as nine-tenths of the settlers do, you can easily estimate the amount of teaming it will require one of these days to get the produce to the barns from the forty acres in the opposite corner. This will lead you to locate the buildings near the centre of the claim. The best plan is probably to lay out the farm in ten-acre lots. You can then, by leaving just space enough to drive a wagon, go to any part of the farm in the least possible time, you will also have the advantage of knowing just how much land you have to a given crop, the yield per acre, and many other things you should thoroughly understand to work to advantage. Besides by locating in the centre you can see all that is going on at any part of the farm, keep better watch of your stock, if out in pasture, and see that dogs or wolves do not worry or destroy your sheep.

The division into lots of equal dimensions, and the same space can not be conveniently done unless the land is very level. If undulating, or cut into by a dry run, or by sloughs, or moist meadows, which nature laid out without regard to section lines, you will have to cut according to your cloth; even in that case it will be a good plan to have stakes every ten rods apart on the outside lines. If, however, you plant a row of trees around the claim by setting them a rod apart and using a Lombardy poplar for every tenth one, you can see from a distance, and locate any point with considerable accuracy; and it will aid you greatly in getting the location or size of any plot on the farm.

What Ailed the Baby.

Since the installation of the nurse, rather peculiar symptoms of some disorder had been noticed in the three-month-old boy—the first baby in the family. One day, when these symptoms appeared rather more alarming than usual, I was called upon for advice. I had dabbled a little in medicine, and the mother thought me symptom-wise. I went to the nursery unannounced and caught the nurse in the act of taking a strong pull at a big bottle, which she hastily concealed just as the young mother entered the room. There was no need of an analysis to prove that the bottle contained whiskey of rather rank quality. The nurse was full of it. The boy betrayed unmistakable signs of intoxication. I put on a professional gravity and informed the anxious mother that her darling was suffering from "acute alcoholism"—in a word, he had taken an overdose of milk punch. The family physician was called in and confirmed my diagnosis. The nurse was, of course, packed off at once. Douglas Jerrold showed how "Baby Bib" became a confirmed drunkard before he had completed his first year's pilgrimage in this wicked world. In his case infant "cordials" and "comforts" were responsible. The case that I have cited shows that a nurse who is fond of her "comforts" may harbor as much danger as any "soothing syrup" in the market.

WHAT WOMEN ARE DOING.

Mary Macdonald was publicly decorated recently with the medal of the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire for having, at the peril of her own life, saved that of a workman.

The women cricketers of Sidney, Australia, played a very successful match recently. The two elevens were led by two sisters, the colors being respectively cardinal and blue, and black and gold.

Princess Blanche d'Orleans, daughter of the Duke de Nemours, is a pupil of M. Aubert, and gives proof of great artistic talent. The hotel of the Duke de Nemours contains several remarkable works of the Princess.

The temperance hospital just established in Chicago, under the lead of Miss Frances Willard, is the second of its kind in the world, the first one having been founded in London in 1873.

A petition three hundred and seventy-one yards long, and signed by thirty thousand women of Ulster, has been addressed to the Queen, and beseeches her to withhold her assent from any Home Rule bill which may be passed.

Lady Archibald Campbell, the leader of the "Pastoral Players," has obtained permission from Lord Tennyson and Mr. Irving to bring out during the next "pastoral season," the Bower Scenes from the Laureate's drama of "Becket."

Miss Alma Murray, whose representations of Constance in Mr. Browning's "In a Balcony," of Colombe, and of Beatrice in the "Cenci," have marked her as an actress of high intellectual gifts, is engaged for the autumn to take the leading roles at Drury Lane.

A young married lady, Mrs. Lee, is Cequelin's most valued pupil. Her mother was a native of New Orleans, and her father of New York, and she was brought up in Europe. She can declaim in five languages as perfectly as though each were her mother-tongue.

At the fifteenth commencement of the London University, thirty girls were made bachelors of art or science. Several of them took high honors. Miss Mary Madeline Adamson taking first honor as bachelor of science over her male competitors.

The College for Higher Education of Women at Egham, England, raised by the munificence of the late Mr. Holloway, was opened by the Queen in person. Little short of two and a half millions of dollars has been spent on its erection.

A Miss Gibbens, who last year made a trip through unfrequented parts of North Devon, and published an account of it, under the title "We Donkeys in Devon," resumes her wanderings this season in the same little cart, with donkeys driven tandem, and will write an account under the head of "The Donkeys on Dartmoor."

Harlem has a woman captain, Mrs. Mary E. Coons, who is licensed captain of the yacht of which her husband is engineer. Her application astonished the inspectors, but as she could "box the compass," knew the "rules of the road," and promised not to swear at the chief engineer, the licence was made out, and Mrs. Coons became the second licensed captain of the female persuasion in the world.

Lady Anne Blunt, the granddaughter of Lord and Lady Byron, is one of the cleverest women in England. She is an author, an adept in music and painting, a student of Oriental politics, a scholar capable of writing to her Ceylon friends in their own language, and capable manager of her beautiful home, Crabbet Park, and the teacher of her only daughter.

Through the founder, the Countess of Carnarvon, a society of Irish women have sent to the Edinburg Industrial Exhibition specimens of homespun and tweeds, knitting lace and crochet, embroidery and sprigging, besides plain sewing and the making of peplins, gloves, umbrellas, paper bags, mustard cakes and biscuits, Vere Foster's copy-books pottery painting and straw bottle-covers. The Society for the Employment of Women is sending samples of scrivenery, illuminating, engrossing, and wood-carving, tent-making, tobacco, matches, Indian carpets, artificial flies, fishing-lines, pellen-nets, and tennis-nets, pins, muslins, linens, and fans.

Lady Wolseley has originated the scheme of a "May-Fair" cart, which calls three times per week at such opulent houses in the west end of London, whose owners are willing to assist in the work. The food is put into different cans, and then taken to a coffee-house, where, under superintendence, it is made up into appetizing dishes, or arranged in cold portions. It is then sold to laborers out of work, or others in straitened circumstances, at a nominal figure, which does not cover the cost of collecting. Sixty families, three hotels, and two clubs have already become contributers, and there are many others, who on the occasion of a dinner or other entertainment, have signified their intension of sending for the May-Fair cart.

The Queen of Denmark has on several occasions presented her own oil paintings for charitable purposes, and a new instance of her Majesty's kindness has just transpired. The small and poor parish of Lundee, in Jutland, was sadly in want of a new altar-piece for the church, but their finances would not allow of the expense. The parishioners, however, resolved to present a petition to Queen Louise, asking her to paint one, and accordingly a deputation of two men was sent to Copenhagen. Her Majesty received them very graciously, and promised to fulfil their request. The men, having been served with refreshments in another apartment, were again summoned before the Queen, who asked them if this was their first visit to Copenhagen, and then handed to each of them a closed envelope, saying she hoped they would enjoy themselves while in the capital. The envelopes contained some new bank-notes.

Choice Recipes.

TOMATO SOUP.—To one quart of boiling water add one quart of tomatoes; boil again and put in one teaspoonful of soda; as soon as it has ceased foaming, add one pint of milk, four rolled crackers, butter, pepper and salt, and serve very hot.

A NUTRITIOUS BROTH.—A quarter of a teaspoonful of beef extract, the yolk of an egg beaten up, a cup of boiling water, a little salt added, and served with a slice of hot toast, makes a palatable and nutritious luncheon, and an excellent repast for invalids.

QUEEN OF PUDDINGS—One quart of milk, one pint of bread crumbs, the yolks of two eggs. After it is baked spread jelly or any kind of fruit over the top. Beat the whites of two eggs to a froth, mix with sugar, and put on the top and set in the oven until a little brown.

BROWN BREAD—Three cups cornmeal, two cups of rye, half a cup molasses, 1½ cups each of sour milk and warm water. Mix molasses, milk, and water thoroughly, adding one teaspoonful of soda; then stir in the meal; steam four hours. Be very careful not to let the water stop boiling while steaming.

LEMON TART—One cup of sugar, two lemons, all the juice, and a teaspoonful of grated peel, one teaspoonful of corn starch dissolved in a little cold water, and one and one half dozen raisins, stewed, cut in two, and seeded. Beat up well, and bake with upper and lower crust.

ORANGE TARTLETS—Two fine oranges, juice of both and grated peel of one, one cup of sugar—three-fourths cup if the oranges are very sweet—one tablespoonful of butter, one-half lemon—juice only—to wet one teaspoonful of corn starch. Beat all well together and bake in tartlet shells without cover.

A DELICATE SOUFFLE—Dissolve a quarter of a pound of chocolate in luke-warm water; add the yolks of four eggs and a cup of powdered sugar, and mix well together until you have a smooth, frothy paste. Beat up the four whites to a stiff froth and add them to the mixture. Pour all into a baking dish; leave it for twenty minutes in the oven and serve.

INDIAN PUDDING WITHOUT EGGS—Boil a quart of milk, and stir in a scant pint of Indian meal mixed smooth with cold milk, boil for twenty minutes, add two tablespoonfuls of butter, one each of ginger and cinnamon, and a tablespoonful of salt. Stir in a cup of molasses, and bake for an hour and a half. This may be varied by the addition of a cupful of raisins and currants.

COFFEE CREAM—Beat one quart of rich, sweet cream to a stiff froth, like the white of eggs for icing; then mix with one-quarter pound of granulated sugar, and shortly before serving, beat into it one cup of cold coffee extract, which has been made by slowly filtering two cups of boiling water through two ounces of finely ground coffee. Serve in a glass dish, with lady fingers or fresh sponge cake.

SHORT-CAKES FOR STRAWBERRIES, BLACKBERRIES, OR RASPBERRIES—One teacup of cream, one of sour milk, one teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of salt, mix and beat in flour, roll out quickly one-half an inch thick and bake. When taken from the oven split, spread with sweet butter, and then add berries; lay the upper part on, crust side down, and cover with berries and sprinkle with sugar. Prepare your berries with sugar half an hour before using. Be sure the berries are ripe.

APPLE JELLY—Take any tart red apples and quarter them to be sure of no wormy ones, but not peel them. Nearly cover them with water and boil all to pieces. Strain through a jelly-bag without using much pressure, as it will not be clear if you get in much of the pulp. Allow three-fourths pounds of sugar to one pound of juice and boil twenty minutes. Jelly from crab apples is made in the same way, the little apples making the nicest and clearest jelly.

VEAL SALAD.—Mix one half teaspoonful of mustard with half a cupful of vinegar. Beat the yolks of two or three eggs, with a little salt, until they are quite thick and light, then, stirring briskly all the time, slowly add two or three tablespoonfuls of best salad oil, and four tablespoonfuls of rich, thick, sweet cream. Then add mustard, vinegar, salt and pepper to taste, and some very finely chopped parsley and tarragon. Pour this sauce over a heaping plateful of cold roasted veal, cut into pieces about an inch long and a quarter-inch thick, cover tightly and let it stand in a cold place for an hour or two. Serve on a platter and garnish with sprigs of cripe parsley and slices of a hard boiled egg.

Journalism Under Difficulties.

When we first struck Vancouver a small medium safe would have held our gold without any special strain, but when we had interviewed the enterprising business men of the city, and sized up the prospect and position of this splendid lay-out the telegraph wires were worked, and the first steamer from San Francisco brough a neat and complete newspaper plant, including the best press in the province, upon which the Advertiser was printed for just six short weeks. The fire left us just enough type to print a respectable hand-bill, but encouraged by the example of our neighbors, and full of faith in the future of the city, we commenced business in a 14 x 17 building with a canvas roof, and we write this article in a tent next door. A small hand-press, which is slow enough to turn a man's hair gray and old enough to make a gray-haired man feel young, has been given us and enabled us once more to produce a newspaper.—Vancouver Advertiser.

"LET ME OUT OF THIS."

The Astonishing Experience of a Farmer.

On the evening of June 18, 1868, George Wellington, a Quebec farmer, had a gathering of friends at his house. He was a man 42 years of age, and of robust health, and on this evening it was noticed that he was in particularly good spirits. After the guests had departed he remarked to his wife that he felt more like singing and dancing than going to bed. They retired about half-past 11 o'clock, and she was asleep before midnight.

The farmer was always out of bed at 5 o'clock, but on the morning following the party the wife awoke at 6 and found him still sleeping. When she attempted to arouse him she discovered that he was dead. A doctor was sent for, and he arrived in the course of an hour to pronounce it a case of heart disease. He said the man has been dead three hours when the wife awoke. The undertaker came and prepared the body for burial. It was remarked that the corpse retained a life-like appearance, and that none of the limbs grew rigid, but the two other physicians called in vigorously combatted the idea that he was in a trance and might be restored to life. Nevertheless, the wife and sons had a secret hope that death had not really come to him, and the funeral was put two days ahead. During the interval the for signs of returning animation, but nothing occurred to delay the funeral arrangements.

The burial was to take place in a country graveyard, and most of the vehicles gathering at the house belonged to farmers. The usual ceremonies took place over the dead, and the coffin was brought out and placed in the hearse. While the procession was forming, a team attached to an empty wagon came down the road, running away. The wagon collided with the hearse and the latter vehicle was upset and the coffin flung out. Four or five men ran to pick it up, but before a hand had touched it a voice was heard saying:

"For God's sake, let me out of this!"

The people at first moved back in affright, but as the voice continued to address them the coffin was righted and opened, and Wellington was found struggling to get out. With a little assistance he pulled himself out of the box and walked into the house and sat down in a chair. In half an hour he had his clothes on and was moving around among the amazed people, to whom he related this experience:

"I did not fall asleep until sometime after midnight. When I awoke the clock was striking 5. I made a move to get out of bed, but, to my great amazement I could stir neither hand nor foot. I had the full use of my ears, but I could not open my eyes. I argued at first that I was not yet wide awake but

and called me by name and I could not respond by even moving an eyelid, I became satisfied that I was in a trance. My mind was never clearer, and painfully acute. I made effort after effort to throw off the great weight which seemed to be holding me down but I could not bend a toe or crook a finger. However, it was only after the doctor had pronounced me dead that I felt any alarm. Up to that time it had seemed as if I could soon manage to get rid of the weight. Had a pistol been fired in the room I am sure the spell would have been broken. After the doctor's ultimatum I felt that I should be buried alive. But was I alive? All of a sudden this query flashed across my brain, and I was troubled more than I can tell you. As I had never died before how was I to know the sensations? Could the dead hear and think? Was the mind of a corpse in active operation? It was a problem I could not solve.

"Not a word was spoken near me which I did not catch and fully understand. There was a great deal of weeping, and I failed to satisfy myself as to the cause. I had died, but it did not seem as if this was a sufficient excuse. When my wife bent over the coffin and grieved and refused to be comforted, I did not feel bad with her. On the contrary, her action surprised me. When the two other doctors pronounced me dead I made up my mind that I was dead and that

THE END HAD COME.

I had been taught to believe that the spirit of the dead ascended to heaven, and that the dead were dead in mind as well as body. It was a base deception. I felt indignant that it was so.

"As an instance of the acuteness of my hearing, let me explain that after I was placed in the coffin the receptacle was moved over to an open window in the parlor, where it was supported on sawhorses. Two of my neighbors took seats on a wagon box in the barnyard, fully 200 feet away, and for an hour conversed of my death in ordinary tones of voice. I did not miss one single word of the conversation, as both afterward admitted. I could hear every tick of the kitchen clock, and much of the conversation of the women in the up-stair room. On the night previous to the funeral about half past 10 o'clock, and while the two men sitting up with the corpse were reading, I heard two men climb the fence into the barnyard, cross the yard, and enter the barn. After a few minutes they came out, and I heard the jingle of something carried by one of the pair. I could not make out what was going on, but learned afterward. The two men stole a horse from a field opposite my barn, and they entered my premises in search of a bridle.

"I heard the people assemble for the funeral, and as I caught a word from this one or that one I identified them by name to myself. I but when the minister spoke of me I could not take it as personal. It was as if the name and person belonged to some one I had known years before. I know when I was carried out and placed in the hearse, and I am certain that I heard the clatter of the team running away before anybody sighted them. When the people began to call out in affright I felt that same fear of being hurt that any live man does. I heard them trying to back the hearse out of the way to let the team go by, but they were not quick enough. As the collision came my eyes opened and my speech was restored and knew that thereafter I was all right."

LISTENED CLOSELY TO THE SERMON,

"Yes, sir," said the sailor, "I've seen a whale that could swallow a boat." "Oh, that's nothing," said the barkeeper, "I have seen a man that could swallow a schooner."

It was a gray afternoon in March, and the landscape looked bare and desolate as Cecil walked down the well-remembered path, through the flowerless meadows, and by the river flowing so sullenly beneath the lowering sky. Following some fancy of his own he went first to the mere, where he used to sit of old with Argent in the glorious summer-time which seemed so long ago. He could hardly imagine it to be the same place. The gloomy silent waters, stripped of their bravery of flowers and leaves, the melancholy level shores, the bare trees, their branches waving with a moaning sound in the chill and rain-laden wind, filled Cecil with vague disquiet.

Could it indeed be true that Argent was lost to him, that she was perhaps even now the plighted bride of another, that another had leave to press the hand she had withdrawn from his, and that another might kiss the lips denied to him? The thought stung Cecil to madness. No, it could not, it should not be! She was his, and no mere power on earth should take her from him now. His brow grew dark and his face stern as he hurried on, away from the memory-haunted mere, through the sodden grass, the gloomy dells and shrubberies of the park to the house.

How familiar, yet how strange it all was! There was the garden, once so blooming and sweet, now a damp, dismal wilderness. There were the creeper-covered walls of the old mansion, darkened by the early twilight of a dull March day. Was the past a dream, or was the present a dream? Cecil could hardly tell. All was so strange and so unnatural.

Once within, however, the sense of unreality passed away and the actual present returned. A bright wood fire glowed on the big hearth in the hall, and threw its fantastic radiance on the stained windows, the grim armour, and the ancestral portraits.

"Master's busy in the liber'y, sir, and giv' horders he was not on no account to be disturbed," respectfully exclaimed the gray-haired domestic; "but Miss Veriston——"

As if summoned by the mention of her name, the drawing-room door opened, and, closing it softly behind her, Miss Veriston advanced towards the fire.

"It is growing dark, Mapleson," she said. And her voice thrilled Cecil's heart painfully. Then she started, as she perceived a gentleman with the servant.

"Mr. Graham, miss," announced the man, with deferential readiness. And then she left the hall.

They were soon talking, apparently on easy friendly terms, over the glowing embers. Then Mr. Veriston appeared, and the trio partook of tea in the small cosy room.

As of old, Cecil sat opposite to the young chatelaine, letting his eyes dwell upon her ripe beauty, taking the cup she filled for him from her hands with trembling fingers, listening eagerly to every word she spoke, envying the light that touched so softly the pale gold of her silken tresses and the shadows that lurked in the folds of her black velvet dress, a dress more than any other calculated to set off her fair, delicately tinted beauty.

"We never thought we should see you again, did we, Argent?" the old man asked once of his daughter; and, oh, joy and wonder! her eyes drooped before Cecil's burning glance, and her voice faltered, as she answered in low tones—

"Yes, father; I—I thought he would come!"

Was he dreaming or awake? the young poet demanded of himself. Had this girl really rejected his love, or had he dreamt that she had? Of one thing only was he sure, that he would not leave her again without asking her the question. Come what might, he would hear his sentence from those sweet lips that very night!

Fortune favoured his resolve; for, after tea, Mr. Veriston, failing in his attempts to beguile his guest into one of his favourite discussions, went off to his study, and Cecil and Argent were left alone.

At first a constrained silence fell upon them. Then Cecil began abruptly, his voice sounding unnatural in his own ears—

"So you thought I should return, Miss Veriston! Are you glad to see me now I have come?"

"Yes," she answered, in something of her old brief manner, but blushing as she had never been wont to do.

"When I left you," he went on, growing bolder—"you remember, Argent, when you crushed me with the cold cruel words you spoke, I never meant, never thought of such a thing as returning or seeing your face again. My one idea was to forget you, and to pluck you from my heart!" He paused; but the girl made no reply, no movement even. "But I could not do it; I could not forget, Argent! I cannot live without you, I must have your love!" Then, seeing that she did not speak, he added, "What made you think that, in spite of your rejection, I should seek you again?"

By this time Cecil was on his knees before Argent's low chair. He had seized the two cold hands, totally oblivious of the Reverend Mr. Stene's supposed claims, and, scarcely conscious of what he did, he pressed them in his own until Argent's rings cut into the tender flesh. Cecil was looking up with intense passionate yearning into her blue witching eyes; for Argent's verdict meant life or death to him.

"Why did you think I should seek you again?" he demanded almost fiercely in his agony of suspense.

"It must have been," came at last well nigh inaudibly from the sweet lips which had grown pale while he spoke, "because—because I loved you, Cecil, all the time;" and the blushing girl hid her face on his shoulder.

In after years Cecil tried vainly to recall the ecstatic thrill which ran through him, almost agonising in its ecstasy, at this confession.

Little by little, Cecil won from Argent a confession of how his words, and his face, with its passion of love, haunted her. Everywhere she heard his voice, everywhere she saw his face; and, in his absence, in the silence which seemed so new to her, she had learned to love and long for his presence.

She had not been unhappy, she said; she had felt certain that he would return, that her love, by countless subtle influences, would draw him back to her.

"And you see, it has done so!"—smiling up at him as they sat together her head on his breast, too happy to give a thought to anything but their own experiences.

"Say rather it was my love for you," he answered, "which would not let me rest without you. Oh, my darling"—and he strained her to his breast with a convulsive movement—"nothing can separate us now, nothing can come between us any more! I must have you all my own soon—at once;" and he raised the blushing face and kissed the soft lips. "When will you give yourself wholly to my keeping, dearest?"

"It shall be when you will, Cecil," was the answer, in so low a tone that he could scarcely hear it.

CHAPTER IX.

It was Cecil Graham's wedding morning—a glorious glowing windless morning in July; for, on account of Mr. Veriston's illness, a tedious attack of gout, the wedding had been put off more than once. This had caused good Mrs. Mill so shake her head ominously and predict evil things to her gossips. However all had gone well; and the fateful day had arrived. The wedding was to be a quiet affair. There were to be no guests and no breakfast; the happy pair were merely going to walk down to Easthore Church, where the ceremony was to be quietly performed by the Reverend Maurice Stene.

Not even Madge Graham was to be present; for Cecil had determined to keep his marriage secret until it really was over, although his engagement was of course known. He wished to surprise his family as once before, but in very different circumstances, by the sight of his bride. He reflected with happy pride on the sensation her superlative loveliness would produce and the love she would be certain to inspire.

Once more Cecil was light-hearted, genial, and intensely, perfectly happy; no shadow from the evil past darkened the radiant glory of the present. All its hosts were laid to rest; not one reproachful spirit disturbed his slumbers in the silent night, and not one remorseful memory haunted his dreams, which were all of love, of joy, and of Argent!

And she? Day by day her soul and her intellect expanded in the sunshine which filled her innocent life. It seemed to the lovers as if every one, even Nature herself, rejoiced in their love. Never had there been so fresh and exquisite a spring, never so royally beautiful a summer; and now it was their wedding morning!

Argent was awake before the sun had risen. Not feeling the slightest inclination to sleep, she rose, threw the window wide open, and sat by it to watch heaven and earth "partake the sacrament of morning." A few early songsters were already on the wing, calling to each other from the dim fields and groves. A light breeze stirred the pink rose leaves that framed the casement and dashed the girl's fair hair with dew as she leaned out among them. A large white star, "the planet of love," shone in the east. Argent watched it fade on "a bed of daffodil sky," that grew brighter every moment. A few rosy clouds hung in the zenith; gradually these became yellow too, then white and lustrous. Presently the sun appeared above the distant sea, and rose grandly and silently in to the heavens. Another day was born. Joyous songs burst forth from the birds to hail its birth, the dew-drops flashed in the sunlight, and the dancing waves sparkled. A fair new day was born—Argent's wedding-day!

Suddenly an impulse came over her to visit all her old haunts once more, to bid farewell to the dear bowers of her childhood and girlhood, and to bear away with her a special memory of their beauty. The ceremony was to take place at nine o'clock. She would go now, and dress after breakfast. The white silk dress she was to wear hung in her wardrobe. She glanced at it lovingly, stroking its glistening folds with caressing fingers. There were her little bonnet, her veil, and her gloves—she smiled tenderly on them all. Then she put on the blue morning dress she had worn the day before, took her large sunshade and stole from the room. She went along the corridors and down the silent staircase; for no one but herself was stirring yet. She passed through the hall, on the floor of which the light from the stained glass fell in rich tints. Softly she opened and closed the heavy door and stood outside

"'The birthday of my life Is come; my love is come to me,'" sang Argent, as she passed through the garden with its dewy leaves and awakening flowers.

Argent felt like a glad child—life seemed so fresh and so joyous. Her heart bounded with gladness, and her feet were as light as her heart; she could not help singing, emulating the lark which revelled overhead. Crossing the park and making brief visits to all the places she held dear, she reached at length the dearest place of all—the mere.

It lay before her in still radiant beauty, with here and there patches of dark leaves, snow-white lily cups rocking in delicious coolness on its azure besom. Lost in happy reverie, Argent stood on the flowery brink among the harebells and irises, gazing over the serene expanse. How solitary, how empty, save for Nature's loveliness, her life had once been! How full of pleasure and love it was now!

"Thank Heaven!" said the girl reverently from the depths of her grateful heart, raising her eyes to the untroubled sky.

A moment longer she stood; then her eyes rested on her boat. Yes, she would float once more alone on her beloved mere; she would have one more row on its inviting surface. Loosening the little skiff, she took her place, and, with a few swift strokes, was "floating in heaven," as she had once termed it. Then she let the sculls drop, and they trailed along with opalescent bubbles in their wake as she floated in luxurious idleness, drinking in with rapt eyes the loveliness of the scene, thinking happy thoughts of love and of the future that had dawned for her with this exquisite summer.

"I will have a bouquet of lilies," she murmured presently. "I will wear my favourite flowers at my wedding. Cecil loves them! he said yesterday," smiling, though alone, at the recollection, "that they were like me when he first knew and loved me—sunk in enchanted dreams, white, calm, and pure! Oh, foolish dear Cecil, to weave such poetical fancies round me!"

The silent sapphire mirror below showed her a lovely blushing face, its tender eyes and tremulous lips smiling up at her, its golden hair falling round it like a cloud, as she stooped over to gather the floating waxen lilies.

* * * * * * *

"Wish me joy, Mrs. Mill," said Cecil Graham, who, having just despatched his breakfast, stood before the little square mirror that adorned his chimney-piece, fastening a white rose-bud in his coat.

He had had a restless night, disturbed by miserable dreams. The face—not of his fair young bride, but of his injured and guilty wife—had haunted him through the hours of darkness, sometimes smiling and childishly gay, sometimes pale and wild as when she left him on the balcony the last time he saw her in life, sometimes dead and cold with a deep gash across its gray pallor. Thus it haunted him, and her voice—merry, reproachful, revengeful by turns—rang in his affrighted ears. Altogether he had been ill-treated by imagination, and he had awakened with throbbing head and weary eyes, strangely depressed and melancholy. However, a cold bath, the lovely morning, and more pleasant waking thoughts had brought him back to his normal state of health and spirits, and no dark memory of the midnight's trouble dimmed the brightness of eyes and smile as he bade his landlady wish him joy.

"That I does, sir," responded Mrs. Mill, who had replaced her black dress by the old festive flowered silk—for after all no sorrow could bring back the dead to life; and Miss Veriston, she thought, was a more suitable bride for the well-bred young poet than simple countrified Nellie. "'Appy is the bride as the sun shines on, and sure enough the sun'll shine on ye both this day. As my William say, any this minute, it's a good hemen, and he's a rare one for knowin', is William, though a bad one to speak."

"Well, I hope he's right this time," said Cecil, laughing gaily; "but how slowly the time passes! "I'll take a turn or two in the garden by way of keeping up my spirits, you know."

"Mrs. Mill joined in his laugh, but finally turned away with a sigh from the contemplation of his tall figure as he strolled along, whistling blithely.

"How soon the dead are out o' mind!" she mused, with half a sigh, as she went to see after her baking. "Poor Nellie!"

* * * * * * *

Twilight solemn and serene—warm, balmly summer twilight, adorned with a crescent moon and "one star its chrysolite," with innumerable soft mysterious sounds announcing the advent of night. The golden hours of the day had passed one by one, the birds' songs were hushed, the lilies closed, the dew falling, and Evening had set her dusky seal upon Cecil Graham's wedding-day.

Tranquil and beautiful as ever, the mere lay beneath the purple sky, one thin line of silver wavering over it cast by the sinking moon. Beautiful as ever the flower-wreathed walls of the Mere House rose among the trees, a faint cloud of blue smoke rising from one of the chimneys, lights glimmering here and there through the mullioned panes—a fair picture indeed of home and peace!

The bed-room belonging to Argent was a small pretty room facing the east. The walls were delicately tinted, and the hangings all of white and silver. A box of mignonnette on the sill scented the whole apartment, and climbing roses bordered the window. A few photographs and statuettes were the ornaments of this maiden bower—a room, as her adoring lover would have said, quite characteristic of its occupant—"white, pure, and calm."

"It was not empty now; for, on the little bed, with its snowy draperies, Argent lay asleep. Over the silken coverlet her hair, smooth and shining, trailed its amber curls. A faint sweet smile was on the mouth, so softly closed, and the eyelids rested on the pale cheeks. Ah, very fast asleep she was! For even Cecil could not wake her, though but an hour since he had called—first, in love's own persuasive accents, then in agony that was almost frenzy—her name.

"Argent, Argent! Oh, love, love, speak to me once more—only once more—one word to keep my heart from breaking!" But still she slept unmoved—slept and smiled!

* * * * * * *

Cecil is alone with his bride. Worn out with his wild grief, worn out with the love whose depths he has not even begun to fathom, he kneels by the motionless form of his lost love. His eyes rest on one of her cold hands, hidden in the white folds of the robe she wears. His breast heaves with a painful effort, and now and then a convulsive shudder shakes him from head to feet.

The bitterness of death, like a tide, is rising ever higher and higher round his shrinking spirit. Truly his sin has found him out! Truly Nellie is amply avenged!

Leaning over for the lilies, the poor girl must have capsized the frail boat, and, with none to hear her despairing cries, none to aid, she had sunk beneath the laughing waters, like fair-haired mad Ophelia—to "muddy death." A lily, with its long stem and large dark leaves, was found tightly clutched in one of her hands—the worthless flower for which she had given her glad young life! Instead of the lovely living bride who was to have met him at the altar, this dead, drowned form was put into the bridegroom's arms—unloving and unresponsive, whose gentle soul had passed beyond his mortal reach for ever.

* * * * * * *

Cecil has looked upon his past life with eyes from which the scales have fallen. At one stroke all has been torn from him—hope, love, and joy; and, smitten to the heart, all his "refuge of lies" in ruins around him, in the presence of Death, with bitter groans and scalding tears, he has acknowledged in the furnace which yet shall purify his erring soul that his unutterable woe which has overtaken him is indeed a righteous retribution.

[THE END.]

No man knows the state of another; it is always of some more or less imaginary man that the wisest and most honest is speaking, therefore we should be careful of what we say.

IMPORTANT IMPROVEMENT.—Messrs. James and Samuel Wiley, of the 7th line Euphrasia, have purchased from Kennedy & Sons, of Owen Sound, new machinery throughout for their saw mill. The water wheel, one of Kennedy's celebrated Turbin's, passed through Markdale last Saturday; it weighs 2,800 lbs. They are building new flume, bulk-head and waste-gate and expect to have the new mill running by the 1st Sept. This mill has done an extensive business, and very satisfactory to the public; and its proprietors, being men of sterling worth and commendable push, will now be in a position to greatly excel all former efforts. They have sold the old machinery, which has been shipped via Meaford to Manitoulin Island.

Reasons why you should purchase Fluid Lightning in preference to all other remedies are Rapid result—cures instantly. It is easily applied—no trouble—no lost time. It dose not require constant use—one application is effectual. One bottle will remove more pain than any other remedy in existence Try it for Neuralgia, Toothache, Headache, Theumatism. Sold at 25c. a bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale. 3

AN EXTRA PASSENGER.—The Athabasca on her last trip down had the honor of an interesting event which does not often happen on lake steamers. Mrs. Yellowlees, formerly of Bowmanville, but lately residing with her husband in Manitoba, was on her way to visit her friends at Bomanville, but on Sunday night gave birth to a fine boy. Though the interesting event was unexpected, the officers of the Athabasca were equal to the occasion. Capt. Foote as the father of a family felt quite at home, while Purser Chapman promptly decided not to collect fair from the extra passenger, and Steward Fleck made every provision for the comfort of the mother and son. The young mariner and his mother are both doing well, and on Tuesday Rev. Mr. Somerville baptized the new arrival by the name of "Herbert Athabasca."—[Owen Sound Times.

ONTARIO INSTITUTION FOR THE BLIND.—The Institution for the Blind at Brantford reopens for its next session on the first of Sept., and as there are always a number of pupils graduating at each vacation, applications to the Principal for the admission of new comers are now doubtless in order. Considering the almost utter helplessness and dependence of an uninstructed blind person in after life, no arguments should be needed to induce all who have blind children under their care to avail of this opportunity of obtaining for them a through education with instruction according to the pupil's capacity, in music, in industrial work, and, in fact, in everything by which the blind may be made useful and happy. When, too, it is remembered that board and education are provided for by a legislative grant and so cost the friend of pupils Not one cent., the last shadow of an excuse is removed for keeping a blind child at home in idleness and thus losing a golden opportunity for acquiring inestimable permanent benefits. We strongly advise all who are interested in this matter to communicate at once with Principal Dymond who is always ready to give full information to inquiries. It may be as well to mention that the Institution, is not for those who are totally blind only, but for all young persons residing in Ontario between seven and twenty-one years of age who, by reason of impaired or defective vision are unable to be educated at the public schools.

Thousands of lives saved annually by the use of West's Pain King, the household remedy for chills, colds, flux, summer complaint, dysentry, colic and cholera. Only 25 cents. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Druggists.

MR. JENKINS of the Chronicle appears lost for a weapon with which to assail, and drawing on his imagination, (his native element) writes thusly in last week's paper, "Rutledge is the only editor who ever squealed about us getting subscribers in his own village or town." We have indeed heard some "squealing," but it had been those who had been misled into subscribing for the Chronicle. They say, when Jenkins tackles a man for a subscription it is worth a dollar to get rid of him, and thus they are led against their will to take the unpalatable and unwholesome sheet; and yet its editor is so reckless as to affirm under oath that he does not use any special means to increase its circulation (he probably serves all alike, and thus it is not special). It's a deplorable misfortune for the community that the management of a newspaper should fall into such hands; and after all, he is a subject of pity, owing to mental deficiencies and constitutional weakness, over which he seems to have no control, bringing upon himself the ill-will of the community in general and his superiors in particular. For our own part, we have no reason whatever to "squeal," and if we had a respectable rival at the helm of the Chronicle, or even in our own village, we would be the last to whine; we are not that kind by any means.

How to Make Money.

BY CHARLES BERNARD.

In looking at this matter of earning money we find the people who succeed are in love with their work. They are in earnest, glad to do it, and take pride in doing it well, and it does not make much difference what the work may be. Their work pays because it meets a human want, and they supply the want in the best manner. People want to eat. Here is a human want. Why not supply it?"

This talk is for girls and one says,

"Oh, you mean cooking. I couldn't do it. It's servant's work!"

All right, my girl. It is not fine hands and dainty ways that make the lady, neither is it housework that makes the servant. Many a real lady wears a housemaid's cap. Many a woman in a carriage wishes she could hide her mean and narrow character as easily as she hides her pudgy hands in kid gloves. If you were a lady you would be well educated in housework and be a first-rate cook, whether you made your own coffee for breakfast or not.

There was once near New York a true lady. She had everything she could wish: a home, a good education, refined manners, and wealth, and she was a lovely and lovable woman. One day her wealth flew away. What did she do? Sit down in idleness, upbraid Heaven for its cruelty, or suffer the disgrace of depending on others? Not at all. She looked about to see what she could do. In her days of prosperity her guests often spoke with enthusiasm of her lovely —pickles. Here was a human want. People want pickles. There are pickle factories everywhere, pickles of every kind in the stores, and every good housekeeper can make her own.

What is the use of making more pickles? She did not stop to ask this foolish question. She said,

"I will make better pickles than any to be bought in the stores. I will make such extra fine pickles that housekeepers will buy mine in preference to making their own at home. I will make the best pickles ever placed on any table.

Here was a sensible ambition, a clear good common sense view of the business. She rolled up her sleeves and with her own fair hands went to work and made a lot of pickles, put them up in glass jars, and put her own initials on the labels. She took pride in her work, and did not hesitate to tell people she made them herself, and that they were good honest, pickles. As a natural result she sold a few bottles.

People bought them out of curiosity, just to see if they were really so very fine. It was true. They were prime. They told their friends, and people began to send for more and more. She had succeeded. She had established a business, and in a short time her profits amounted to over $10,000 a year.

Naturally enough, other women and girls read of her wonderful success, and how many hundreds are trying to do the same thing. Here is a regular home business for girls—home-cooking, pickle-making, cake-making, putting up preserves and fruits, preparing choice dishes and salads. Naturally the more sensible girls will here ask if the business is not being overdone. Are not so many trying to sell pickles and cakes?

No, because while many try the entire product is consumed at some price every year, and as long as people live they must eat. A certain proportion fails because they do poor work and you must know the business.

Everybody knows your blackberry jam. It is the finest jam in town. Many a lady at your mother's table says she wishes she had the receipt. Don't tell her. It is your trade secret. It means bread and butter to you, if she wants that particular blackberry jam, let her buy it of you—business is business. You mean to base your hopes on blackberry jam. How shall you do it? Of course, nobody can tell you how to make it. We all know you can make it better than any one else. The thing to consider now is the business of selling blackberry jam.

The first thing you need is a trade mark. The jam is to be put up in glass jars. You must go to some wholesale glass dealer and select a particular style of jar. Get a good jar of convenient size and shape. Select two sizes, a quart jar and a pint jar, and have them carefully measured to be sure they really hold a quart and a pint, and a little more. Start right here to give good honest measure, for you may be sure, if you give scant measure, people will some day find it out and then you will wonder why they buy no more jam. Having settled on the jars, find out if you can always have that particular jar, and then use no other. The jar is to be one of your trade marks, so that when people once see that jar they will know it contains your especial blackberry jam.

Next go to the printer and get a neat label with your full name and address, and plainly showing just what is in the jar—"one full pint (or quart) blackberry jam." This particular style of jar and label is your trade-mark, whereby your work is known and sold and if you register your trade-mark the law will protect you in it.

All this supposes you mean business. If you are only making the jam just to sell a few bottles to your friends to get a little pocket money, it does not matter what bottles you use, because in a year your trade will be as dead as a door nail. In fact, if you are only going to play with the business just for one summer, and if you are just a little ashamed of the work and only do it to get some money, you will be surprised to find how quickly the whole business will collapse and leave you with only a lot of old jars and a heart full of mortification.

You are in earnest, you mean business. Blackberries are ripe, and you are buying the best berries to be found, and put them up in that neat and tasteful manner we know so well.

The weeks pass quickly, and there they stand, a gross and a half of pints and quarts all exactly alike, neatly labeled and looking tempting enough. You have kept correct accounts and you find they cost just $42 for the gross of quarts and $10.50 for the half gross of pints, or $52.50 for the lot, including jars, labels, and materials, but not labor. On such a small venture you ought to double your money or very nearly so, for you have yet to pay for the advertising.

Now, how to get rid of your jam. Of course you have given a few bottles to your friends, and they have told you how delicious it is, and you have had many orders for it, but you must not depend on your friends. You must sell to the general public. To do this there is only one thing to be done—advertise. If you live in a small place but a short card in the local newspaper, with a plain statement that you have superior home-made blackberry jam for sale. Give the price and say you will deliver the jars, neatly packed, at any house in town free. If orders come in, of course, you can easily hire a boy to deliver the goods. Insist on the cash. This is business. You mean business and expect business-like treatment. If you respect your work, people will respect you.

Another way to advertise is to have a neat circular printed, and to mail a copy to all the people who you think use jam, but do not throw the circulars away by sending them to people who do not use blackberry jam. Use common sense in the matter.

With a little enterprise a smart girl like you ought to sell the eighteen dozen jars in the course of a month or two. The plan works. You find you can make jam and with a little effort dispose of it at fair prices. Now, do not think for a moment this selling to friends can be continued. They will buy more next year, but you must double your sales and sell to the general public. Get ready for the season in the winter and spring. Keep a few of the jars for samples, and begin to advertise that you will take orders for next season's jam. By this means you will get an idea of about how many dozen you can sell and can lay your plans accordingly.

Above all, stick to the jam. Do not branch off into into pickles or other preserves. It has cost you to establish your reputation for jam, and you must now use the benefit of the reputation. Do not try to cheapen the jam. Make it just as good as last year, and, if possible, a little better. Here is a business, and she who can may succeed in it. Those who try and fail have always themselves to blame.

It is not good jam, or it is poorly packed, or the jars are dirty, or not mates, or some other little point has been neglected, and your buyers go off to find another girl who can do better. There is no friendship in the matter, for business is business.

Not of a Practical Kind.

"Ah," said the Summer tourist, leaning over the fence and addressing the farmer, "may I make bold to inquire what that great quantity of green vegetation over there is?"

"Cert'nly, mister; that's corn."

"Ah, thanks. And those large animals ever beyond the fence, they are, er—"

"Cows, my friend, every one of 'em cows. Say, you don't seem to be very well posted on these 'ere things."

"Perhaps not. The fact is, my business has kept me so closely confined that this is the first chance I've had to get out in the country."

"Running a bank or something like that?"

"No, sir, I am editor of an agricultural paper. I have held that position for thirty years."

Famine Among Fishermen.

The greatest suffering imaginable prevails along the northern coasts of Newfoundland. So far 150 persons have died of starvation, while fully 2,500 are on its verge. There are still no signs of the ice breaking up for 300 or 400 miles. Relief from the Government will be afforded. In one settlement of 42 persons 24 died during June. In another village of 16 families, comprising 53 persons, 11 have died from cold and destitution, while in another of twelve families, consisting of 72 persons, 32 have died.

The Hon. A. F. Widdell of the Newfoundland Government has arrived at Ottawa for the purpose of interviewing the Government as to extending aid to the starving fishermen on the coast of Newfoundland and Labrador. Mr. Widdell tells an agonizing tale as to the prevalent local distress, owing to there being no fishing through the ice not breaking up. Winter sets in in October, and the outlook for the poor people is terrible if ready aid is not forthcoming.

A Knight of the Bath.

It is proposed in Canada that our distinguished and enterprising Staten Island millionaire shall be knighted as a token of Canadian recognition for the benefits he has conferred upon the Dominion. It is a fit idea, though, of course, we Yankees and Democrats would not think any better of him because of his aristocratic title. But Sir Erastus Wiman would sound finely, and when Canada comes to be annexed, he would get the right to be elected President, all the same as though he had been born south of the line. Have the Canadians ever thought of that in their political speculations?—N. Y. Sun

Alfred N. Marcus, a Boston diamond merchant, lost a package of diamonds worth $5,000 in the Tremont House on July 2. The Rev. O. W. Scott, of Greenwich, R. I., found the gems, and was, as he says, "so dumfounded that he kept them three days." Then he determined to find the owner, but, fearful of being arrested for theft, advertised under a false name. Mr. Marcus went to Greenwich, but of course was not able to find a man bearing the name given. Then he went to the newspaper office, got the manuscript of the advertisement, compared it with the handwriting in the Tremont House register, and decided that it was written by Mr. Scott. He communicated with the clergyman, who at once went to Boston with the diamonds and turned them over to Mr. Marcus. Mr. Marcus gave the minister and his wife each a silver watch and $100.

THE BRITISH EMPIRE.

The recent opening of the Colonial and Indian Exhibition is made the occasion by the London Times of an interesting account of the growth of the colonial empire of Great Britain. The following is the substance of the article:—This unparalleled empire began hesitatingly some 300 years ago, with a precarious footing on an area of 40,000 square miles, amid a population of savages; it culminated to-day with an area of 9,000,000 square miles and a population, including feudatories, of something like 270,000,000, one-seventh of the land surface of the globe and one sixth of its inhabitants, and that excluding the mother country. Let us endeavor briefly to recall the growth of this world-wide empire.

ENGLAND HERSELF ORIGINALLY A COLONY.

We need not begin our story with the remarkable colonization enterprises of Phœnicians, Greeks and Romans, nor need we even occupy space with contrasting the mediæval trading stations established by Venice in the Mediterranean and its offshoots, with the colonies of the last 400 years. England itself was for three centuries a Roman colony, and an important and stirring one, having, however, more analogy with India than with Canada or Australia. English Britain, if we may use the term, began as a colony, but a colony of the true English type; the emigrants who came with Hengist and Horsa from the Elbe and the Weser came to find a new home and remain in it. With more or less indiscriminate slaughter of the aborigines, a method which has been only too faithfully followed by their successors, they cleared the country and built their homestead and founded their cities. For more than a thousand years did these Teuton colonists go on developing the resources of their island home, receiving fresh and vigorous additions, always of essentially the same stock, before they began to look out westwards and southwards for fresh islands and other continents to harry and to settle and to nourish powerful states.

TARDY BEGINNINGS OF CONQUEST.

The Portuguese and Spaniards, and even the French, were in the field long before England. Spain had a settlement in Dominica as early as 1493, and Vaco de Gama reached India in 1483. Within very few years India and South America had their Portuguese and Spanish viceroys. In 1534 Jacques Cartier made his famous voyage up the country in the name of the French sovereign. True, Cabot discovered Newfoundland and the main land of North America in 1497, but he, like other early western navigators, simply regarded the new world as a barrier on the way to India. It was this latter land of fabulous riches that was the goal of the infant naval enterprise of England for many years after Cabot's discovery. The Portuguese monopolized the routes by the southern seas, and England had not yet a navy to cope with its rival. The first effective English settlement on the island cannot be dated earlier than 1623, long before which Virginia had been planted and Jamestown founded. True, in 1580 the British flag was planted in the West India island of Tobago, but that island was not effectively occupied by England till 1703. Meantime, some roving Englishmen had in 1605 planted a crew in Barbados inscribed "James, king of England and of this island," though there was no actual settlement till 1624 Barbados is one of the two or three British West India islands that never changed hands. After all, however, Bermuda may fairly claim to be considered the earliest of existing English colonies, and it was colonized both from Virginia and England shortly after 1609 But later during the seventeenth century the growth of our colonial possessions was slow, if we except the New England States and the settlements on the east American coast to the south. Leaving these last out of view, as they no longer belong to us, our colonies at the close of the century were few and scattered compared with the enormous territories which Portugal and Spain, France and Holland, were endeavoring to drain of their wealth.

TWO HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

At the end of the seventeenth century, besides Newfoundland and Bermudas, and a few factories on the West African coast and in India, of the present colonial empire we had possession, more or less stable, of Jamaica, Barbados, St. Christopher's Nevis, Turk's Island, Antigua, Montserrat, Anguilla, Virgin island, Bahamas and St. Helena out in the Atlantic. The total area of these did not much exceed 60,000 square miles, for our African and Indian settlements, were little more than stations. Even if we added such parts of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick as were not occupied by France, the total area could scarcely be more than 80,000 square miles. During the first half of the eighteenth century, if we except the confirmation to Great Britain of the ten North American colonies just mentioned, and one or two of the West India islands already included, the only acquisition of importance as a foreign possession was Gibraltar (1704), and that not as a colony but as a strategical station. A period of comparative quiescence prevailed during these fifty years previous to the outbreak of the great and long-continued struggle between England and France for supremacy on the seas, if not on land.

THE PERIOD OF THE FRENCH WARS.

During the last forty years of the eighteenth century, on the other hand the broad foundations of England's Empire beyond the seas were firmly laid; subsequent operations have mainly been in the way of development and consolidation. The great struggle between England and France for supremacy beyond Europe may be said to have begun simultaneously in India and Canada. On the latter field it resulted in the capitulation of Quebec in 1759, followed four years later by the cession of the whole of Canada; so that England was virtually mistress of the whole of North America. In 1776 the Declaration of Independence was signed, and in 1783 England had to resign herself to the loss of by far the most valuable half of her dominions in America. The extent of our loss may be estimated from the fact that our trade with the United States is equal to the total of our colonial trade, leaving India out of account, and amounts to one-third of our entire foreign commerce. With such a fact before us, can we regard the independence of the states as really a loss after all? In the same year as Canada became an English possession the Islands of Dominica, Grenada, St. Vincent and Tobago were added to our West India possessions, followed in 1797 by the surrender of Trinidad to Abercrombie by the Spaniards. Although Commodore Byron took possession of the Falkland islands in 1765, no effective establishment was formed there til 1833. In 1783-6 British Honduras was acquired by treaties; in 1787 Sierra Leone was ceded by the native chiefs; while in 1788, not quite a century ago, the not very promising foundation of the great Australian group of colonies was laid by the establishment of a small convict station at Botany Bay. Turning to the East we find Malacca captured from the Dutch in 1795, though it did not finally become English till 1823. Penang was colonized in 1785, and province Wellesley in 1798 Much more important was the capture of Ceylon from the same once supreme colonial power in 1796 The battle of Plassey was fought in 1757, and within about half a century thereafter, through the genius of Clive and Hastings and Wellesley, English supremacy was virtually established, directly or indirectly, over a great part of the Indian peninsula. Bengal was ceded in 1765, and Madras conquered in 1792 1800, having between them an area estimated at 290 000 square miles, and a population of 55,000,000.

THE LION'S PAW STILL STRETCHED OUT.

Thus, then, during the latter half of the eighteenth century we had succeeded in rapidly increasing our foreign possessions by something like 6,500,000 square miles, reckoning the whole of Australia as virtually annexed. During the present century we have been able to increase this area by about one-third, half of it, at least, in India. While, during the last eighty-six years, we have been extending and confirming our hold over India, and while we have acquired one or two really important additions to our colonial possessions, it will be seen, as we have said, that our chief work has been to develop and consolidate the acquisitions of the latter half of the eighteenth century. In 1806 the Dutch were compelled to hand over to us their possessions in South Africa, which by the formation of the Natal colony in 1838, and other subsequent annexations, have been extended far beyond their original boundaries. In 1807 we captured the tiny islet of Heligoland, and three years later, 1810, Mauritius capitulated, our possession of the island being confirmed by the Treaty of Paris, 1814. A year later, 1815, we acquired the Ionian Islands by treaty, only to give them to Greece some fifty years after, and in the same year we established our naval station in Ascension. We all remember the excitement over the occupation of Cyprus in 1878

IN OUR OWN TIMES

The British North Borneo company was incorporated by royal charter in 1881. We have hardly yet recovered from the excitement of raising the British flag over Southern New Guinea, the Niger mouths, and Bechuana land in 1883, while at this very moment our soldiers and our civil servants are busy getting into working order the extensive territory of Upper Burmah, proclaimed English on the first day of the present year. This last annexation, however, belongs rather to the record of our dominion in India, which has advanced so rapidly that the 200,000 square miles, and the 55,000,000 inhabitants of 1800 have grown to something like 1,500,000 square miles and 280,600,000 of a population. Thus, then, while the beginnings of the greatest colonial empire on record go back some 300 years, by far the greater portion of our foreign possessions have been acquired during the last 120 years. The statesmen under whom this great and widely scattered empire was acquired and built up never entertained a doubt as to the necessity of England, if she was to maintain her position among the nations, in taking this method of upholding her naval supremacy, of securing her influence in every quarter of the globe, of finding outlets for her rapidly increasing population, and of keeping all rivals out of the field. Of the nine millions or so of square miles over which our empire beyond the sea extends, something like six and a half millions are in the main perfectly suited for European colonization.

PRODUCTS OF THE EMPIRE.

Compare our foreign possessions with those of any other colonial power—France, Spain, Portugal, Holland, and even Germany. Of the possessions of all these countries, French Algeria and perhaps New Caledonia are the only ones in which acclimation for the European is at all possible. Nearly every product which the earth is capable of yielding we can obtain in abundance within the borders of our own possessions. At home we still have plenty of coal and iron; Canada, Australia, New Zealand, India, can send us ample stores of every variety of grain; animal products of all kinds Canada, Australia, and the Cape can supply in abundance; tea, coffee, sugar, cotton, and other tropical and subtropical products we can draw from both the old and the new world; of gold there is still no lack; the tin mines of Tasmania are already famous, and both copper and tin are profitable products of New South Wales; we have diamond mines in South Africa; the wines of Australia and the Cape figure prominently in the exhibition. Should our manufactures be paralyzed, Canada might supply us with blankets and pianos, New Zealand with tweeds, Victoria with carriages, New South Wales with shoes, India and Malta with jewelry.

The methods by which England has gained for herself this enviable position among the nations of the earth have been essentially the same as those by which our ancestors gained a footing in our island home, which they have raised to the proud position of a mother of nations. As a matter of fact, keeping India out of view, about one half (3,800,000 square miles) of our colonial possessions have been obtained by legitimate capture or compulsory cession; the other half by settlement or peaceful annexation. Under the former category we may fairly include the greater part of our Indian empire; and of our great colonies, Canada, the Cape, Ceylon, Burmah and British Guinea were obtained in fair fight. On the other hand, Australia, New Zealand, Tasmania, Fiji, Natal, Newfoundland and New Guinea were simply annexed with or without the express permission of the natives. Whether the methods by which we have acquired our great possessions were legitimate or illegitimate in every case we do not care to inquire at this moment. For the present it is enough for us that we have inherited them, and mean to keep them and make the most of them.

THE QUEEN'S JUBILEE.

Changes in Her People Since Her Accession —What Does She Think of Them?

The Queen's jubilee year has commenced, and everybody is writing about the wonderful events of her long reign—the period, perhaps, in all history most distinctly marked in advance in man's long effort alike to understand and to subdue the opposing forces of Nature—and the changes which she has witnessed in the world and at home. That is natural enough; but such writing is only history, and history based on very imperfect materials, and it would be much more interesting to know, if etiquette would permit Her Majesty to tell us frankly what she thought on the subject herself. How does her own reign, as she looks back on it, slightly wearied with years, burdened with experiences, and educated by contact with many first-class minds appear to Queen Victoria? She very likely does not regard it exactly from the historian's point of view; indeed, she cannot, for she in her own thoughts, must be more of than she would seem to any chronicler, however courtly. If the world be on fire, kings think, as private men think when a city burns of what they themselves have lost by the great conflagration. Reigning is a profession like another, the fact that the King inherits his place and his duties being one common to him and to great landlords, great bankers, great brewers, and owners of great shops. The Queen as she reflects upon the past, must in the first instance regard it with a professional eye, and from that point of view she must look upon herself as on the whole a successful woman. She has gained much and lost little—nothing, indeed, of value. Constitutional royalty has suffered nothing in her hands. She has decidedly raised the character of that branch of the kingly profession in the world's eyes, has made mankind think it more instead of less beneficial and effective, and has indefinitely increased their readiness to entrust it to women's charge. The long duration of her reign has increased the general sense of the stability of the system, as have also its freedom from great blunders and the general, though not complete, contentment of her subjects.

A PIVOT TO THE HISTORY OF THE EMPIRE

For half a century a Queen has ruled successfully over a great people, through a Parliament freely elected by her subjects, and successive Ministers whom they have chosen —that is,

A GREAT FEAT, OUTWEIGHING THE WAIGHTIEST

or the wittiest theoretical indictment of constitutional monarchy. Nor is there any public evidence that the constitutional plan of government, odd and cumbrous as it seems to the philosopher, is drawing to a close. The Queen may see signs of change that her subjects do not, symptoms of growing resistance, evidences of declining respect for the throne, indications that the props which supported it are becoming unsteady; but most observers, we think, would agree in considering the English monarchy safer than in 1837. An abstract liking for Republicanism may have increased, and undoubtedly the desire to keep the throne in the background has developed itself and become more conscious; but the popular dislike of royalty has died away, and with it an antipathy, keenly felt in many quarters down to 1837, for the particular dynasty. The Queen has never been "of Hanover," and has never been considered by her people anything but entirely English; and that has been a cause of popularity. Her Majesty, looking back on old memories, can hardly think otherwise than that; though it would be mightily interesting to hear her own view of the position of the throne in 1837 and 1886. She may have had direct powers in her earlier life, in the way of patronage for example, which have slowly slipped away; she may have been less afraid of Parliament when the true people was so completely outside it; and she may feel that the separate volition of her ministers has grown stronger and more enchaining than it was when the sailor-King used to fume and swear. We do not think it has been so, for a certain awe of the Queen has grown upon the men who come much in contact with her: but only Her Majesty can tell exactly what of change there has been.

Zigzag Morality.

It is of no avail to shake your head, for I propose to show you in this brief article, that zigzag morality will apply admirably, to the occasional acute curves in the line of conduct of certain individuals inhabiting this mundane sphere.

Many persons of observant habits, must have noticed that there does exist a class of men who possess a double character; or the power, when abroad, to metamorphose the morality which we have become accustomed at home, to associate with their names. They are much like bats. We sometimes mistake them for what they are not, but what they seem.

Some so-called respectable persons, at home are paragons of all that merits imitation, in a moral sense; but away from home, they present to view a widely different picture. Look at the moral married man suddenly summoned to the city to attend to particular business. Forgetting home restraints and his influence there, he rushes into a "lark" that would shock his trusting wife and tender children could they but see. Of course, he does not neglect his business. It is merely a recreation after business hours, you understand. Then he goes home so refreshed, or, on the other hand, worn out with business cares. Little does his patient wife know the true cause of that frown on her husband's brow, is due to a loss at a game of pool and not to business perplexities at all.

"What a delightful existence it is, Farmer Robinson," said his city guest. "out here in the country. How crisp and beautiful the air, and the fragrance of new mown hay pervades all. I should think you would feel like chanting pæans of praise to the Creator the year round." "It is sort o' nice, miss, I grant. But I never feel quite so much like thanking Heaven, as I do when I've scrimmaged about an' got money enough together to pay the taxes."

A Visit to the King of Abyssinia.

Capt. Harrison Smith, Paymaster, R. N., was sent by her Majesty's Government to the King of Abyssinia to present to him a letter and sword of honor from her Majesty the Queen. On April 10, says the Captain, we arrived suddenly in sight of the King's camp and Lake Ashangi. As we neared the camp we were met by the soldier whom I had sent on. He brought a message from the King. The King requested me to come at once to him. The soldier added that the King had threatened to punish him should he fail to bring me into camp that evening; but he begged me to wait a few minutes, till an escort of 200 men should arrive to accompany me. The officer commanding the escort informed me that they had been ordered to conduct me directly to the King.

I was obliged to change clothes on the road, unpack the letters from her Majesty and Lord S. and the swords for the King and his son. These proceedings entertained the soldiers greatly. The soldiers took up a sort of formation in the centre of which I and the persons who were instructed to carry the presents rode. Thus we crossed a plain, and then climbed the hill on which the King is building a new palace. There I was the beholden of many hundreds, having dismounted and walked to the door of the cokel roofed building in which his Majesty was seated.

About to enter I was abruptly stopped, because at the last moment the King had sent for a chair, which had not yet arrived. The chair was brought and placed with its back against the pole which supports the roof in the centre, and exactly facing the King. As usual he was seated on an angerib (a kind of bedstead), supported on either side by a large cushion. On my entering he extended his arm to its full length, and received me in the most cordial manner with his shamma nearly down to his waist.

At first I thought he was beckoning me to a chair, to which his outstretched hand was pointing, but I soon perceived his meaning, and having taken his hand and bowed, I presented her Majesty's letter, enveloped in an imposing embroidered cover which I had brought from Cairo, and which appropriately had a gold lion resembling the King's seal worked in the centre. Then I laid before the King the sword in its case with the lid opened, and afterward the sword for his son, Ras Aria Telassie. At the conclusion of the brief announcement with which I accompanied each presentation the King bowed and expressed thanks. He then said he had ordered a camp to be prepared for me, and that I must go and rest. I found a large but very thin tent pitched, and furnished with an angerib covered with a carpet and having the two usual cushions. Other carpets were laid on the ground, and for some time I sat in state till my escort was marched off, and I was left only with the small guard.

In the evening presents of goods, consisting of a cow, bread, ghee, tedge. (liquor made from honey), red pepper, fireweed, and fireplaces, and a spoon for my use arrived, and were continued regularly during my stay.

On April 15 the King came. He wanted to know why duties were imposed. I replied that his merchants had never requested that they (the duties) might be remitted.

On the 19th I called on the King at 7 A. M. Talked, and wrote an addition to the letter for the Queen. Then was taken out, and arrayed with a shirt and trousers. I do not mean that at the time I were neither of these useful articles, but these were special garments of honor. I was also presented with a lion's mane, the King's own mare, a horse, a mule, 21 spears, and a shield. At 11 20 we got on the march, and kept till 5 40, when we reached our old camp near Bebbah.

SHE EXHUMED HER LOVER.

He Comes to Life, but is for a Time Insane.

Herman Krause and Anna Eeschenbach, each of whom was born in the little German town of Friederichsaw, on the Rhine about thirty-eight years ago, and whose peculiar outfit and small acquaintance with the English language indicated that they were strangers in America were married the other day, by Mayor Whitney in his office in the City Hall, Brooklyn. The Mayor and Secretary Phillips each kissed the bride and wished the couple all kinds of prosperity. It was not until after they had gone that the Mayor learned that the marriage was the climax of a long and romantic attachment. The story is that Herman and Anna when a boy and a girl together in the little town on the Rhine, had fallen in love. When the France-German war broke out Herman became a soldier, and Anna, with equal patriotism, accompanied his corps as a nurse in one of the Red Cross hospital wagons. Early in the campaign Herman, with a score of his comrades, were mown down by a French shell, and being supposed to be dead he was buried with others in a trench. During the night Anna went to the trench and dug up the body of her supposed dead lover. To her surprise he showed signs of life. He was sent to the hospital and he recovered. Anna's grief, however, was intense when she was informed that an injury to his skull was of such a nature that he could never recover his reason.

Years rolled on, Krause remaining in a military hospital and Anna in her native village. Her father had meanwhile come to this country, and nearly two years ago, in despair of ever seeing Krause restored to reason, she joined him in Brooklyn. Last fall a German physician succeeded in performing an operation on Krause's skull, which brought it back to its normal condition, and this restored his reason. He then thought of the girl who had followed him to the war and saved his life, and he never rested until he found her in this country.

The marriage followed as a matter of course. Mayor Whitney, who believes the story, says it is not more improbable than other tales of love and war which he has heard.

A man went into a saloon under the influence of liquor and asked a prominent politician to treat. "You can't be thirsty again; you have just had a drink," said the politician. "Of course (hic) I'm not thirsty," was the indignant response of the suffering drinker. "If I don't drink schepten when I ish thirsty, what 'vantage have I got over a beasht of the field?"

MARKDALE, AUG. 5. 1886.

—The Indepent order of Oddfellows of Toronto are about building a fine hall at a cost of $30,000.

—The Toronto World, in advocating cheap postage, goes so far as to recommend a limited gratuitous postal service for at least domestic correspondence.

—Newepapers, extreme political, are continually disregarding their duty of chronicling facts, and resort to every expedient for distorting or suppressing what is unfavorable to their political friends, while giving unfair prominence to what tells against its opponents. In this mean work of misrepresentation, the public who pay for, and have a right to know, a statement of things as they happen, are deceived, not to speak of the moral harmfulness which results from a wide deviaton from truth.

—Canada is destined to come into high fashion among those in search of healthful summer resorts. Its scenery is so varied and interesting by lake and railroad, and the air of the northern route so bracing and salubrious, while the work for the sportsman is cut out everywhere so attractively, that it is not too much to expect a large influx of foreigners wearied with the overcrowded resort of Europe as times progress.

—Mr. Foster, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been in the Maritime Provinces enquiring into the fishery question. Unlike the newspaper correspondents who report the worth over the inefficiency of the protection afforded by the cruisers, Mr. Foster finds that everybody is "delighted at the vigorous action taken "by the Government to protect the fishers," and he reports that the American fishers are catching very few fish, which are patriotically keeping well within the three-mile limit of the Canadian shore.

—The new English Parliament met yesterday (Wednesday). Lord Salisbury has made his selection for the new cabinet. The Toronto World says :—"No English Parliament has ever had such a variety of parties as the coming one will have. It will contain the Tories, the Whigs, the Gladstonian Liberals, the Radicals who out-Gladstone Gladstone, the Chamberlian Liberals, the Irish Nationalists, and possibly the Irish Loyalists, who Churchill has promised stronger fare than he may be able to make his English followers digest. The Welsh talk of forming a Home Rule party of their own, and the Scotch Crofters have aspirations in the same direction. If so many cooks do not spoil the broth there is no virtue in old proverbs."

Notice.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard

Sir,—Having seen in the issue of the Union Standard of July 22nd, in an article, re Dr. Christoe and the Inspectorate of South Grey, some sentences reflecting upon myself, I request you to kindly publish in your next, the sentences and their refutation. They refer plainly to myself, since I was, at the time referred to, the only candidate for the Inspectorate. They are, "The Dr. had a protegee, a strong personal friend of his own." "Now, as far as Dr. Christoe's protegee is concerned, we may state the doctor got him to apply for the Inspectorship last winter. He came to Owen Sound, got beastly drunk, and remained so while there and finished his spree, mildly so to speak, at Durham." "He is a mere nonentity."

The facts are these :

(1). Having heard that there might be a change in the Inspectorates of Grey County, in January, I resolved, uninfluenced by any then and discouraged by many, to apply in person for that of South Grey.

(2). I did not have the pleasure of meeting Dr. Christoe until some time after my arrival at Owen Sound; before that time I was unacquainted with him even by sight.

(3). The assertion "He got beastly drunk, &c.," is a lie issued out of the futile imagination of the editor or of some one else. My own word to this effect, and my honor as an English gentleman are quite sufficient; but, should any choose to enquire, no fewer than sixty persons would be summoned to show what an utterly baseless charge is made. Among these may be mentioned the Hon. the Minister of Education for Ontario, the members of the Council of Grey, the two members of Parliament for North Grey, His Worship the Mayor of Owen Sound, the Police Magistrate, the Rector of Owen Sound, the Inspector of North Grey, and the Principal of the Collegiate Institute. I may add, too, that I hold a head master's certificate, equal to first-class A with honors, awarded not only on grounds of culture, ability and merit, but also on grounds of sobriety and morality.

(4). I am sufficiently well known in Durham to the better class of society there to more than refer any one who wishes to inquire, to them.

(5). The editor of the Union Standard's world must be very small indeed, when he does not know that I have been and am still, what many other High School teachers are not, a contributor to our educational journals and papers. I may add that among the persons with whom have been brought into correspondence, are—His Lordship, the Bishop of Nova Scotia; Sir Wm. Dawson, C. M. G., F. R. S., Principal of McGill College, Montreal; Dr. Newbern, of New York, the eminent American geologist; Professor McVicar, Macmaster Hall, Toronto; the Rev. the Provost of Trinity College, Toronto, and the Rev. the Professor of Metaphorics and Ethics of the same institution, together with many teachers of Nova Scotia, Quebec and Ontario. I may add that I was also solicited by Dr. McLellan for help regarding his "Teacher's Algebra," and by H. B. Spotton, Esq., M. A., of Barrie, for help regarding his Botany, Part II., besides being one of the authors of the New Arithmetic (Eaton, Gibson & Co., Toronto and Buffalo).

Trusting that you will kindly publish this,
I remain, Dear Sir,
Yours sincerely,
D. F. H. Wilkins, B. A., Bcc. App. Sic.
Mt. Forest, July 30th, 1886.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Dear Sir,—As you have asked me to give you an account of my trip to the North-West Territory I will endeavor to do so in a concise way. I left Toronto at 5 o'clock p. m. on July 13th and arrived at Carleton Place where I exchanged cars for the West. On Wednesday at 9:45 a. m. we reached North Bay. This is a newly built village, inhabited chiefly by workmen of the C. P. R. The country surrounding it is not agricultural as it is very barren. On Thursday we had a delightful run along the shore of Lake Superior. In going around one part of the lake the train passes over an iron bridge and then over a long stretch of trestle work. Here the view is grand. Looking down from one side of the train you can see the lake with large fish leaping up in it; on the other side are rocks, almost perpendicular, rising in some places to a height of about two hundred feet. In this section the train passes through several tunnels. We arrived at Port Arthur at 4 o'clock p. m. and shortly afterwards at Fort William. This does not appear to be a farming district for some distance West of Port Arthur, but it is reported that there are silver mines in the neighborhood. The train reached Winnipeg on Friday at 9.20 a. m. and left at 9:40 a. m. There was soon noticeable a great change in the scene. Now appeared the vast prairies on either side. Going to Portage La Prairie, we passed through a beautiful country. The crops looked fairly well, and at the Portage there are a large roller mill and an elevator. West of Portage La Prairie the crops are not as heavy as they are east. Brandon seems to be the centre of a good agricultural country, for last year there were nearly a million bushels of wheat shipped. We arrived at Wolseley at about 9 o'clock p m. where I was met by Mr. G. L. Dodds, formerly of Markdale, who is now a prominent merchant of Wolseley. Mr. Dodds very kindly drove me around the country during my stay with him. The crops here suffered from the dry weather and also from the gophers. These are animals about the size of a squirrel. This is the first year they have done very much damage. However, the farmers say, there will be very little trouble in getting the gophers to go, as a small bounty to the Indians will soon dispose of them. I was very hospitably entertained during my stay, by Mr. and Mrs. Dodds. On Tuesday, July 20th at 3:25 a. m., I left Wolseley and arrived in Markdale on Friday, by the night train. In eleven days I travelled 2,600 miles and had a three days' stay in Wolseley.

J. W. Ford.

To the Editor of the Standard.

Sir,—What an awful effect the hot days in July has upon some men's bile, notably so on the fighting editor of the Advance.

Last week, an editorial appears in the Advance apparently written by ye editor, abusing a lot of small boys in Markdale, who it appears had played a game of lacrosse with an equal number of boys from Flesherton on the 12th. Now, we are surprised that Flesherton boys are unable to defend themselves (either in the lacrosse field or public press), but are under the necessity of employing the silly noodle of a would-be editor to trumpet them over the country, as loosing a couple of dimes over printing. If the Flesherton boys held the opinion that they would meet with better success at home in a match with us, why did they resort to the mean, contemptible course of abuse? Did they suppose we in Markdale would do aught else than refuse to associate with a lot of whips, spoiled, mean spalpeins who stated what was untrue, viz., "that we gave them no dinner." Why did they not bring Fawcett along, and join their club in playing against us? We can at any time repeat the same thing in honor and decency—whip the whole junior club, including the editor, for we are satisfied from his editorial he must be cutting teeth like a baby. The piece of advice he gives the boys is funny—"to give us a wide berth in future"—looks as childish as his boyish appearance; decidedly indicates neither mental or moral courage, grand essentials in editors, but painfully lacking in poor Fawcett.

THE LAST YEAR, 1886.

After the above year is ended there need be no more suffering from Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Toothache, Headache, Lumbago, or any acute pain, if they only purchase a bottle of Fluid Lightning, as it cures instantly. Pain cannot stay where it is used. The name is Fluid Lightning. Sold by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale. 2

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

Gone but not Forgotten.—Something over twelve months ago there moved into this locality one known among men as G. H. Spencer, having leased from Mr. W. Hogg what is known as "Hogg's Mill," opened out in the lumber business in a large scale, employing a large number of hands. Mr. Spencer possessed the faculty of impressing the person or persons with whom he contracted for or purchased from that if he could not pay them spot cash he had such abundant and large returns coming in that he could satisfy all or any in a very short time, until we think he succeeded in worming himself into more people's finances than any other man that ever struck this part of the country. A few months ago he opened out a general store at Flesherton Station, visited the wholesale market, and succeeded in procuring a fairly good stock, but after a very brief run, the sheriff took possession, and on Thursday last the stock, consisting mostly of Boots & shoes, groceries and crockery, was sold by Sheriff Moore, a gentleman from Owen Sound purchasing the groceries and Mr. M. Richardson, of this place, the boots & shoes. Previous to the sale Mr. Spencer left for parts unknown, leaving a great many in this locality anxious to know his whereabouts.

Considerable disappointment was experienced here on Saturday last when the announcement was made that the match between the Eugenia and Flesherton baseball teams would not be played, as this was to be the decisive game, in two former matches Eugenia won when on the Flesherton grounds, and Flesherton won on the Eugenia field, both games closing with four runs to Flesherton's credit, the closing match was to have been played straight between the two teams, comprising only their own men, but upon Eugenia arriving on Saturday with a professional player outside their own men, Flesherton objected, but was willing to play against their own team, this Eugenia refused to do and consequently the match was called off.

Some weeks ago at a full congregational meeting of the members of the Presbyterian church here, called for the purpose of election of Elders, Messrs. J. R. Anderson, Joseph Blackburn and Henry Meldrum were the choice of the members. On Sabbath last the solem service of ordination was held in said church here, the Rev. Mr. Wilson presiding. The speaker choosed for his text the 1st, 2nd and 3rd verses of the 5th chapt. of 1st Peter, from which he delivered a very impressive, practical discourse, speaking of the office duty and work of the Elder, and reminding the people also of their duty; to have charity and kind forbearance with those whom they had elected to this office in the church. After the sermon the Elders elect were called to the front, surrounded by the session of the church, the regular ordination service was performed by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Wilson, when afterward a solem charge was delivered to the members of the church.

Our townsmen, A. Munshaw and S. Damude, left on Saturday on a pleasure trip up the lake. They purpose camping out some distance above Sault Ste Marie, and there on the banks of the rivers and in the forest deep with line and gun enjoying themselves to their hearts content.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Don't allow a cold in the head to slowly and surely develop itself into Catarrh when you can be cured for 25 cents. A few applications will cure incipient Catarrh. Now doth the busy maiden ply
Her handiwork 'neath careful eye,
And every stitch is got just so
To have it ready for the show.

Now doth the farmer look around
Where biggest apples can be found,
And where the biggest squashes grow
To have them ready for the show.

The farmer's son with conscious pride
His saddled horse he doth bestride.
And up and down the road doth go
To get him ready for the show.

The farmer's wife doth make her way
To where her flock of turkeys stray
And feedeth them to make them grow
And have them ready for the show.

INVISIBLE, BUT INSTANTANEOUS.

All pains or aches will be instantly removed by a few drops of Fluid Lightning applied over the effected parts. No time lost; no nauseous medicines needed; no poultices or using greasy liniments. It will not blister or discolor the skin. Sold at 25c. per bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist. Sufferers from Neuralgia assure us that they never fear it when their house contains a bottle of Fluid Lightning. 4

YOUNG FOLKS.

Bo-Peep

That's what a lady, sojourning for a while in the Bavarian Tyrol, called the pretty herd girl that she learned to love upon slight acquaintance. Bo Peep's herd was not composed of sheep, however—only cows. I have no doubt you would consider her life a dreary one—sleeping, eating, dreaming, all through the summer, with only cows for company. But upon the mountain-side, where the herd was gathered, she had one compensation for her isolation—all was so pure and lovely that the "trail of the serpent" was entirely forgotten.

While she watched her herd she was away from all tumult and surrounded by scenes of inexpressible loveliness. The sunshine bathed the lovely hills. The Alpine flowers starred the mountain side. The blue sky smiled above her, and the faint echo of the church bells in the valley below seemed like voices from another world.

One summer day, the lady above alluded to undertook, without informing her friends, to climb the mountain alone, in search of a rare flower that she desired for her collection. She had the misfortune to drop her alpenstock, to slip and fall, badly spraining her ankle, so that she could not rise. Even in her pain she enjoyed the place of her rest. Noble trees guarded her, and a gentle wind fanned her with its low, sweet breath. But after a while the pain grew worse, and as twilight approached she fairly sobbed aloud. What should she do? Must she lie there suffering all night? Why did not her friends come in search of her? "But I deserve it all," she said: "I'd no business to wander off alone." She called aloud with all her strength. Far above her the herd girl was listening.

"What is that sound?' she questioned herself; but only the murmur of the mountain stream answered her. "Hark! I hear it again. Is it the wind stirring the tree tops? Or can it be a bird's call?'

Very soon she became positive it was neither—it sounded more like a human voice in distress.

"Come, Dolly," she called to her faithful bell-cow, "we look up the lost cows—we must treat the lost human traveler as well."

With Dolly she walked down the mountain and plunged into a belt of woods, calling:

"We're coming, coming, coming." Her call received a quick, glad response. Back and forth rang the bells like chimes: "Here, here," and "Coming, coming," until at last before the fallen lady knelt the herd girl—a vision of beauty, with her fresh, glowing cheeks, her bright eyes and her Tyrolean hat, garlanded with Alpine blossoms.

"You're hurt, dear heart," she said, pityingly, taking the lady's hand within her pretty brown one.

"Yes; I've sprained my ankle, and don't know what to do," came the answer, wearily.

"But I do," the herd-girl said, decidedly. "Put your arms around my neck, and dear old Dolly will carry you up the mountain."

"But I am too heavy for your young arms," expostulated the lady.

"Try me and see. You are a hothouse flower, fair and frail, and I am a mountain blossom, strong and sure," she said, cheerily.

Very soon the "hothouse" flower was on the back of the bell-cow, riding slowly up the mountain, while the "mountain blossom," strong and sure, walked by her side, supporting the bruised limb as best she could.

Arriving at the herd-girl's tent, the girl lifted the lady from Dolly's back as gently as if she had been a child, and laid her down upon a sort of hammock bed. No one could have tended the sprained ankle more gently or efficaciously than did the herd-girl. She bathed it with liniment composed of mountain herbs, and bandaged it with strips torn from the whitest of aprons.

All night long the lively girl-nurse bent over her patient in tireless watching, although the lady protested against it, as it was entirely unnecessary. Toward morning hostess and guest both fell asleep, with their faces both together and their hands interlocked.

At early dawn the lady was almost sorry to see several of her party coming up the mountain after her. They began to utter profuse expressions of sympathy when they were told that she had sprained her ankle, but she only laughed as she answered:

"I would suffer the same pain again willingly for another bit of such sweet experience as I have had. I did not find the flowers for which I was looking, but I found the sweetest mountain blossoms in all the Tyrols—my strong, sweet, tender-hearted Bo-Peep, who in her quiet way is following in her Master's steps."

"Don't Step There."

The services which John B. Gough did for the temperance cause were the reproduction on a large scale of the warning of the little boy in the following anecdote from the "Episcopal Recorder:"

A man started out for church one icy Sunday morning, and presently came to a place where a little boy was standing, who, with choking voice said.

"Please don't step there."

"Why not."

"Because I stepped there and fell down," sobbed the little fellow, who had thus taken upon himself to warn the unwary passer-by of the danger into which he had fallen.

There are many men in the world who have good reasons for giving such a warning as this. The man who has trod the dark and slippery paths of intemperance, and sees the young learning to take the first glass of spirits or wine or beer, has good reasons to say to them,

"Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down."

The man who has indulged in gambling till he is despised by others and abhorred by himself has good reason to say to the young when they are entering on the same course,

"Don't step there, for I stepped there and fell down."

The anarchist will take almost anything if it is not locked up, except a bath.

Habits of Famous Men.

Turner, the painter, said, "I know of no genius but the genius of hard work." This will be found to be the experience of all who have succeeded.

Virgil took three years to compose his ten short Eclogues, seven years his "Georgics," and twelve years to polish his "Æneid."

Thucydides was upwards of twenty years in writing his history of one volume.

Sainte-Beuve, the great French critic, often spent a week upon two or three pages.

Gibbon and Macaulay wrote many chapters three times over.

Carlyle's hours of composition were generally three to four—from 10 or 11 a. m. to 2 p. m.—unless he were specially engaged or hurried, when he added an hour or two to the ordinary number. He wrote unevenly, at times slowly, then rapidly, but always with care, never allowing his manuscript to go from him until it suited him exactly. He frequently destroyed whole pages upon which he had labored hard and long, being extremely fastidious as to punctuation as well as to words and arrangement. But the writing of his books was much less than his preparation for writing, which was most thorough and conscientious. No man had a keener appetite for work, and yet he worked far faster than most authors. His reading was stupendous, and he did it with surprising quickness, dispatching a volume of ordinary size while many persons would be occupied with a few chapters. For forty to fifty years of his life he read on an average from six to eight hours a day, sitting up for that purpose generally until one or two o'clock in the morning.

Dr. Elisha Mulford's "The Republic of God" is stated by the "Literary World" to have been rewritten nine times, and parts of it fifteen times, before being put into type.

Charles Sumner said: "All through my college life I labored eighteen hours a day. I never labored less in any one day."

Charles Dickens never failed to be at his desk at ten o'clock in the morning, and to work steadily, whatever his mood, until one in the afternoon. He never neglected, for any distinction, his labors as editor of "All the Year Round." He kept his business matters in a condition of complete regularity. It was found after his death that he had bestowed the minutest care upon the settlement of his worldly affairs. Nothing had been left undone or forgotten.

Caleb Cushing, one of the greatest lawyers in the States used to read sixteen hours a day for months. When he was appointed justice of the supreme bench of Massachusetts, he read sixty volumes on different laws in nineteen days. He often worked at his desk till four o'clock in the morning, continuously for twenty-three hours, and lived to a good age. He was a poor boy, and worked his way to fame.

Advice to Country Girls.

City life is not all that it is painted. It has its pleasures and conveniences, but it also has its serious drawbacks. Before making the plunge into life in the city, country girls should ask themselves what is really to be gained by it.

Perhaps in their quiet, rural homes some stray advertisement has reached them, promising to young women high salaries for light work. Hundreds of these advertisements are framed for the very purpose of deceiving the unwary. They accomplish their purpose, however, and large numbers of young girls rush up to the city, dazzled by the generous profusion of promises.

A girl from the farm answers one of these advertisements. Life may have been slow at home, but there was always good food, and in plenty, and there was some one to care for in the old farm house. When she goes to the big city she finds that the "light work" consists in working all day in a badly-lighted and ill-smelling workshop, where scores of other girls and women are employed at wages hardly high enough to keep body and soul together.

We know what often comes next. The girl has left home; she is ashamed or unwilling to return, and she must take the consequences, oftimes one of two things—shame or suffering. Many a girl finds first in the frivolities and next in the iniquity of the streets that excitement by which regrets and remorse may be deadened. If she is too strong in principle, too pure and elevated in tone thus to sink down to one of the pitiable women of the street, she may find herself in some cold garret, lonely, overworked, despondent and miserable.

Better remain at home than risk the failure which attends so many girls who go to the city in pursuit of high pay for light work. It is the saddest of all ventures, forsaking a country home for the illusions and deceptions of a large town.

An Improbable Yarn.

"One of my ancestors won a battle during the Crusades by his skill in handling his artillery," said the baron.

"But, my dear baron," said his friend, "at the time of the Crusades gunpowder had not yet been discovered."

"I knew that as well as you do, and so did my ancestor."

"How did he win the battle, then?"

"He brought his artillery to bear on the Saracens, and the stupid fools, seeing the guns, supposed that powder had at last been discovered, and fled in dismay."

The Boundary Line

Between comfort and discomfort is often very slight. Have you rheumatism or neuralgia? or are you a sufferer from obscure nervous pains? Why suffer longer? You can purchase for 10 cents a bottle of that king of pain—Polson's NERVILINE, or you can get a large bottle for 25 cents. It cures promptly. It is sure, pleasant to take, and never fails to cure all kinds of pain. Don't wait an hour, but sent to any drug store and get a trial bottle. Nerviline, the sure pain cure.

Men laugh a good deal at the insane intricacies of the crochet directions published occasionally in the "For women" columns of the newspaper, but every woman knows that they are simplicity itself compared with the stupid incomprehensibility of a base ball score.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

How to Do Up Shirt-Bosoms.

Take two tablespoons of best starch, add a very little water to it, rub and mix with a spoon into a thick paste, carefully breaking all the lumps and particles. Add a pint of boiling water, stirring at the same time; boil half an hour, stirring occasionally to keep it from burning. Add a piece of enamel the size of a pea; if this is not at hand, use a tablespoonful of gum arabic solution (made by pouring boiling water upon gum arabic and standing until clear and transparent, or a piece of clean mutton tallow half the size of a nutmeg, and a teaspoon of salt will do but is not as good. Strain the starch through a strainer or a piece of thin muslin. Have the shirt turned wrong side out; dip the bosoms carefully in the starch and squeeze it out, repeating the operation until the bosoms are thoroughly and evenly saturated with starch; proceed to dry. Three hours before ironing dip the bosoms in clean water, ring out, and roll up tightly First iron the back by folding it lengthwise through the centre; next iron the wristbands and both sides of the sleeves; then the collar band; now place the bosom-board under the bosom, and with a dampened napkin rub the bosom from the top toward the bottom, smoothing and arranging each plait neatly. With a smooth, moderately hot flatiron begin at the top and iron downward, and continue the operation until the bosom is entirely dry and shining. Remove the bosom board and iron the front of the shirt. The bosom and cuffs of shirts—indeed, of all nice; fine work—will look clearer and better if they are first ironed under a piece of thin old muslin. It takes off the first heat of the irons and removes any lumps of starch.

Recipes.

HOME-MADE CRACKERS.—One quart of prepared flour, three good tablespoonfuls of butter, two tablespoonful of sugar, one pint of milk, one-half teaspoonful of salt. Rub the butter into the flour, put the sugar with the milk, mix into stiff dough, lay on the floured pastry board, and beat from end to end with the rolling-pin, stopping every five minutes or so to shift the mass and double it over upon itself. Keep this up for twenty minutes: roll into a sheet less than a quarter of an inch thick, cut into round cakes, prick these deeply with a fork and bake in a moderate oven. They are better the second day than the first.

VERY GOOD PEA SOUP.—This can be made from the pods of young peas, now in market, the same seasoning and thickening as you would use for the puree of the peas, either fresh or canned. For the thickening of this puree take one tablespoonful of flour, stirred smooth into one pint of boiling milk which you have flavoured with either a mint leaf or a bay leaf: the latter is rather better liked. If onion is liked, stick four cloves into one and boil in the milk. When the peas are used set on to boil with cold water and boil twenty minutes. They should boil almost dry Drain in a colander and mash, adding a pint of hot water and then thickened and seasoned milk. Sprinkle some parsley over it, and salt and pepper it to taste. This serves for a quart of peas. When only the pods of a half peck of peas are used boil them in water to cover until soft enough to mash through a colander; use the water and add one quart of milk, with double the above thickening. You can serve the peas as a separate dish, with a meat course.

Notes For Housekeepers.

Strain soups, gravies, etc., through a cloth that has been thoroughly soaked in cold water. The greasy part will be repelled by the water and not a particle will pass through.

The poorest chewing tobacco (one plug) and the poorest of whisky (one quart) mixed and well shaken, makes one of the surest remedies for bed-room insects. Apply liberally to the furniture with a brush.

When towels become thin in the middle cut them lengthwise, sew the selvedges together and hem the two cut sides. If ribbon sashes or men's neck ties become soiled near the ends cut them in two across the middle and sew together the original ends.

The ordinary home method of renovating velvet is to steam it over boiling water taking care to expose the wrong side only to the steam. After steaming it may be run back and forth a few times over a flat iron, the wrong side next the iron. This process freshens velvet, but will not restore badly damaged portions.

For ginger beer take one large spoonful of pulverized ginger, one of cream tartar one pint of yeast, one pint of West India molasses and six quarts of water; stir thoroughly and set in a warm place. When it begins to ferment bottle and cork tight. It will make a very nice drink. If liked one can add two teaspoonfuls of essence of sassafras or wintergreen for flavoring.

Carbolic acid is the best disinfectant for in-door sinks. A small quantity of it is required and it can be readily washed away when its work is done. If the pipes of sinks have become clogged with greasy waste pour in some liquid potash, which will quickly form soft soap and so of course pass off.

What Will Happen to Girls.

Thirty-nine girls.

In ten years fifteen will have married.

In ten years seven of the fifteen will be widows dependent upon their own exertions for bread and meat.

In ten years fifteen of the remaining twenty-four will be sleeping beneath the sod. And how far apart will they be sleeping! One in Georgia, one in California, one in Ohio, one in Virginia, another perhaps in a missionary's grave in China, another amid the ashes of the ancient Aztecs of Mexico, another—but only time will tell where they all will sleep.

In ten years the nine I have not yet mentioned will begin to lose their sweetness and develop something of the sourness supposed to be inseparable from women that are destined to be old maids.

In ten years not one of the thirty-nine but that will have tasted of the bitterness that comes in time to all human beings. Hope will be blighted, loved ones will be claimed by that same skeleton you behold just now, sorrow in a hundred forms will be experienced—indeed, to every one a surfeit of dead sea fruit will be offered.

A BEGGAR'S ROMANCE.

Once the Belle of Salt Lake—Now Grinding a Hand-Organ for a Living.

The Chicago Tribune relates the following pathetic story:—Did you ever notice the little old woman who turns the crank of a wheezy hand-organ on one of the railroad viaducts? Day after day, summer and winter, rain or shine, she is seated there on a little camp stool grinding out the same old distracting tunes. Hot or cold, she always wears the same faded gown, and the same threadbare shawl is always drawn tightly across her shoulders. A little black bonnet, rusty with age, is pulled well down over her forehead so as to hide her pinched and careworn features. Perhaps you have caught a chance glimpse of her pale face and saw something in the pitiful expression that caused you to pause for an instant and drop a coin into the little tin cup. It probably never occurred to you that the

LIFE HISTORY OF THIS STREET BEGGAR

is interlined with a choice bit of romance. You certainly never dreamed that the humble creature before you was once the belle of Salt Lake City, a leader of fashion, and the heiress of millions. Yet she was. She is the eldest daughter of John Brigham Young, one of the wealthiest men in Utah, and a favourite niece of the once famous Mormon prophet. She was reared in luxury and received a liberal education. Gifted with rare musical talents she became celebrated among her people as an accomplished vocalist, and at one time was the principal contralto in the choir at the tabernacle. She was her father's joy, and just as she was budding into womanhood he pledged her hand to a rising young elder who had been active in proselyting for the Mormon Church. The daughter remonstrated, but without avail.

A short time before the day set for the wedding she was secretly

MARRIED TO A YOUNG NEWSPAPER MAN.

He was a Gentile. When her father got wind of the marriage he renounced his daughter, and cast her out of his house. She fled with her husband to New York, where he obtained employment as a reporter on a morning newspaper. Shortly after, his eyesight became affected, and he was unable to retain his position. Then came the struggle for an existence. Their little savings were soon exhausted in trying to restore the husband's eyesight, and after three years' treatment he became totally blind. Though disinherited and reduced to poverty, the devoted wife remained true to her marriage vows. She wrote to her father, begging him to aid her, but receiving no reply, sought for employment. Every one turned a deaf ear to her appeals for work, and as a last resort she accepted an engagement in a concert saloon. There her splendid voice attracted attention, and she was able to earn enough to give her blind husband a comfortable home. Their prosperity, however, was short lived, for not long after she was prostrated by sickness and the fever robbed her of her voice and left but a wreck of her former self. Disheartened in spirit and feeble in health she began the life of a street beggar, wandering from place to place, and finally locating in Chicago, the Mecca for poverty-stricken Bohemians. Although dragged down to the very depths of despair and degradation, she has steadfastly clung to the sightless old man who unwittingly caused her downfall. Recently a woman who knew the beggar many years ago saw and recognized her, and by close questioning elicited the sad story of her unfortunate career.

Anecdotes of Preachers.

In the records of St. Catherine's Church, London, under the date of 1564, there is this passage, illustrative of the pains taken to prevent prelix preaching: "Paid for an hour-glass that hanged by the pulpit when the preacher doth make a sermon, that he may know how the hour passeth away."

In these days there was one clergyman who, not heeding Luther's sixth quality of a good preacher, "that he should know when to stop," announced twenty-four divisions to his discourse. Immediately a hearer started home for his night-cap and slippers.

A preacher ought to know, also, when to begin. Melancthon was very timid, and having on a certain occasion announced as his text, "I am the Good Shepherd," kept repeating it over and over. Luther, who was in the pulpit with him, said, "You are a very good sheep," and telling him to sit down, took the same text and preached an excellent sermon from it.

There have been many humorous preachers. One of this class was Father Andre, a Roman Catholic preacher, who often used his humor to satirize the faults of his brethren. Preaching once in a monastery which had been struck by lightning, he expatiated on the goodness of God, who took special care of His children. Said he,—

"Consider, among other evidences, what has happened to this holy house, in which I am now preaching. The lightning struck the library and consumed it, but injured not a single monk.

"If, however, it had unfortunately fallen upon the dining room or larder, how many brethren would have been killed!"

James I. of England was also James VI. of Scotland, and among his other failings was that of indecision. The first sermon preached before him in England had for its text this verse, from James 1:6 "He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea." The king, detecting the application, exclaimed,—

"He is at me already!" but he was so much pleased with the sermon that he made the preacher a royal chaplain.

A rock weighing over a ton fell on the track of the Derby Railroad, and was seen by two twelve-year-old New Haven boys. One of them, Willie Kehoe, at once began stripping to get off his red undershirt, but the other, Christie Helton, ran to some boys on the bank and got a red handkerchief. This was vigorously waved as a train came around the curve. The engineer slacked up, but, seeing that the flag was waved by small boys, started on again. The boys made such frantic signals that he decided to stop, and brought his locomotive to a halt 100 feet from the boulder. The passengers were so pleased at being rescued from danger that they gave $4.20 to the boys, which is considered a good deal in some portions of Connecticut.

Next a ...generously-developed dowager in drab satin ...and point lace passed, with her attendant ...cavalier; and then a whole cluster of bril... ...liant butterfly forms congregated for a mo... ...ment in the entrance perch, and spread ...apart up the chancel, to group themselves ...again in the nave and make it bloom like a ...parterre of many-hued flowers.

After this there was enough of fashion and ...elegance to gaze upon, for the reserved seats ...filled rapidly, and the show was as rich and ...recherché as Madame Elise and West-end ...milliners could make it. The gloom of the ...shadowed nave was relieved by the dainty ...sheen of pale "moonlight blue," with ..."ivory" and "peacock green," and delicate ...creamy pink, and the deep shadows were ...gemmed with fair faces and sparkling eyes.

For the space of twenty minutes or more ...the wedding-guests chatted together in low ...tones, and with a gaiety scarcely in accord ...with their surroundings. Then the great ...clock sounded the half hour; and, just as ...the deep strokes fell, the bridegroom walk... ...ed up the church.

He was well able to bear the ordeal of in... ...numerable scrutinizing eyes. He was a man ...about thirty years old, of splendid figure, ...and dressed in clothes which were perfect ...in their fit—a man of the world and of soci... ...ety evidently, and with the kind of experi... ...ence which, whilst it had given him the ...finished grace which all women adore, had ...left his youth a long way behind. He was ...very handsome too. His smooth dark face ...was relieved by a full moustache, and his ...dark eyes looked out from under a heavy ...shadow of eyebrows. His mouth was firm ...and compressed. He filled his trying rôle ...of bridegroom with consummate grace and ...ease.

"One could almost imagine he had been ...in the habit of getting married," one young ...lady in the company remarked.

"A handsome face, a magnificent figure!" ...the assemblage voted. "A charming bride... ...groom!"

There was one however who dissented from this verdict.

"What a horrid-looking man!" the young lady who had already spoken said in a low voice to her companion—a gentleman.

"Horrid!" he echoed, in the same tone. "Why, no! Now he is what I should call a fine looking fellow—a handsome fellow even."

"Oh, handsome! Yes, perhaps—in a way. A beaute de diable," she whispered back.

"Are you not severely critical—for the occasion too?" he retorted.

"I am sorry for the girl who is going to marry that man," the young lady pronounced emphatically, and, as it seemed, unreasonably.

"She may not be a girl; she may be a woman—or a widow," the gentleman suggested.

"We shall soon see."

Not very soon though. The wedding had been fixed for half past eleven; the bridegroom had been punctuality itself; but the minutes passed, and the bride did not appear. Twenty-five minutes to twelve, twenty minutes, eighteen, seventeen! The great clock seemed to beat out each swiftly-succeeding second with a sort of sledge-hammer determination in the performance of a disagreeable duty.

The little stir attendant upon the bridegroom's entrance had subsided; he had greeted his friends, and he was standing now in his place at the chancel steps; the hush of expectation had fallen again upon the waiting crowd—a deeper, more anxious hush than before. The situation was growing critical. The verger looked at his watch—others looked at their watches. The wedding guests lifted their eyebrows and shook their heads at one another; the bridegroom knitted his handsome forehead and pulled demonstratively at his moustache.

The church clock chimed the three quarters, seeming to pause on each stroke, as if to impress its warning more solemnly. The excitement was breathless now; every head was turned towards the entrance, every heart beat with a quickened throb. The bridegroom grew pale—"livid," the young lady-critic called it—and the verger haggard with anxiety as he saw his golden fee hanging in the balance. And still the pulse of the fateful clock throbbed on—twelve minutes to twelve, ten, eight—another stroke or two, and there would be no wedding that morning.

"The bride is of my opinion," whispered the young lady triumphantly.

"Hush!" breathed her companion, lifting his hand, with his eyes fixed on the porch.

At the same moment the diaphanous cloud of bridesmaids, which had been hovering there all through those anxious moments, swayed and opened, and the bride's mother—the herald of the bride—appeared, and passed up the church with as hurried a step as her stateliness permitted.

Then, after an instant's pause, the bride herself appeared, and an admiring murmur passed through the assembly. She was an ideal bride—so young, so fair, so downcast, so pale—too pale perhaps; for the white cheek seen through the floating tulle veil was whiter than the soft satin of the wedding robe. She was more like a beautiful statue than a living, breathing woman as she came forward, moving in a sort of mechanical obedience to the guidance of her escort—a young brother apparently; and only the shining gold of her hair gave any relief of colour to the lovely picture. The fair bevy of attendants closed in after her and fluttered up the aisle amid the solemn silence of the bystanders.

The young lady-critic held her breath as the sweet vision passed her, followed by the long train of maidens; then, as the last floating white robe disappeared under the archway into the nave, she stepped quickly out at the opened door, and never stopped until she had reached the churchyard gates.

"Oh, Leonard!" she cried then to her companion, who, accustomed to her rapid and eccentric movements, had dutifully followed her so far. "Oh, Leonard, I cannot look on at it! It is a tragedy!"

Leonard shrugged his shoulders.

"Why?" he said. "Because the bridegroom has dark eyebrows and the bride is pale? I thought it was the orthodox thing for a bride to be pale."

"Do you call that the paleness of a happy bride? It is the deadly chill of despair," she replied. "I am sure of it. And the mother——"

"A handsome well-preserved British matron—a representative mother, performing her first duty in life—marrying her daughter and doing it gracefully, in a very becoming gown of gold-colored satin. My dear Cynthia, what mystery can even your lively imagination find in such a very unexceptionable and respectable person?"

"She looked like a woman who was committing a crime," declared Cynthia, so seriously that Leonard laughed outright—"like Lady Macbeth. She is forcing that poor girl into a marriage she hates. It is a sacrifice."

"A sort of Indian suttee—in fact," said Leonard. "Be comforted, Cynthia; these are not the days when young women—even as young as this one—are dragged to the altar against their will."

"I don't know. There is a sort of moral coercion even in these times—a domestic pressure which is as powerful as brute force," Cynthia answered, walking on quickly in her excitement. "And that mother looks as if she would be a difficult person for a young girl to resist."

"Yes—she is solid," Leonard conceded, walking by his cousin's side—for she was his cousin—as she continued to hurry forward.

"Don't laugh, Leonard," Cynthia entreated. "You will see that I am right, if ever we hear the story."

"Which we are not likely to do," said Leonard. "Are you going in already?" he added, as they reached the door of their hotel.

"Yes, I am tired, and—faint. Are you coming?"

"Not yet, I think," he answered. "I shall have a stroll on the beach first"—lifting his hat as she went in.

But he did not take the turning to the beach. After a moment's hesitation, he walked back along the road he had just traversed, until he reached the church gates again.

"I may as well see the end of it," he muttered, as if apologising to himself, "although weddings are not much in my line."

And he entered the open door of the church once more.

At the same moment a lady was passing through the churchyard—which was a thoroughfare—walking slowly with the listless step which betokened either ill health or heart-weariness. She glanced at the open door. Perhaps she was tired, and needed rest; perhaps a wedding had its attraction for her as for the rest. She hesitated for a moment, and then she entered quietly behind Leonard Hope, and slipped into the one unoccupied seat on the bench—the seat which had just been Cynthia's—before which the young man was standing.

The wedding party was not of course visible from this point; probably the names were at that moment being signed in the vestry, for the crowd in the church was breaking up quietly, and evidently preparing to move outside. In another moment the "Wedding March" pealed forth, the rustle of silk and lace penetrated to the end of the church, and the bridegroom led the bride down the aisle.

She was not pale now; the richest carmine burnt on either cheek, and her raised eyes, feverishly brilliant, looked straight before her with a strained unseeing gaze, as if she had braced herself to a supreme effort and dared not turn to the right or to the left lest her courage should break down.

The bridegroom did not look towards her, but held her tightly on his arm as he stepped quickly towards the door; and the pallor of anxiety had given place to a glow of triumphant satisfaction, natural and becoming enough in a bridegroom, as the spectators agreed.

Leonard Hope, at all events, had no interest to spare for this secondary personage in the wedding drama; his eyes were fixed upon the bride, as she came nearer, and his gaze was unconsciously so intent as to be almost indiscreet. Perhaps in the bridegroom's altered mien he read something of the tragedy which his cousin Cynthia professed to have discerned; perhaps her criticism had roused his interest and his curiosity in spite of himself. However that might be, his eyes followed the last gleam of golden hair as it vanished in the shadow of the porch; and then he stepped back out of the crowd of bridesmaids, by whom he suddenly found himself surrounded, with an involuntary sigh, for which he would have been much puzzled to account.

The sigh was echoed faintly at his side. A figure, a woman's, swayed for an instant, and then sank suddenly and silently in a dead faint at his feet.

CHAPTER II.

"It was the heat, sir—that's what it was. You see it's a warm morning, and the church was so over-full o' folks," the old verger was saying as he handed Leonard Hope a glass of water in the vestry.

"It was the heat—yes, the heat. I—I am sorry to have given you all this trouble," echoed a sweet voice, speaking with an accent which was not altogether English.

The speaker sat up in the Vicar's carved-oak chair and pushed back a thick mass of dark hair, which had fallen over her forehead, and which was in startling contrast to its pure whiteness. She raised a pair of large pathetic dark eyes to Leonard's face.

"I must go!" she murmured, trying to rise.

"I am afraid you are hardly strong enough yet. Will you not rest a little longer?" the young man returned gently.

"I can go—I must go," she repeated hurriedly, succeeding this time in rising to her feet, and trying to fasten her loosened ribbons with hands that trembled nervously.

But she had overrated her strength; and as she stood, she was compelled to cling to the table for support. As she did so her eye fell on the open register, wet still with the ink which had just written the signatures.

"Percival Danvers, bachelor and Eve Delamaine, spinster."

The old verger's glance followed the direction of hers.

"We've had a gay wedding," he remarked, mindful of the gold pieces lying in his waistcoat pocket. "Did you happen to know the parties, sir?"—to Leonard. "No!" They be strangers here—visitors from London—a high family, I'm told. They've done things handsome, though they're not at their own place"—and he chinked his fee complacently. "The lady and gentleman's going to foreign parts for their trip, somewhere in the Indies or Amerikey, I believe—a long way, in any case. They don't even wait to eat the weddin' breakfast with the company; they've got to catch the half-past one o'clock train at the station, and go right off, to be in time for the steamer or something."

"Indeed." Leonard appeared to be interested in the old man's gossip.

"Yes—a noble-looking gentleman; and very rich too, I'm told. A good match for the young lady; they're a large family as it seems."

Mr. Hope remembered the sick lady now, and turned to her. She too was listening to the verger's garrulous talk; and somehow—although of course it could have no connection with the subject—there was a look of wild terrified trouble in the large, wide-open eyes which met Leonard's with a mute, unconscious appeal.

"I must go," she reiterated, turning away as she met his glance. "Can you"—to the verger—"get me a carriage—now—on the instant?"

And with a sort of restless impatience she moved towards the door, following him as he departed on his errand.

"The stand is some little distance away; and the man cannot be back for five minutes or more. You had better rest until he returns." Allow me," Leonard said, offering his arm as she walked feebly down the church.

She accepted his assistance with frank simplicity, and sat down in the gray old porch looking over the churchyard, where the salt breeze from the sea blew freshly now over the green flower-planted graves; but she leaned her soft white cheek against the cool stone, and sat thus, looking down the path with earnest expectation for the verger's return.

She had apparently forgotten Leonard Hope's presence. Her small well-gloved hands rested languidly in her lap; it seemed as if the tide of life within her ebbed so slow that she had not energy enough to lift them higher. And yet her anxious eyes were fixed on the path as if her whole soul were concentrated on the watch for the messenger's return.

The wedding bells were clanging forth their joy notes in the old tower overhead, and she put up her hand at last, as if to shut out the sound, whilst her brow contracted, as if with pain.

"A sweet face," Leonard Hope thought, as he stood looking down upon it; "but so inexpressibly sad!"

The pathos of the large blue eyes, the hopeless resigned weariness of the whole figure, touched and interested the young man; he being for a moment an idle seaside lounger, and open to passing interests. And he wondered if he had stumbled upon another "tragedy," or if impetuous Cynthia's fancies had actually infected him, that he must read a drama in every stranger's face that morning. Leonard smiled a little at himself, and then went back, irresistibly attracted, to the study of the figure before him. The lady was young still, although not so young as the girl-bride; she was a woman who had passed her girlhood—of some five or six and twenty years perhaps; and the beautiful oval cheeks were worn, as if she had known suffering. There was a dainty half-foreign grace about the small delicate features and the clear colorless complexion, relieved by the beautiful blue-black curve of the eyebrows and by the rich dark masses of hair; an exquisite refinement in every gesture and movement of the slight supple figure, which all grew on Leonard, as he had time in those waiting moments to note them. The dress, too, simple and unstudied as it seemed, was graceful and becoming. She was a lady of the best type, Leonard decided; but that type was not exactly English.

The sound of wheels broke the silence; the lady rose quickly to her feet.

"It is there," she said, with a weary sigh, "at last!"—accepting Leonard's escort and allowing him to hand her into the carriage. "Thanks for your kindness," she added; then, bowing to him, "Will you tell the coachman to drive quickly—very quickly—to Marine Cottage, at the end of Marine Terrace?"

Leonard saw her for a few moments longer. She was leaning back against the cushion of the open fly as it turned the corner of the street. And then she disappeared out of his sight, and out of his life he thought. And he strolled down to the beach, philosophising a little on the experiences which occur, without aim or object apparently in a life, and turning over in his mind, with a little skeptical disdain, the doctrine of a purpose in all that comes across our path, in all the trivialities of our daily road.

"In a chance encounter like this morning's, for instance," he added to himself, shrugging his shoulders, as he pelted an advancing wave with pebbles. "By-the-way, I wonder where Marine Cottage is? Along there, under the cliff, I should say, where Marine Terrace ends."

"And being such an idle man that every excuse for an object in his stroll was worth something to him, he plodded along the shingly beach to the end of Marine Terrace; and there, sheltered by a shoulder of the cliff, turning its face to the sea, with its little garden enclosed in tamarisk bushes, running down to the stretch of red beach, and its varandah hung with a great fragrant tangle of blossoming clematis, he found Marine Cottage. A long reclining chair of wicker-work, such as one sees on board ship, heaped up with shawls of many colours, stood on the gravel path, and a sharp little terrier kept watch beneath it. But there was no other sign of life or movement about the little dwelling. With its green Venetian blinds all down, it seemed to doze and blink in the warm sunshine; whilst the fresh sweet odour of mignonette and luscious breaths of clematis perfume came wafted towards Leonard Hope.

Cynthia was sitting at her writing table as Leonard walked into his aunt's room at the hotel, and Lady Kieth was reading at the open window, with her feet on the balcony.

"Well Leonard," the elder lady said, looking up at his entrance, "have you heard or seen anything more of this wedding which has so excited Cynthia? I saw the carriages pass from the church; there seemed a great many of them. It must have been quite a grand affair. I wonder who the people are? I am so sorry I did not know about it, as I was on the promenade all the morning in my chair. I should have liked to see it. Cynthia says——"

"Don't talk about it, mamma; I want to forget it," Cynthia interrupted. "Is it not time the luncheon was served? Ring the bell, Leonard, please."

Then she stepped out on the balcony, and Lady Kieth said to Leonard in a demonstrative whisper—

"Was it as bad as Cynthia says, Leonard? Is the girl being sacrificed?"

Before he could answer Cynthia came back again, and returned with characteristic inconsistency to the forbidden subject.

"I wish you had seen the end of it, Leonard. I am haunted by the whole affair," she said.

Why did he not tell her that he had "seen the end of it?" Why did he also keep silence on that other little adventure which was, unreasonably enough, as he told himself, associated with Cynthia's "tragedy" in his mind?

He gave no hint of further knowledge, although the interdicted subject was discussed all through the luncheon. He only laughed a little at "Donna Quixotina," as he was in the habit of calling his cousin.

"This is beyond you, most sympathetic and chivalrous of lady-champions," he said. "You can scarcely break a lance in this cause."

"No, more's the pity," she said. "But I wish I could forget it."

"Try to think that it is all right; that it is a very happy marriage; that the bride is only shy, and that the bridegroom is a devoted lover, and will be a paragon husband."

"Do you believe all that?" she asked, turning sharply upon him.

"I!"—he was thrown off his guard by her sudden challenge—"I!" he stammered, like a guilty schoolboy caught in a peccadillo. "Well, no, I don't believe it. I don't know."

"Then I am right," she said decidedly, turning away.

"Oh dear!" sighed Lady Kieth. "How sorry I am! What a sad thing!"

Leonard Hope found his hat and retired in unaccountable confusion, to that refuge to a man in all difficulties, a cigar.

Misers.

Ostervalde, the rich Paris banker, a few days before his death, refused to allow his servant to buy meat for broth. "True, I should like the soup," said the dying miser, "but I have no appetite for the meat. What is to become of that? It will be a sad waste."

An English miser used to go about dressed so shabbily as to annoy his acquaintances. At last, he was persuaded to buy an old hat, "better as new," from a Jew. He paid a shilling for it, and the next day sold the hat for eighteen pence.

This same miser never took snuff to titillate his nostrils but he did take a pinch out of every snuff box proffered him, which he carefully placed in his own box. When it was filled, he bartered its contents for a farthing rush-light.

Lord Chancellor Hardwick was nicknamed "Judge Gripus," on account of his avarice, though he was a learned lawyer and an excellent judge. When visited on his estate by country gentlemen, who came to pay their respects to the Lord High Chancellor, he compelled them to send their horses to an inn, half a mile distant, that he might be saved the expense of baiting them. Yet he was then worth four millions of dollars, but dreaded to part with a shilling.

Marlborough, the great soldier of his age, who left between seven and eight millions of dollars at his death, would not hesitate at any meanness to save a sixpence.

Sir William Smyth, a parsimonious English squire, with immense possessions, became blind at seventy by the formation of cataracts over his eyes. He made a bargain with a London oculist to couch both eyes, agreeing to pay sixty guineas if his sight was restored in the least.

The operation was so successful that the patient could read without glasses. But no sooner did he see than he began to grieve at the thought of paying the promised fee. Grief and avarice made him a cheat. He pretended that he could see nothing distinctly, and submitted to wearing the bandages for a month longer than the usual time.

When the month expired, he still insisted that he had only a glimmering of light, and the oculist compromised by accepting twenty guineas, instead of sixty. Yet at that time the baronet had thirty thousand dollars in his house.

A miser, whose parsimony and business abilities had amassed for him enormous wealth, was requested to lend to his Government a sum of money. He refused, as the interest offered was not as high as he demanded, giving as a reason that he had met with severe losses which had reduced him to poverty.

Fearing that his excuse might be discovered to be a falsehood, he dug a cave in his cellar, and in it hid his money. A trap door, with a spring lock and a ladder, gave him access to his gold, which he daily visited.

At last, the miser disappeared. Search was made, but he could not be found. His house was sold, and workmen began to repair it.

One day, they came upon a door in the cellar, with the key in the lock outside. They opened the door, descended the ladder and by the light of a lantern discovered the skeleton of the dead miser, surrounded by bags and boxes of gold and silver.

He had gone into his cave, the door had blown to, the lock could only be opened by the key which he had left outside, and the miser had perished amid his money-bags.

"I heard a well-known society lady make a strange break," said a young gentleman. "She was speaking of a young lady friend, and, strange to say, she was praising her. She had reached the summit of her friend's good qualities when she said: "And then, too, she is so quick at repartee."

The Rev. gentleman having spent a great part of his life as missionary to the Indians in the North-west. The lecture will doubtless be very interesting. Admission 25 cents.

OFF WORK

"I was off work for two years suffering from kidney disease, and could get no relief until advised by a friend to try B. B. B. I was cured by two bottles, and considered it a miraculous cure." The above is the substance of a communication from Wm. Tier, of St. Marys, Ont.

A number of townspeople have been wondering why we do not complain and find fault with our pathmasters for the terrible coarse gravel put on Mill Street in this village. We were under the impression that the road was thus obstructed in order to prohibit the furious driving of horses which had previously been indulged in on that street; and were rather inclined to forgive them, since the apparent good intentions were accomplished.

A LIVING QUESTION.

Question—'Is this life worth living?' Answer—'It all depends upon the liver?' If torpid or inactive it causes a dull, tough languid feeling. Dr. Chases Liver Cure gives health and buyance. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Aug

THE lawn party at the Presbyterian manse on Wednesday of last week was largely attended. The evening was very pleasant but quite chilly necessitating considerable exercise in order to keep comfortable out-doors. There was however lots of fun and plenty to help on so we think all fully enjoyed themselves. The refreshments, bouquets, &c., &c., were well patronized and altogether a very pleasant and sociable evening spent. Proceeds $25.55.

SIX young men left Sarnia some five weeks ago, three from Sarnia and three from Watford, Ont., for a pleasure trip on Lake Huron with a steam yacht. They were to Manitoulin Island, and had called at Southampton on their way home, but have all been lost; none left to tell the tale. They are supposed to have bee swamped by the wind storm on Sunday night the 1st. The yacht was since found near Fort Frank washed ashore with three of the dead bodies in it. No trace of the other three.

A LIVER CURE

One single trial of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure will convince the most skeptical and confined better than thousands of testimonial that it is a sure cure. Medicine and Receipt Book $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Aug

One day last week a couple of Dundalk ladies who thought they were acquainted with the surrounding country, started at 7 o'clock in the morning to drive to Hopeville, but to their surprise and displeasure after travelling the greater part of the forenoon they found themselves in Flesherton. They succeeded in reaching Hopeville, however in the afternoon, and returned to Dundalk safely in the evening. People travelling in a strange country should be accompanied by a guide.—[Dundalk Herald.

A WISE PRECAUTION

During the Summer and the Fall people are liable to sudden attacks of bowel complaints, and with no prompt remedy or medicine aid at hand, life may be in danger. Those who experience has given them wisdom always keep Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry at hand for relief, and a Physician is seldom required.

CIVIC HOLIDAY.—Markdale is not an incorporated village, (and it's a shame it isn't) but it is the expressed wish of the business men, (and business women too) sanctioned by the village police, agreeable to the school trustees, not objected to by the chief magistrate or high constable, and stamped with the post office registry stamp that next Wednesday, the 18th day of August, A.D. 1886, be and is hereby proclaimed a civic holiday. The public will therefore govern themselves accordingly, as business places will all be closed that day.

THAT HACKING COUGH can be so quickly cured by Shiloh's Cure. We guarantee it. For sale by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale. A

THE recent difference between the Flesherton and Markdale lacrosse clubs were, in our opinion, quite too trifling to call for a newspaper controversy. In the first place uncalled for reference was made to the childish matter three times in public print from Flesherton after which the Markdale club of course had a right to defend themselves in a similar mode, but in so doing they over-stepped the mark by the name calling style of retort. We have no doubt the boys on both sides were lacking in judgement and perhaps courtesy, but what need was there for rushing to public print with such a trifling affair; the Advance even making a leader on it two weeks ago.

VARIOUS MATTERS.—J. H. Hull has purchased the lot where Grant & Co's planing factory stood and is preparing to erect a building for a cooper shop. ——Mathews' brick shop is lathed and ready for the plasterers. It will have a plate glass front.——G. S. Bowes' double tenament house on Elizabeth street is now vaneered, and will be comfortable dwellings when complete. They are already rented.——George Haskett's fine residence is looking handsome. The brick work will soon be complete.——Isaac Stinson's house foundation shows excellent workmanship. He is so rushed that he can scarcely find time to do his own work. ——Mr. Johnston is building the foundation for Mr. Bowes' "Secton's" house, upon which the vestry of the old Methodist church will be placed.

STRATFORD, Aug. 6, 1885.
Having suffered from kidney disease from childhood I consulted eminent doctors in Chicago, New York, and in Canada. Also tried various patent medicines, but getting no relief from any source gave up, as I was sure my case was hopeless. Finally I was induced to try Dr. ——'s Medicine and I am glad to say that three bottles cured me

HEALTH.

Heat and Cold Water.

In the seaport towns of southern Spain sunstrokes are as common as chilblains in Canada, and the popular remedy is both simple and efficient. A thick linen bandage is wrapped around the head and kept saturated with cold water, "por mear el fuego," as they call it, "to draw out the fire." Every two minutes or so the water is renewed, till the patient has recovered sufficiently to sit up and continue cooling his temples with a wet sponge. I have never known that method to involve any injurious after effects, and believe that its employment would often break the incipient symptoms of climate fevers, though the popular prejudice against the influence of cold in all its forms may recommend less rational specifics, bleeding, for instance, which at best exchanges a momentary stupor for a week-long languor and liability to relapses. But it seems less easy to account for the egregious obstinacy of the prejudice against fresh water as a beverage for healthy persons under the influence of excessive heat. A soldier reaching his noonday camp in a shady grove, a wayfarer halting at a public well, a boy returning from a butterfly chase, are sure to be warned against the disastrous effects of cold water "drank in the heat." "Wait till you cool off!" "Take a drink of coffee first." "You'll catch your death at that old spring," etc. Yet even the popular night-air dread is not more utterly gratuitous. We might as well be asked to believe that a wayworn foot traveler must not sit down without first resting a few minutes in a standing position. We might as well warn a drowsy child against shutting both eyes at once at the risk of falling asleep too abruptly. The truth is that a drink of cold water is healthiest when the system is most urgently in need of it, and at no other time the stomach more readily forgives the abruptness of sudden repletion. Only drunkards and persons whose digestive organs have been debilitated by long abuse risk the least unpleasant consequences from a free indulgence in the most natural of all dilutents refrigerants. But, on the other hand, there is no doubt that previous exposure to excessive heat increases the danger of surfeiting the system with calorific food; that pork eaten in quantity after a warm day's work often results in a delirium equaling the worst symptoms of cholera morbus. Greasy ragouts become more indigestible in summer; a quantum of suet pudding, which at other times would produce only a slight heartburn, has in sultry weather to be expiated by a fit of distressing oestiveness. Tourists on returning from a dog-day excursion, or farmers after a sweltering harvest day, should therefore confine themselves to moderate quantities of food, and if possible abstain for a meal or two from all heat-producing viands. A jelly pudding, with cold milk and sugar, or a plateful of cold fruit and cakes, will abundantly satisfy the demands of nature, which on such days are never exorbitant. The feeling of oppressive heat, in fact, diminishes all appetites except the desire for refrigeration.

Self-Cure.

The body, to a large extent, is a machine which, when disarranged, repairs itself. Physicians tell us of the vis medicatrix naturæ—the power to heal inherent in nature. It is natural to get well. The body's recuperative resources are not equal to every need, but they are very great. It is because of this even that the well man tends to keep well, if he conforms to nature's laws, for the system is ever full of poison from its own waste, the disposal of which nature has provided for, better than any city has for the disposal of its deadly sewage.

Take the case of an ordinary wound. It needs only to have its disrupted parts brought together, and nature does the healing; and even in many cases where the parts are not brought together, nature fills up the space with new flesh. So nature will mend a broken bone, on the simple condition that the adjusted parts be allowed the requisite rest.

Dyspepsia, whether induced by improper eating, the neglect of exercise, brain overwork, or care, worry and fret, will in time wholly disappear on removal of the cause and compliance with the laws of nature.

The best physicians now freely admit that typhoid patients, in the great majority of cases, would recover without a drop of medicine; that they need medicine mainly to promote ease and comfort, and that pure air is better for them than all drugs. The same is true of some other diseases. More and more is it being admitted that, in no case, do drugs have any curative power, but only aid nature, as the surgeon aids in the case of a badly broken limb, by removing irritating bits, splinters, etc., and securing the proper adjustment and fixation of the parts.

The old-time doctors greatly overdosed people—in multitudes of cases literally dosed people to death. Within less than twenty years a personal friend, called to watch with a neighbor far gone in consumption, was shown eleven different medicines, each of which she was to administer during the night, according to the varying symptoms.

It cannot be too strongly emphasized that those who observe the laws of their physical nature are likely to keep well—and even infectious diseases have little power over such persons, and would wholly disappear if all observed these laws.

A Free Fight.

The great reputation of Briggs' Electric Oil is such that it has induced unprincipled persons to adopt other names as near like it as possible. The proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil have the name and style of the Electric Oil registered both in Canada and the United States, and no one can use it but themselves. Others hearing of the success of Briggs' Electric Oil have adopted other names similar such as "Eclectric Oil," "Electren Oil," &c., and are striving to induce the public to buy them instead of the genuine Electric Oil.

In fact so determined were they that they brought a suit at Law, in the High Court of Canada, to deprive Briggs & Sons of their right to control the same; but the Courts and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa fully sustained their registered trade mark.

Briggs' Electric Oil cures Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains and Bruises, coughs and colds arising from Colds such as Sore Throat, Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis and difficult Breathing.

HOUSEHOLD.

About the House

Plain linen shades in ecru, buff and sage are more used than those of a more fanciful description.

Stair-rods have had their day. Black walnut, nickel and bronze buttons are used in their place. They are much better on account of moths which find a good hiding place behind rods.

A dainty bed-comforter is made in this way: Cut a piece of double-width cheese cloth large enough to reach from the pillows to the foot of the bed. Put over this a layer or two of nice batting. Cover it with a piece of cloth like that underneath and catch it through and through in spots with blue zepher worsted, passed lightly without drawing tight and cut these loops left by the thread on the right side. If preferred, a strand or two of yellow can be added to the blue worsted; the general appearance will be that of daisies scattered over it. Besides being cheap and very soft-looking, it makes a very useful addition to a bed, and can be easily ripped up at any time and made over. The edges can be caught together by overcasting with worsted or binding with narrow ribbon.—Housekeeper.

Handsome and ornamental rugs may be made at home. One of the least expensive is the Chenille rug. Collect all your woolen scraps—no matter how small or how much soiled—old flannels can be dyed with bright dyes and add very much to the beauty of the rug. Cut all the pieces into cross-wise strips about half an inch wide; the length is of no consequence. Thread a needle with very strong thread doubled. Gather the pieces through the centre with not too fine stitches. As fast as a piece is gathered push it down close to the knot. Push each piece as tight as possible to the next one. Continue in this way until the thread is full, then tie on another thread and proceed as before. Make in skeins about six yards long. It requires about one hundred and fifty yards for a rug. Take it to a carpet weaver and have it woven three-quarters of a yard wide. If you have enough reds of different shades to make fifty-eight yards for a border at either end, and have the centre "hit or miss," it makes a beautiful rug.

These rugs are very handsome, and being alike on both sides, wear beautifully. The only expense is in weaving, generally fifty cents or one dollar. This work utilizes pieces that would otherwise find their way in the rag bag.

Very pretty rugs can be made of small silk scraps, no matter how much defaced they will all work in. Cut in strips about half an inch wide and two inches long. Take a piece of ticking, having the stripe about one-third of an inch wide, cut it into the size of the rug wanted. Thread a sewing machine with coarse thread (number thirty) and needle. Place one of the ticking stripes under the needle, then lay on the silk pieces close together, with the middle of each piece on the ticking stripe, and stitch down to the end of the stripe, then stitch back again close to the last row of stitching; this will make it strong. Put the ticking in place with the next stripe under needle. Fold back the fringe, made by the preceeding row, back out of the way and proceed as before. A black border and mixed centre are very rich looking. After the rug is finished line with some heavy material to keep it flat.—Good Housekeeping.

The Cake Basket.

MINISTER'S SPONGE CAKE.—Three eggs, one and one-half cup of cold water, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one and one-half cups of flour, one quarter teaspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of extract of lemon. Beat the eggs five minutes, add the sugar and beat two minutes more; then add the other ingredients.

WHITE CAKE.—Two eggs using the whites only, a scant half cup of butter, one cup of powdered sugar, one and one-half cups of flour, one-half cup of sweet milk, one teaspoonful of soda. Flavor with extract of rose or lemon. This is a delicate cake and may be varied by adding one-half cup of citron cut fine and ornamented with a nice frosting.

FEATHER CAKE.—One cup of sugar, one egg, two thirds cup of sweet milk, a heaping teaspoonful of butter, two cups of flour in which are thoroughly sifted one teaspoonful of cream-tartar, and one-half teaspoonful of soda. Flavor with lemon or vanilla, and bake in one loaf or in layers; and it will be found an excellent cake, especially if eaten while fresh.

ROLL JELLY CAKE.—Four eggs, one cup of flour, one teaspoonful of cream tartar, one-half teaspoonful of soda, one cup of powdered sugar. Spread thin on long tins. As soon as baked turn from the tins on to a damp cloth, spread with jelly and roll up immediately.

LEMON CAKE.—Two and one-half cups of powdered sugar, three-quarters of a cup of butter, one cup of sweet milk, three full cups of sifted flour, four eggs, the juice and grated rind of one lemon, one level teaspoonful of soda. Bake in two loaves and frost with a white icing flavored with lemon.

Uses of Cattle Bones.

The four feet of an ordinary ox will make a pint of neat's foot oil. Not a bone of any animal is thrown away. Many cattle's shin-bones are shipped to England for the making of knife handles, where they bring $40 per ton. The thigh bones are the most valuable, being worth $80 per ton for cutting into toothbrush handles. The foreleg bones are worth $30 per ton, and are made into collar buttons, parasol handles and jewelry, though sheep's legs are the staple parasol handles. The water in which the bones are boiled is reduced to glue, and the dust which comes from sawing them is fed to cattle and poultry.

A Good Corn Sheller for 25c.

A marvel of cheapness, of efficacy, and of promptitude, is contained in a bottle of that famous remedy, Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor. It goes right to the root of the trouble, there acts quickly but so painlessly that nothing is known of its operation until the corn is shelled. Beware of substitutes offered for Putnam's Painless Corn Extractor—safe, sure and painless. Sold at druggists.

CHAPTER III.

The drowsy quiet of Marine Cottage was broken by the arrival of the fly, its occupant faint and pale, still lying back among the cushions. A middle-aged woman in the neat white cap of a French bonne, who was looking from the window, hastened to open the door and came hastily across the veranda to the gate, exclaiming in

"Ah, madame, what has happened? You are ill—you are epuisee I knew what would be when I let you go out alone. Why did I let you go?"

"Hush, Cecile!" returned her mistress. "Tell the man wait, and come with me quickly," she exclaimed, cutting the good woman's lamentations short, and closing the door of the room as soon as they had entered, "something has happened. Oh, Heaven"—catching the old woman's hands in both hers as she spoke—"something terrible has happened, Cecile! I have killed him!"

"Killed in Heaven!" ejaculated the woman, starting back. "Where? Oh, my mistress, where?"

"I have seen him at the church—at the church with a fair golden-haired girl. And she was married to her this morning. Do you hear, Cecile? He was married to her!"

"Married!" The woman stared, with dropped jaw and distended eyes, at her mistress as the words came brokenly from her white lips. "Married!" she repeated, breathless, awe struck tone.

"Yes, Cecile—quick! There's no time to lose. Give me my desk—my keys. Get your bonnet. Oh, quick—hasten!" she exclaimed in a tone of agony, as she turned to the travelling-clock on the mantelpiece. "It is ten minutes past one, and the train leaves at half past, the man says."

"What train? What man?"

"I have no time to tell you. Make yourself ready; come back to me."

She wrote rapidly for a few minutes; then she folded her letter, and was ready as the old servant entered the room.

"Come," she commanded, leading the way to the door.

"But you are ill, my angel—the old fever—"

"Yes, it is there"—her mistress breathing heavily as she hastened on. "But I must not stay. If I have only strength enough! To the railway station," she said to the man as she re-entered the carriage; "and drive at your quickest!"

She sat panting, rigid; the old servant looked anxiously into her face, touching her cold hands, and uttering little broken exclamations of dismay and anxiety, as they passed through the streets of the town and up the long hill to the station. Had it ever been so long? Would the tired stumbling horse ever mount it?

The station came into sight at last. A carriage, with white horses bedecked with wedding-favours, stood at the door. The lady sank back.

"I cannot," she gasped; "I have no strength. Take the letter, Cecile—give it to him; bring him here to me! I—Oh, Heaven, if I had only——Go—go," she commanded, pushing the maid from her. "Why do you stay? There is the bell. In another moment it will be too late. Oh, go!"

Was it not indeed already too late? The woman sped swiftly on her errand, jostling porters and passengers as she ran up the platform.

A footman, with a white favor at his buttonhole, stood bowing at the open door of a first class carriage, marked conspicuously—"Reserved." Cecile dashed up to it. Only a lady was there—golden-haired, fair, and young. Cecile looked round hurriedly—Cecile had her own ideas as to the most efficacious manner of executing her commission. The footman bowed for the last time and walked away. Cecile and the lady were alone.

"You—you are the bride?" the Frenchwoman demanded in her broken English. "Mr. Danvers——"

"Yes." She spoke listlessly, with only a little weary surprise.

"Oh, read this, madame!" She held the written paper open before the eyes of the young girl. "Read, madame, and come with me. Quick"—as the second bell sounded—"read, for the sake of le bon Dieu."

The startled bride took the paper from the hand of the agitated woman, and glanced hurriedly at its contents.

"This carriage is reserved. I must trouble you to find another place," spoke a voice behind Cecile. A strong hand put her hastily aside without looking at her, just as the guard, running up, closed the carriage door with a bang and an imperative—

"Take your seats. Time's up."

In fact the train was already in motion—the bridegroom had narrowly missed losing his place. Cecile could see him bending across to the golden-haired lady as the engine steamed faster and faster on its way out of her reach. So her mission had failed!

She stood staring after the train as it glided swiftly out of sight; then she walked back slowly off the platform, beating her hands and muttering her prayers in French as she went.

The porters nudged each other and grinned as she passed. "The foreign woman" was "crazy," they concluded. But she never heeded them; she was too full of her trouble.

Her mistress was watching for her with her hands pressed against her side, and her breath coming heavily from between her parted lips. Cecile shook her head sorrowfully as she came towards the carriage.

"She has seen it—the letter. I gave it to her. And then he came up and pushed me away without looking at me—if he had only looked at me!—and the train went on. I could do no more. It was not my fault."

"You gave it not to him? You spoke not with him?"

"How could I? He was not there. It was only the lady, alone."

"They are gone?" the lady gasped.

"Yes, gone. Oh, how can I tell where? I had no time. But, eh, my beautiful one, you are ill again!" she cried, as her mistress's head fell heavily against her arm. "I knew that it would be so—that it would kill her. Close the carriage"—to the driver—"and take us home—such home as we have in this cold, without-heart country, where the men are so wicked monsters that it is marvel the bon Dieu lets them live, even in their fogs and misery."

The last words were muttered in French as she pillowed on her breast her mistress's head and bathed her cold forehead with the contents of a bottle which she drew from her pocket.

The long afternoon hours passed away slowly whilst the lady lay gasping upon her pillows, her eyes fixed wistfully on the clock which Cecile had placed on the table before her.

"He does not come," she whispered, when the shadows lengthened and the sunshine changed from gold to crimson. "He should be here now. Soon he will be too late."

Cecile turned to the window with a groan. If her arrow had reached its mark he might be here now at any moment. And his coming would bring back life to the fading face she could not bear to look at. But the hours stole away, and the waiting-woman's last hope died a lingering, reluctant death.

"It has killed her!" she said to herself, wringing her hands in her despair.

"Yes," spoke her mistress, as if reading the unspoken exclamation, "it has killed me. If it had only been sooner! Why did we speak, Cecile? It was scarcely worth while. But it has done no harm. She will not believe—why should she. She loves him. She has torn the paper and thrown it away, and he knows nothing, and she is smiling into his face now, at this moment, and—and I am content. It will be over soon, and it is well so. I have lived too long, Cecile—just one day too long."

Only Cecile's sobs answered as she leaned her forehead against the window-sash.

Then a breeze stole up and whispered amongst the clematis blooms and rustled the leaves of the Virginian creeper, while the warm glowing day was dying in crimson glory.

"Cecile, my friend—my last, best friend," said the struggling voice, "you will take me back to the grave under the magnolia-tree. I could not rest away from it. That is all mine—my own. And I have left thee all—little little for the love and the fidelity. And you will be silent, Cecile, and bury my poor life with me for ever. Promise me this, my friend."

"Is he never to know? Is she——"

"No, never, Cecile! Would you have two lives ruined, two hearts broken? That would be cruel—cruel!" She had raised herself, and was speaking rapidly in her excitement. "Let her be happy—the young innocent bride; and perhaps in his happiness he may remember—he may repent."

He, the scelerat—the wretch—the Heaven-forgotten!" the woman burst forth, lifting her hand with a fierce imprecation, fired by her hot Southern blood.

"Hush, Cecile! Do not curse him. I cannot bear it. I—Cecile—I—love him. I die joyfully, for my death will bring him happiness. Obey me, my friend. Take me home and lay me beside that grave; and write my name with that name. No date, Cecile; only my name—nothing more. I can do this for him—the last—the last!" Her face lighted up. She put out her hand and drew Cecile to her. "Promise me. Lay your hand on my heart, your lips on my lips. You love me, Cecile. You will not refuse me? You will do this? You will be silent?"

Then Cecile, weeping, promised.

The stars came out; a silver planet mirrored itself in the rippling water; the hum and echo of busy human life died away into a restful stillness, soothed but not broken by the soft whisper of the ebbing tide. Only a solitary lounger paced slowly up and down the quiet stretch of beach, or stood watching the silver gleaming of the receding waves.

Suddenly a cry rang sharply through the silence—a woman's scream, as she dashed the door wide open and ran out on to the gravel path.

"A doctor, a doctor! For the love of Heaven bring a doctor!"

The solitary lounger leaped the low fence and dashed across the lawn and flower-beds without waiting to choose his steps, throwing his cigar into the bushes as he came.

"I will go," he said to the woman. "Which doctor shall I call?"

"Which? Ah, how can I tell? The first—the quickest!"

Leonard Hope—for it was he—sped away on his errand. He was young, he was swift, and he had good luck. He was back again in less than ten minutes, the doctor with him. There were lights then moving from window to window, behind the clustering leaves. There was the babble of excited voices. Marine Cottage had wakened from its drowsy spell into frightened active life.

Leonard Hope waited outside for the doctor's return. It was not long delayed.

"Dead!" he said shortly, as he joined Leonard. "Heart-disease—long standing—nothing to be done. Young woman too."

"A foreigner, was she not?"

"Yes—well, I hardly know. The servant is foreign; and she looks——But the name"—he unrolled a paper in his hand, and stopped under a lamp-post to read it—"the name is Marie Delorme Danvers Came here for her health, the woman said Is this your road? Yes? Good night then."

"Good night."

Two days later, Leonard Hope read the announcement in the Times.

"On the 21st inst., at the parish church of St. Ethelminda, St. Sebastian's-by-the-Sea, Percival Danvers, Esq., to Eve, third daughter of the late Everard Delamaine, Esq., of Beaufort Manor, Eastshire."

"Curious coincidence!" Leonard said to himself, as he glanced lower down through the obituary notices, where, however, he found nothing. "It's an odd thing that, if one hears a name by chance, it is sure to crop up again half a dozen times directly afterwards!"

CHAPTER IV.

When Percival Danvers swung himself hastily into his place opposite to his newly-made wife, she was sitting with flushed cheeks and flashing eyes, so transformed from the pale listless woman he had left seated there a minute or two before that he looked over at her in amazement. Indeed he was pleased. He found this an agreeable change from the cold statue-like mood she had exhibited for some weeks past. He did not admire statues, but he admired Eve Delamaine; and he had set himself to win her, and had succeeded—in a way—thanks to his own strong will and a powerful ally whom he had secured early. Cynthia had read the story pretty accurately. Eve was young and weak, and the combination was strong and subtle.

When Percival Danvers appeared in a set of London society with the prestige of having lately succeeded to a large fortune, he became at once marked as the match of the season. There might be something obscure and indefinite about its origin; but the fortune was safe and sure enough, the wise ones guaranteed; and nobody cared to inquire more deeply. Mothers of marriageable daughters made much of the man whose gold flashed so temptingly before their eyes. The daughters themselves were charmed with his handsome face and fine figure; and he had only to "throw the handkerchief" where he chose. But he was coy at first; he allowed himself to be courted for a season or two. Then Eve Delamaine came out, and Percival Danver's choice was made.

She was not at all dazzled by his preference; her young heart, as yet untouched, had its own dreams and aspirations. She had formed her own ideal, and, as it happened, it was not after Mr. Danver's model. Perhaps her indifference only stimulated his admiration the more; indifference was a new experience to him, and difficulties gave a zest to pursuit.

Mrs. Delamaine was a dowager with six daughters, living on a handsome allowance which would cease at her death, leaving her younger children very scantily provided for. Manifestly the first duty of a mother in such circumstances was to marry her daughters; and Eve's two elder sisters were already in their third season. To have allowed the foolish dreams of an inexperienced girl to stand between her and a most advantageous settlement in life would have been a piece of culpable folly of which Mrs. Delamaine was incapable. She was strong-minded and resolute; her children had been trained to implicit obedience to her will. And the end was that Eve, reluctant, but overpowered, yielded to a daily and hourly pressure which gradually ground her down and wore out her powers of resistance.

She told Percival Danvers, when she accepted him, that she did not love him—told him with a forlorn hope that he would relinquish his pretensions. He answered that he was content. So long as she gave him a heart on which no other name was written he would trust to his own love to win hers. He said it so very prettily, he manifested so much delicate and thoughtful devotion, he laid himself and all his coveted advantages so humbly at her feet, that the young girl was touched and half subdued. With infinite tact he humoured the sentiment in her character and ministered to her girlish romance. He did not load her with jewels—a lavish vulgar display of wealth which might have startled her with the suspicion that she was to be sold for that wealth. His gifts were the flowers she loved best, photographs of the pictures she was enthusiastic over, trifles of taste, gems of art—all that showed the most gratifying appreciation of her ideals, the most subtly flattering knowledge of her tastes.

The world—although envious—smiled and congratulated; her home-circle hurried eagerly into the discussion of wedding finery and bridal arrangements; and Eve was borne onwards with the current, on and on, as if by a strong overmastering fate, until she suddenly awoke to find her destiny fixed and the wedding day close at hand. She drew back affrighted from that terrible Rubicon, so formidable and so solemn even to a happy and assured love. She could not, would not, dared not barter away all the wonderful, beautiful possibilities of the future her young heart believed in for this!

Then Mrs. Delamaine came down upon her and crushed her with a relentless "Too late." The family reprobation overwhelmed her; her trembling tearful opposition was swept aside; the powerful home-current flowed on and bore her with it. She was not strong enough to resist further; she sank into a condition of listless acquiescence, which her anxious mother explained to her own and Mr. Danvers's satisfaction.

He was too willing to take his bride on any terms to be critical; he only redoubled his devotion, if that were possible. He was an incomparable fiance!

"No girl had ever such a perfectly delightful lover," the Delamaines declared—"so devoted, so thoroughly in love, so unexceptionable in every way. The girl who could not be happy with such a chance did not deserve happiness!"

And Eve, overpowered and helpless in her youth and her inexperience, ceased to struggle, let them say and do as they liked, and went to the altar in the stunned hopeless mood to which they had brought her.

She was roused—too late in truth now—by a shock which changed her all at once from a timid dependent girl into a courageous energetic woman.

"Is this true?" were her first words to Percival Danvers. "Is this true?"—and she held the open paper towards him.

He gave one surprised questioning look into her transformed face, then his eyes fell upon the written page, and the colour left even his lips. His dark complexion took such a livid deadly hue that Eve, even in her newly-gained boldness, drew back affrighted.

"Where did this come from?" he began suddenly, savagely. "No, it is not true," he corrected hastily. "Eve, it is some silly jest; don't you see? A practical joke—not in the best taste, certainly—but—ha, ha!" He tried to laugh. "It has succeeded admirably, upon my word! Walter or young Douglas, or both, are probably the perpetrators. We will never let them know what success they had. The young imps would exult over our scared faces."

He crumpled the paper in his strong fingers as he spoke, and thrust it into his pocket. There was something ghastly in his laugh, something cruel and vengeful in his grip of the little note he professed to hold so lightly. An intense newly-roused loathing filled the girl's soul as she marked all this. He seemed to stand revealed in a new and terrible light. He leaned forward and tried to take her hand.

"It is not Walter's handwriting, or Douglas's," she said slowly, drawing back and keeping her hands tightly locked one in the other beyond his reach.

"No, hardly," he laughed more naturally now. "They would scarcely play their trick so clumsily. Some woman has been a confederate—your mother's French maid, very likely. It is very well done—very!" he continued. "And it has been an exciting little episode just at starting!"

"Why, Eve—why, my darling," he remonstrated caressingly, "were you really taken in? Did you doubt, even for a moment? Dearest, do you ask me to put my word seriously against this very transparent melodramatic sort of trick? Must I tell you again gravely that it is not true? Surely not? I will tell you what we will do. We will send back a telegram from the next station—if we stay long enough—congratulating the young rascals on their bright idea. Let us concoct it at once."

He drew out his pocket-book and pencil; the color had come back to his face, save for a strange gray shade about his eyes, which made him look ten years older.

Eve could not forget. That sudden frightful pallor had spoken to her with a terrible convincing force, more powerful to her woman's quick instinct han all the reassuring words he could utter now. She drew away shudderingly from his hand as he attempted once more to take hers in his own. She closed her eyes and leaned back against the cushions.

"I am tired—I am faint," she murmured. "Let me be quiet—let me rest."

She spoke with a kind of weary petulance which reassured him. At all events it was more natural than her other moods, he thought. She lay back, with her eyes shaded by her hand. He watched her furtively as he wrote his message; then he opened the morning's Times and read, or pretended to read, looking up at her from time to time as the minutes passed.

A long silent hour glided away; and the swift express still rushed on. She did not stir or look up, and the watching eyes darkened with an anxious cloud—perhaps an angry one. These bridal moods and whims were beyond his management as well as his comprehension; and, if he controlled his temper, it was because it would not have been good manners for a three-hour-old bridegroom to scold or storm.

The whistle sounded at last; they were nearing a large junction station. Mr. Danvers yawned and threw down his paper.

"Here we are at Evesham," he announced cheerfully. May I bring you a glass of wine? I fancy we shall stop long enough for that."

She uncovered her face and answered him.

"Thanks—no."

"It would be good for you. I shall bring it and you must drink it," he said, with a little assumption of martial authority, as he jumped out.

The carriage was a double one, divided by a door in the middle, the inner compartment being empty and the door set open for air on this warm day. Mr. Danvers returned in about three minutes, followed by a porter bearing a tray with a glass of sherry and some biscuits. Only a sunshade and a pair of light gray gloves were on the seat which had been Eve's, and the door leading into the inner division was shut. Mr. Danvers turned the handle, but the door was fastened. He shrugged his shoulders, drank the sherry, dismissed the porter, and settled himself to his paper again. The train went on, but the door still remained closed. Mr. Danvers, a little sulky, read on. The situation was absurd; and even a bridegroom in the elevation of his first transport does not like to be made ridiculous. Station after station flashed by; the leading articles were spelled out, even the advertisement sheet was exhausted. Mr. Danvers started up at last and again tried the door.

"Eve," he called, "Eve, has not the joke lasted long enough?" The Delamaines were unpleasantly addicted to practical jokes evidently. "Eve!"

No answer. Had she fallen asleep? He knocked louder; still no reply. Then he looked out of the window and whistled.

The little conjugal pleasantry was growing tiresome. Of course it was only a pleasantry, he told himself. Why should it be anything else? He watched the trees and hedges flying by; he was horribly bored; and, underlying all, there was a great dread, like a mastiff kept at bay and ready to spring upon him when he would let it. But he would not let it—he recurred to his minor vexations. This commencement of his married life was—well, hardly up to his expectations. The smoke of the great city was visible now; the journey was nearly at an end. He announced the fact through the closed barrier.

"Eve, we are almost there—in London. Open the door."

Still there was no sign Would she carry on the jest up to the last moment. Yes, and beyond it. The train stopped. Mr. Danvers hammered at the door. Still there was silence. Was she ill. Of course. Why had he not thought of it before? A porter came at his call.

"What is it, sir? Can't open the door?"

Of course she must be ill—probably in a fainting fit. What else could account for her strange conduct?

"I'll run round, sir, and open it on the other side."

A minute—which seemed like ten—and the man threw open the door. Mr. Danvers pushed him hastily aside and stepped in. The carriage was empty.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

PERSONAL.

Mr. Henry M. Stanley has accepted a proposal to lecture throughout England next autumn, on African topics.

A favorite drink of the late Bavarian King Ludwig was white wine in which violets had been well steeped. He also was very fond of champagne poured over white violets.

Thomas Stevens, the bicyclist, who is travelling on his wheel around the world, sailed from Constantinople for India on June 23d. He was held nineteen days a prisoner in Afganistan, when within ten days journey of Calcutta, by a military imbroglio.

Bartley Campbell makes slow improvement at Bloomingdale Asylum, if indeed he can be said to have improved at all. Two of his hallucinations are that he is a supernal being, and that the Asylum is an hotel of which he is the proprietor. In odd moments he writes verse, which is usually unintelligible.

The Comtesse de Paris, according to the London Truth, inherited all the sporting tastes of her family. In France, she was partial to hunting and shooting, breaking skittish colts, driving four-in-hand, or tiring out three or four horses at a chase. She dressed in a neat, masculine style, wore stand up collars, soft felt hat without feathers, and preferred waterproofs to luxurious mantles when driving her team of ponies in bad weather.

In declining the Bishopric of Edinburgh, Canon Liddon says that, for one reason: "During a great part of the last year I was seriously out of health, so much so as to be obliged to give up my regular occupations nearly altogether; and, although by God's mercy, and as a consequence of the long rest which the doctors insisted on, I am feeling fairly well now, I have yet to discover how far or how long a time I can return to my old habits of work. Until this is clear, it would appear at least doubtful whether I ought to undertake new and very serious duties." The Canon's delicate constitution gives his friends much solicitude, and he will probably never be a well man.

Lord Hartington, the Liberal leader who has been Mr. Gladstone's opponent in the recent political struggle, is a man of tireless energy, with a remarkable love and capacity for study, and with a most tenacious disposition. He does not court popularity, and affects a manner of indifference and ennui when he comes into contact with people. Oddly enough, most Englishman regard him as a rather light, flippant personage, who prefers the race track to politics, and sport of any kind to patriotism. This is entirely a false view of the man, whose life is unselfishly devoted to work and high principle, and who rivals Lord Salisbury in attention to the details of any business.

General Adam Badeau, whose acquaintance with English society is as close as that of any American, writes of Queen Victoria, who, he thinks, has lived a sad life: "The Queen of England exhibits in her exalted sphere virtues which the humblest man or woman in her realm might imitate, virtues which endear her personally to her subjects, and certainly make them unwilling, in her time, to disturb her throne. Purity, honor, truth, religion, fidelity in all the family relations, constancy to friends, sympathy with all forms of human suffering in whatever class—these are traits on account of which the English people of to day are content to have a Queen."

It is believed that the Prince of Wales is averse to marriages between Englishmen of title and American girls. There are only a limited number of first-class bachelors in the aristocracy of Britain, and the Prince is anxious to have them mate with English girls. But in spite of his wishes, Englishmen continue to marry American women. Even that most eligible of all British bachelors, the Duke of Portland, whom the Prince of Wales is reported to have selected for one of his daughters, is said to be fascinated with a young and beautiful New Yorker. A distinguished Englishman said recently to an American: "You must not be surprised if we object to your girls carrying off our young men. We want the young men for our own girls, and it is only fair that we should have them."

The Critic's Apostrophe.

BY W. F. SMITH

We live, and breathe, and move, and sin, and die;
Which glorifies a being placed on high,
Who holds within the hollow of his hand,
The universe, and, at his slight command,
A demon may become an angel bright,
Or grandsons virtue wrapt in hideous night.
The world itself be held, and time be chained
And stagnancy prevail No one restrained,
His power to do evil or do good;
But all revered the awful fatherhood,
But from what source did this great bein spring?
And why for all celestial worlds, one King?
If one from nothing came, then why not more
Why not one thousand on that mystic shore,
Who rule the movements of this pigmy earth,
And made the laws that gave all worlds the birth?
Why should this God of mercy and of love,
Of power and justice, from his throne above,
Look down, unmoved, upon the world's career,
Upon the sea of love and hope and fear,
On vilest passions of the human mind
Which stab at love and leave the taint behind
On blear-eyed dissipation, sordid wealth.
On leper sighing for the cheek of health?
These evils all, a God of love? endures,
Prescribes the poison, but omits the cures.
Oh, God! My doubting soul blasphemes no Thee,
'Tis that I fail to see thy Majesty.
'Tis that my aching soul inquires with sighs,
If man may live as surely as man dies
Oh, devotees! Oh, men and women blind!
Throw out the Book and what is left behind?
We see a world that spins in empty space,
Which is but one of many, and its race
May run throughout a calendar of ages
And destiny alone, o'er read its pages.
What surety we have is earth-confined,
That other home is only in the mind,
Oh, earth! thy minion is the waiting grave,
Whose arms embrace all there is worth to save.

REPLY OF THE CHRISTIAN,

Brother, my heart doth feel for thee, and burn
With love and sympathy intense. Oh, turn,
And give thy heart to Him who gave thee birth.
To God, the Christ, the ruler of this earth,
The stars the sun, the planets, all that shine;
All these His glories, and His glories thine.
Throw out the Book! Ah, there is where you touch
Our christian dignity; and thus we clutch
With nervous grasp that legacy, that prize.
Whose value is not found beneath the skies.
The fountain of our joys, our highest bliss,
Take all beside, but leave the Christian this.
'Tis sacred to our souls by symbols dear,
By all things good that mortals may revere;
By every drop of red on Calvary's Cross;
By Christian's gain and sinner's awful loss;
By Christ's last breathing, gasping, moral groan;
By all his love to sinful creatures shown;
By that dread passion, where He died for thee.
Ah, brother! start now, ope thine eyes and see.
Bare thy proud heart and God's own rays of light
Shall banish from thy soul the gloom of night.
The monster vice shall clank his wieldy chain,
And love shall bloom within thy heart again.

"Vice Versa."

"Let me see some of your black kid gloves," said Mrs. Snaggs to a clerk in a store. "These are not the latest styles, are they?" when the gloves were produced. "Yes, madam," replied the clerk, "we have had them in stock only two days." "I didn't think they were, because the fashion paper says that black kids have tan stitches, and vice versa. I see the tan stitches but not the vice versa." The clerk explained that vice versa was Latin for seven buttons, and Mrs. Snaggs bought the gloves.

MARKDALE, AUG. .12 1886.

—There is grave fears of a war between Mexico and the United States.

—One and a half inches of snow fell last week in Mount Washington, N. H.

—Lindsey Bros, general merchants of Shelburne, have made an assignment.

—The Creemore Advertiser says there is good prospects for a bountiful harvest in that district.

—The parcel post between Great Britain and Canada. recently introduced, is now in full operation.

—The Salvation Army of Owen Sound are going to erect a large barracks, and have the foundation laid.

—The Germans of Berlin, Ont., are having a grand musical Festival this week, to last three days. They have the town profusely decorated.

—The work of raising the wreck of the steamer Algoma, off Isle Royale, Lake Superior, is progressing favorably. The boiler and engines will be raised almost intact.

—The riots of the past week, and which still continue in Balfast are becoming very serious. Many lives have been lost, and the city is now in a dreadful state of excitement.

—Last Friday the Irishmen of Toronto celebrated the anniversary of the birth of Dan. O'Connell, who first saw the light in the County Kerry 111 years ago that day. The procession was largely attenden.

—The house of Rev. Mr, Carson, the newely appointed incumbent of Waterloo-street Methodist Church, Stratford, was entered a few nights ago and a number of eatables stolen among which was a layer of wedding cake (the gentleman was lately married) some pies, a pudding and a few glass cans of fruit.

On Friday last the first tea train over the C. P. R arrived at Montreal from Vancover; it contained ten car loads, eight of which were farwarded from Brockville to the Eastern States. Four tea ships charted from Japan to Vancover to be forwarded over the C. P. R. this season, the freight of which amounts to $100,000.

—Flesherton mourns, and will not be comforted, for one G. H. Spencer, who has defaulted and departed. The mourners are said to be numerous. Flesherton appears to have more than its share of this sort of grief; only a few years since alphabetical Stoney decampted when a dreadful hu-and-cry was heard. Is it the gullibility of the people, or simply by accident, that our sister village is thus caused to lament more than others? Later.—Since the above was in type D. S. Munro, merchant of that town, has decamped.

Correspondence.

Notice.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

Sir,—We notice in the last sitting of Glenelg council where they moved and carried that the sum of $15 be expended on a certain part of townline near Griffin's Corner, providing Holland council grant the same. Now, Sir, we past out there last week twice—once on foot and once in a rig, and we could not notice any place where it needs $80 for repairs. We know that part of the road is much travelled on Sunday, and people wants to ride smooth to church; but others want a road to drive to church, and market also. If any of our councilmen will go east on same road five miles they can see where it is not safe for either horse or rig to go. I cannot see why such injustice is dealt out. The good road is repaired and the bad road is left to get worse. We hope the cause will be removed. We will have to remove something to get the fair share of taxes returned on our roads.

McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.

When we say McGregor's Speedy Cure is the only perfect cure for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Indigestion and Impure Blood, we are telling plain facts, of which hundreds upon hundreds can testify who have been restored to perfect health by its use. We would therefore advise you strongly if you are a subject of any of the above troubles to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial and be convinced. It is sold in 50c. and $1.00 bottles at R. L. Stephen's Drug Store. 2

Flesherton.

From our own correspondent.

A very interesting and keenly contested game of baseball was played on the agricultural grounds here on Friday afternoon last between the Married and Single men of the town. The game was closed at the end of the seventh innings for each, with the single men one run ahead. The game stood single men 30, married 29. The single men made their best play at the beginning the married men played better at the close, had the nine innings been played they would have left the juniors in the shade.

Jos. Blackburn, Esq., of this village, is absent from home this week attending as a delegate the Grand Lodge of C. O. O. F. which meets this year in the city of London, Ont. When through there he proposes extending his holiday trip through parts of New York state visiting the very interesting and attractive Chataqua grounds and other points of interest.

In Trouble.—A little over twelve months ago Mr. D. S. Munroe (Mr. W. Wright's son-in-law) thought a business life more lucrative than school teaching, consequently gave up his situation of principal teacher of the Flesherton school and bought the stock of W. Wright of this village and opened out business in the old stand. Business appeared to go on well and smooth for a while but lately clouds appeared in the horizen and on Monday last Mr. Munro left town on the morning train. We understand he is somewhere across the line. His creditors being informed of his sudden departure sent forward an assignee to take charge of the business. Up to the time of writing we have no information as to what will be the proceedings.

Master Edwin Richardson and sister, (Miss Maud), Miss Ayers and Miss Hopkins are off this week for a holiday and intend spending some time at the Chataqua assembly.

Destroyed by Fire.—The new and commodious dwelling, very nigh completion, which was being erected by Henry Meldrum, Esq., in Eugenia where she intended to retire to private life, was on Saturday morning about three o'clock, burned to the ground. It was surely the work of some evil hand, and it is a very great pity that such fire bugs could not be discovered and brought to justice. Mr. Meldrum has the sympathy of many friends.

Mr. John Stafford preached for the Babtist people in the Town Hall on Sunday afternoon last. The Rev. Mr. Stephenson, of Molesworth, occupied the pulpit in the Presbyterian church; the pastor, the Rev. Mr. Wilson, being off on his holidays.

Monthly cattle fair day here on Monday last. A number of cattle changed hands.

Mr. Chadwick, the Principal of Stratford Model School, is at present visiting friends in this locality.

Personals.

Mr, J. H. Hunter, of Durham, returned from the old country last week.

Mr Allan McDougall arrived from Fort William last week.

Mr. W. L. Young is spending his holidays at Watford.

Master John McIntyre, of Dundalk, is taking Mr Youngs place in the bank.

Our old friend, Charlie Porter, was in town over Sunday. He has a "sit" in Grip office, Toronto, and is now taking his holidays.

Mrs. Dr. Sproule is visiting at Parry Sound.

Mr. Lucas, father of Mr. Wm. Lucas of this town, called off on his way home from Calgary recently.

John White, of Artemesia, has been visiting at St. Thomas the past two weeks.

Mrs. W. M. Clarke, of Toronto, is visiting friends in this place.

Mr. and Mrs. A. McDougall are visiting in Toronto this week.

Sam Boyd is spending a couple of weeks in Parry Sound.

Mrs. E. Large is visiting in Durham.

Miss Tait, of Brampton, (not Mrs. as per last week's paper) has been rusticating at Mr. Whitby's.

Messrs. R. H. and Tom Benson are on a trip to Manitoulin Island.

Oscar Wright goes this week to Toronto to take a situation in a dry good house.

Rev. Mr. Wilson is away on his holidays; Rev. Mr. Stephenson took his pulpit last Sabbath.

Miss Bull and Miss MacRae, of Durham, are visiting at Mrs. Turner's this week.

Master Willie McFarland left this week on a trip to Chataqua, N. Y.

Miss Melia McFarland is to Belleville visiting.

Mrs. Hamilton and Miss Jessie Bolster of St. Marys. Misses Jesse and Kate Buston, Uxbridge, and Miss Bain of Bay City, Mich., has been the guests of Mrs. J. R. Trimble this week.

Miss Woolsey, of Toronto is the guest of Mrs. Rev. A. Wilson.

BE ON YOUR GUARD.

Examination Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment, at Thomas McConnell's hotel, Bocklyn, on 31st July, 1886.

Members all present. Minutes of last session of council read confirmed. The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows, viz:—J. B. Winter, $35.00, payment for gravel pit; W. P. Carson, $5.00, indigent expences; T. J. Starrett, $25.00 printing and advertising; Michael Reynolds, $45.00, being Salary of R. Miles by order; John Ross, $2.50, road work; G. Richardson, $5.50, payment for road scraper; A. A. McConnel, $26.50, work on 6 & 7 side line con. 6: R. Dunlop, clerk, $25.00, making voters list; J. Mathewson, $20.00, work on town line St. Vincent. H. Hurd, $25.00, to pay men for work on 6 & 7 S. R. con. 3; Yoeman and Little, $125.00, part paymen on building Town Hall; J. Boyd, $27.00, to pay men for work on 9th line; W. Brady, $7.50, work on Saugeen hill, 11th line: George Hill, $10.00, work on 6 & 7 side line, con. 10; Jas. Stinson, $19.50, work on 11th line, south of Saugeen Hill; Alexander Bowles, $10.00, work on 6 & 7 side line, con. 10; George Emery, $24.00, work on town line, Collingwood.

On motion of Messrs. Fawcett and Hurd a grant of $15.00 was made to improve 15 & 16 side line, con. 3.

Alleged grievance in reference to the location of the Walters Falls road, was laid before council, but the council unanimously resolved not to change the location of said road, for the following reasons, viz, that the present location was granted for road purpsoes by the late John Walter; that the road was built at public expence; that the road for many years been kept in repair by statute labour; and that said road is still required and used as a public highway.

Council adjourned until the last Saturday in August next.

Robert Dunlop,
Tp. Clerk

In Bad Humor

A year ago my head was covered with sores and the eruption coverd my whole face also, and spread even until the back of my hands were sore. I became weak and ill. Finding no cure I tried Burdock Blood Bitters. Two bottles perfectly cured me." Statement of Miss Minnie Stephenson, Cocagne, N, B.

On The Rise

"Leaves have their time to fall," says the poet, but the Wild Strawberry leaves are on the rise just now, being utilized in such an enormous quantities in making Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry—the infallible remedy for Cholera Morbus, Dirrahœa and other summer complaints.

Enterance Examination.

We give below the list of the successful candidates at the Enterance Examination in this county, with the number of marks taken. In Owen Sound there were 65 girls and 48 boys at the examination, of whom 24 girls and 10 boys passed. In Durham there were 15 girls and 14 boys, of whom 4 girls and 8 boy spassed.

Death Dealt.

During the storm Monday afternoon, as George Whittaker was making his way to shelter from the rain, he was struck and instantly killed by lightening. The deceased had been plowing in section 11-121-72, for A. Strong. Perceiving the storm approaching he unharnessed his three horses and proceeded to Mr. Crerar's where he was boarding. He was within forty yards of the house when the lightening struck him, killed him instantly, also the horse he was riding and the other along side. The family of Mr. Crerar witnessed the bolt decend with its fatal results. They immediately proceeded to where Mr. Whittaker lay, but life was extinct. The only marks of the deathly messenger was a very slight dislocation on the right side of he neck. The two horses fell at the side of the deceased. Mr. Whittaker was about twenty-three years of age, and unmarried. He came to Edmunds county in 1885, from Plankinton, with his father, Arthur Whittaker and owned a pre-emption on the nw¼ 18-121-72, and a home stead on the ne¼ 30-121-72. The deceased was a young man of exemplary habits and highly respected by all who knew him. His death has cast a gloom over the neighborhood in which he resided. Deceased was born in Perth county, Ontario, Canada, Feb. 10, 1863. He leaves a father (in Edmunds county) and a mother, brother and sister in his native land. The funeral service were conducted by Rev. C. H. Conway, pastor of the M. E. Church, at the residence of his father in 121-72, near where he was buried, The very large attendance at the funeral evinced the high esteem in which the deceased was held.—[Boscoe Magnet.

Poultry.

Fowls prefer, as well as need, good pure, cold water, especially in warm, sultry weather.

Young chickens may be allowed the run of the garden, the mother being cooped, and the havoc they make among insects is an excellent thing.

Inflammation of the egg organs is generally caused by overfeeding. Eating the seeds of grapes, or grain affected with ergot, is said to produce this inflammation. Symptoms: the hen going into the nest without laying; having a straddling gait; laying shellless eggs; dropping eggs from the perch or elsewhere. Treatment: one grain of calomel and one-twelfth of a grain of tartar emetic, given in oat or barley meal. If necessary, a second dose may be given.

When a dealer wishes to add a knock-down argument to all he has said about the merits of the breed of fowls he has for sale, he urges that their flesh is of extra quality. Now there is no breed of fowls under the sun, the chickens of which, if well fed all their lives, will not be tender, juicy and toothsome if killed before they are too old. And there is no breed that will be plump, tender and fit for the table unless fed thus. Mind, we do not say that there is no difference at all in breeds, but we say, that of the two things, the breed and feeding, the latter is most important.

The white of an egg has proved to be the most efficacious remedy for burns. Seven or eight successive applications of this substance will soothe the pain and effectually exclude the burn from the air. This simple remedy seems preferable to collodion, or even cotton. Extraordinary stories are told of the healing properties of a new oil, which is easily made from the yolks of hens' eggs. The eggs are first boiled hard, and the yolks are then removed, crushed and placed over a fire, where they are carefully stirred until the whole substance is just on the point of catching fire, when the oil separates and may be poured off. One yolk will yield nearly two teaspoonfuls of oil. It is in general use in South Russia as a means of curing cuts, bruises and scratches.

I think the lime-dust treatment the best of all cures for gapes in chickens. It is cheap, simple and effective. I put a whole breed of chickens in a peck measure with a bag over the top. A barrel partly filled with air-slaked lime, as dry as powder, was turned on its side and the lime was stirred with a stick until the whole barrel was filled with lime floating in the air. The chickens were put in this, with the bag over the mouth of the barrel. They were put into the dust three times, not more than a minute each time. They should be kept in the measure all the time. We let one breed stay in too long and lost five out of seven. The windpipes of the dead chickens were found more than half filled with gape worms, which made it more difficult for them to breathe. My little son, seven years old, treats his chickens in this way successfully. The lime can be slaked with water and then allowed to dry so as to powder. A lot of lime thus prepared will last for years for this purpose.

Timely Suggestions.

G. J. Kremer, Cape May county, New Jersey, has been very successful in breaking a cow of the habit of sucking herself by painting the teats with mucilage and then dusting them with pure capsicum (red pepper). It will not sicken the cow, but she will be entirely satisfied with one taste of those teats.

At this season of the year pruning defensive hedges, as, for instance, osage orange, and honey locust, is a measure of economy. The immature shoots are now easily cut, and the work may in consequence be performed in at least half the time required when the wood is fully ripened. Summer pruning has a tendency to weaken growth, which is much to be desired in a full-grown hedge. The second crop of young shoots are smaller and more numerous, thus very materially adding to the compactness of the mass.

Horses hard at work in warm weather need water frequently. If a handful of oatmeal is thrown in a pailful of water, and one or two swallows given two or three times between morning and noon, or noon and night, it will stimulate them to renewed exertions and keep them fresh all day. This sort of stimulation has no bad after effects, as does that which men often take in the harvest field. The work of harvesting with self-binders is now as severe for teams as cutting grain was in the old times for men when done by hand-labor, and it is a time when grain feed for horses has been mostly used up. With the labor thus thrown on the teams they need proportionate good care.

We would repeat our advice to farmers not to sleep in the same undergarments worn during the day. It is more than worth the trouble to take off the undershirt as soon as the day's labor is finished, rub the body thoroughly with a harsh towel, and put on underclothes which are perfectly dry.

One of the most successful dairymen we know keeps 100 cows. He feeds his cattle on corn fodder, cut when in blossom, bound and set up until cured, or until winter, when it is removed to the barn. He gets seven tons of this dry fodder to the acre and claims it is as good as the best of hay.

Wheat continues to be plenty and cheap. Let us repeat that every farmer has a good home market in his chicken yard. There is no better and no cheaper feed for growing chickens or laying hens than your $1 wheat. Turn it into eggs and chickens and get $2 a bushel and over every time.

A Preference for Long Nights.

"Oh, isn't it a lovely night, Adolphus? Just fancy how delightful the nights must be in the Orient! The azure blue sky, the perfume of the flowers, the soft tinkling—"

"I tell you, Miranda dear, I prefer the nights they have in Alaska. They're just immense."

"Immense, Adelph?"

"Yes, for courting. They're so long, you know."

A Guelph tin peddler and his horse were attacked by a swarm of bees belonging to a prospective customer and severely stung.

"WHERE IS MY CHILD?"

Details of the Cannibal Affair in Tatnall County, Georgia.

The full account of the Tatnall county, Georgia, cannibal affair is as follows: A few days ago some of the colored people in the lower end of the county had a picnic. They had engaged as cook and overseer of the culinary department an old negro woman. Great preparations had been made for the festivities, and the sport ran high. It was a hungry band that gathered for dinner and awaited the summons. It was served at last, and the merry-makers fell to with a will. Hardly had the edibles begun to disappear when fell upon the boisterous group. One had been served with a piece of meat that clung to a small jointed bone. It did not look like anything he had ever seen come from a frying-pan before, and he showed it to his neighbor. The other looked at it attentively for a moment. "It is the finger of a child," he said.

There was a sensation which quickly spread into a panic. A hasty examination of other plates were made and pieces of meat that were evidently human flesh were held upon forks and gazed at by the now thoroughly excited negroes. They gazed at each other in a frightened way, and then there was a simultaneous break for the cabin, in which the cook had prepared the meal. She met them at the door, brandishing a large knife. A wild light—like that of a maniac—gleamed from her eyes. The crowd paused as the knife was flourished over their heads, all but one, a woman, who rushed forward with a shriek, "My child; what have you done with my child?" There was no answer from the old cook. "I left it here in her charge," cried the excited mother, appealing to the friends about her.

MORE FINGERS WERE FOUND,

"WHERE IS MY CHILD?

She has killed it." With fiendish yells the dusky army, fired by her agonizing cries, bore down upon the cook and in spite of her frantic struggles tore the knife from her grasp. Evidences of the murder were about them, there was blood on the floor and the table was smeared with it. The living child was not here to be seen, but in its place was a portion of a little human body which had been TAKEN FROM THE OVEN.

Pieces of flesh had been carved from it. The excitement among the searchers was of the wildest kind. They tore everything to pieces in the cabin in their fury. It was plain enough that the old woman had murdered the child there, and then cooked half of the body. Where was the other half? There were drops of blood across the floor. Someone, less excited than the rest, followed the tell-tale trail. It led to a barrel just outside and behind the shanty. A shout informed his companions that the missing portion had been found. They rushed out to find him pulling it from the barrel, where it

HAD BEEN SALTED DOWN.

Then there was a general cry for vengeance, and the frenzied shouts rang through the trees. Some suggested lynching, but there was no rope. Others wanted to hack her in pieces with the same knife that took the life of the little child. Still another cried "burn her," and the cry was taken up and repeated until all the excited crowd were crying "burn her, burn her." She fought like a wild beast. She crouched, she struggled, she used her teeth and hands. But her captors were too many to cope with successfully, and she was led out to the slaughter kicking and shrieking. They dragged her to a tree and

BOUND HER TIGHTLY TO IT.

Then they heaped brush around her, and fired it in a dozen places. A circle of fire surrounded her, and from the midst of it she begged for mercy one moment and shrieked her imprecations the next; and around her the excited negroes watching the flames as they scorched her flesh and seized upon her clothing and enveloped her in a sheet of fire. It was a scene too terrible to paint, but not one of them took their eyes from her until she fell into the ashes a blackened corpse. The woman was undoubtedly insane.

Social Importance of the Fireside.

The fireside is a seminary of infinite importance. It is important because it is universal, and because the education it bestows, being woven in with the woof of childhood, gives form and color to the whole texture of life. There are few who can receive the honours of a college, but all are graduates of the hearth. The learning of the university may fade from the recollection, its classics may moulder in the halls of memory; but the simple lessons of home, enamelled upon the heart of childhood, defy the rust of year, and outline the more mature but less vivid picture of after years. So deep, so lasting, indeed are the impressions of early life, that you often see a man in the imbecility of age holding fresh in his recollection the events of childhood, while all the wide space between that and the present hour is a blasted and forgotten waste. You have, perchance, seen an old and half-obliterated portrait and in the attempt to have it cleaned and restored you may have seen it fade away, while a brighter and more perfect picture, painted beneath, is revealed to view. This portrait first drawn upon the canvas is no inapt illustration of youth; and though it may be concealed by some after-design, still the original traits will shine through the outward picture giving it tone while fresh, and surviving it in decay. Such is the fireside—the great institution of Providence for the education of man.

"Dinna Be Fear't!"

The following incident is said to have occurred at a recent volunteer encampment. On a misty night a sentinel walked his allotted number of paces with martial steps, all unconscious of danger. But a stealthy tread strikes on his ear. He stops short in his march, brings his rifle to the charge, and in a stern voice demands—"Who goes there?" From out the gloom comes a shrill, calm voice—"Dinna be fear't sodger; it's jist me!" as an old woman, with a basket over her arm, confronts the astonished warrior.

"COME IN WILLIAM."

A Charitable Road Agent's Little Scheme.

In 1866, which was almost before the Canada Pacific Railroad was thought of, the writer of this was encamped on Beaver River, in the Canadian North-West well up in the foothills of the Rockies. Six of us, who were prospecting, hunting, and taking things pretty easy for July weather, occupied a large cabin which had been built and deserted some time before. From this central point small parties branched out and were gone for several days at a time. We had no trouble with anything or anybody until, after we had occupied the place seventeen or eighteen days, a bad spell of weather came on and drove all the detached parties in for shelter. We were well heeled in the matter of firearms, and there was something like among the six. For cook we had an old soldier who had been discharged from the regular army after long service.

A THOUSAND DOLLARS IN GOLD

One morning, it being the third day of the bad weather, and the rain still falling, Joe, our cook, went down to the forks of the Beaver to meet a canoe which we expected up with provisions. The door of the cabin was shut, and there was a bit of fire on the hearth at which some of the men were moulding bullets, and over which a kettle of pork and beans was boiling. Two of the gang were playing cards, and a third was reading, while I was examining some mineral specimens. In this state of affairs the door softly opened, and in walked a young man about 23 years of age. He was smooth-faced, red-cheeked, and had such a smile on his phiz that the sight of him would have set anyone to grinning. He looked from one to the other, as if to make sure that all were present, and then stepped back and opened the door and called.

"Come in, William, they are at home."

A short, stout, ugly-faced man of forty pushed his way in, shut the door, and stood with his back to it. That he was a hard pill no one could doubt after looking into his face; that he meant business was apparent from his having a revolver in either hand. Had

SOME ONE YELLED "INDIANS!"

I think the six of us, each with a revolver ready to shoot, would have been out doors in twenty seconds. Here we all sat as dumb as oysters and as helpless as snails, for we realized that it was a "stand up."

"Now, gents," said the young man shewing his white teeth as he smiled, "I want to raise a few hundred dollars for an orphan asylum in the States. I shall expect each one of you to contribute. If any gentleman should so far forget himself as to pull his gun, my friend William, who shoots both-handed, will promptly attend to his case."

It was only after this little speech that we fully comprehended what was going on. William kept every man of us under his eye, with his two pistols ready for service, and we were cowed. I know that the average man will feel contempt for us and assert that he would have done this or that had he been one of the six, but he is mistaken. Under like circumstances, unless he was a fool, he would have tamely submitted. That red-cheeked boy, as we were not long in concluding, was a road agent named Col. Lee, and the man William had justly earned

THE NAME OF "BLOODY BILL."

Only six months before they had held up the Mariposa stage, in which one of our number was a passenger.

"Come, gents, time is money with us," said the Colonel as we sat staring at him. "Here's my cap, who chips in the first hundred?"

He held it toward me, and I dropped in four twenties, which was all I had. The next man came down with $200; the next with $150, and by the time the last had contributed the Colonel had $800 in his cap. In transfering it to his pocket he counted the money, and as he put his cap on his head he said:

"This will go a good way toward making the little orphans happy. I don't want anything else, gentlemen, and we will now take our leave. I would advise you not to follow, though of course you can act your own pleasure. I wish you good morning."

The two backed out and shut the door, which swung out instead of in. Scarcely had it closed before we made a rush, but they were still too smart for us. They had braced a log against it, and there was only one window in the house. Before anyone had volunteered to crawl out of that the two fellows had made good their escape.

In going away they met our cook on his way back, and the Colonel handed him a flask of whiskey and asked him to present it to us with his compliments. We took the trail and pursued it for several hours, but we had seen the last of them.

Some Famous Names.

Cicero is a mighty name with classical scholars, and tomes have been written for and against "Ciceronianism," but the orator's fame reaches its fullest blossom when modern Europe, following the Italians, calls a guide a "cicerone." Cæsar is one of the proudest names of all antiquity, but as a name its highest glorification is reached in the present day when it serves as the title of the Emperors of Germany, Austria and Russia, and as the Oriental designation of our Queen and Empress of India. The name of the old Roman patriot Cincinnatus is now best known as the name of the city which is the great pork emporium of the United States. "The curse of Cromwell on you!" in the mouths of ignorant Munster peasants keeps alive in remote hamlets a name which now lingers as a mere phrase with its speakers.

The story goes that the Duke of Wellington once "chaffed" Lord Brougham as a man who at one time bade fair to go down to posterity as a famous reformer of the laws and enlightenment of the people, but who, after all would owe his renown to the name of the vehicle which had been christened after him. Lord Brougham retorted by saying to the Duke that his name, which promised to descend to after times as the hero of a hundred battles and the liberator of Europe, was to survive as the designation of a kind of boots. Sir Robert Peel's name is similarly embalmed in "bobby" and "peeler." Not a few names, associated with the progress of geographical discovery are destined to immortality in the current speech of the world, while the instructed classes alone appreciate the historical reference in each case. The great American continent in this way has known its name from Amerige Vespucci; the names Magellan, Horn and Cook will live in place-names when the record of their discoveries is known only to profound antiquaries; and Baffin, Davis and Hudson, and many others, will in all probability prove verbally eternal. Alexander the Great is best remembered through the towns founded in his name, and Constantinople and Adrianople echo the names of emperors well-known only to the learned. Pennsylvania securely enshrines the name of William Penn, Maryland is a perpetual monument to Queen Mary; and Virginia entombs Raleigh's compliments to the "Maiden Queen," her sister.

Machiavellism and Chauvinism are rapidly acquiring a meaning colored by no personal reference; and peculiar views in theology and philosophy have elevated particular names to the rank of household words, and caused them to be spoken of by hundreds who have neither interest in nor knowledge of their biographies. Erastus, Irving, Swedenborg, Glass, not to say Calvin and Luther, may be reckoned in such a category. Plato, Pyrrho and Malthus owe their familiar fame more to one special for which a name had to be coined from their own than to the general weight of their intellectual significance. The name of St. Philibert is best known, both to the religious and irreligious, as the name of the nuts which are supposed to be ripe on the 22nd day of August, the day sacred to him. Highland susceptibilities may be tender, but scarcely any one will deny that the name of the clan Macadam—presumably the oldest of even Highland families—has most imperial significance from one of its members' improvements in roadmaking; as also that of the clan Macintosh, from the waterproofs "of that ilk."

Present Need.

More gentleness, more sympathy, more consideration, more knowledge of character, more real respect for one another, are needed in all the relations of life. Something of the old chivalry needs to be revived. Let there be more deference of husband to wife, of brother to sister, of parent to child, and homes will become more blessed. Let there be more deference of employers to employed, of wealth to poverty, and many social problems will be settled. Let the strong defer to the weak, the healthy to the sick, the wise to the unlearned, the skilful to the unskilful, the righteous to the erring, and the roots of equity will be strengthened, and the rich fruits of human love and happiness will abound.

A Short Outfit.

When Ethalinda De Wiggs visited her cousins in the country last week, one of them said:—

"Linda, don't you want to help me pick peas this morning?"

"I'd like to, dear," replied Ethalinda, "but I am not properly dressed for picking peas."

"Why, how is that?"

"I forget to bring a pea-jacket with me.'

THE CAPITAL OF CANADA

The Spot Where Queen Victoria Put Her Finger.

A correspondent of the Detroit Free Press thus describes the Dominion Capital: The years can almost be counted on the fingers of two hands that have elapsed since the day when a map of the British Possessions in North America was spread out for the inspection of Her Majesty Victoria, by the Grace of God Queen of Great Britain and Ireland and Empress of India. The august lady had been left the task of a capital for the Dominion of Canada. Mindful of the mutual ambitions and jealousies of the great cities of this Anglian realm—Montreal, Toronto, Kingston and Quebec—she dropped her finger on a point on the map that seemed to her the best compromise between the four, and that was the junction of three rivers.

"What is there?" she is said to have asked.

"The little hamlet of Bytown, your majesty."

"Let that be the capital of my Canadian dominions."

So spoken so done. But there were those who mocked the regal selection. Bytown was removed from the center of population to a howling wilderness and on a stream whose impeded navigation, Bytown seemed to have no future. But time demonstrated the wisdom of Victoria's choice. Bytown, or Ottawa, has grown to be not only an important, but a very busy city. It is located on that great artery, the Canadian Pacific. It possesses an unusually beautiful location, and is fast becoming a noted summer resort. From the touch of the Queen's finger Ottawa sprang by magic from a straggling hamlet to a handsome city of more than 30,000 souls.

At first sight the capital of the United Canadas has a decided tendency to make a person tired. The village of the Canadian Pacific depot is especially wearisome. It has all the appearance of a typical woods lumber town. The buildings are roughly knocked together and daubed with different pigments. The city seems to end after two blocks of this, in an abrupt bluff. But it is after the ascent of this bluff that the city proper breaks upon the view, a thing of exceeding beauty. However it is, there is no prettier Canadian city. It may be said that the streets are almost too narrow, and that there is too frequent an attempt to architecturally aggrandize stuffy little buildings.

The Parliament buildings stand on an imposing bluff on the south bank of the Ottawa River. The location is admirable and commanding. They front on Wellington street, one of the city's principal thoroughfares, and at the back look out upon the expanse of the Ottawa River from the Rideau to the Chaudiere Falls. The architecture of the building differs from that of any structure in the United States of like character. The design is Italian Gothic, and the material used in their construction is cream-color and red sandstone. They cost $3,000,000, and furnish a very elaborate and commodious headquarters for the government of 5,000,000 of people. The buildings, which include the departmental offices, occupy three sides of a square and face the principal street of the city. The Rideau Canal runs through a series of locks at the side of the grounds.

In the pretty suburb of New Edinburgh, across the Rideau River, is the home of the Governor-General, Rideau Hall, whose present Marquis of Lansdowne administers the government as the viceroy of Victoria. The citizens of Ottawa are very proud of this shadowy semblance of royalty. They were prouder still of what some were pleased to denominate the preceding "reign" of her Royal Highness the Princess Louise and her consort, the Marquis of Lorne. Lansdowne does not have enough governing to do to trouble his rest at night. Sir John A. Macdonald relieves him of most of the burthens. He is a very blue-blooded figurehead and that is all, but he costs Canada the pleasing stipend of $50,000 per annum besides the maintenance of Rideau Hall.

Looking to the northward from old Barracks Hill, the rocky promontory on which the Parliament buildings stand, the eye crosses the broad Ottawa River, the Ile Fringe of settlement on the opposite bank, and then spans a long vista of green and almost virgin country that stretches away for many miles to the feet hills of the Height of Land. It is a beautiful landscape. The land all lies in the Province of Quebec. It is an unbroken wilderness, except for the lumber camps of the Upper Gatineau and an occasional very small group of French squatters. Communication with these remote camps and petty settlements is very difficult, as may be illustrated by the fact that just the other day a horrible murder in one of the Gatineau lumber camps reached the Ottawa newspapers about two weeks old. It is related in Ottawa that the few people in this expanse of country only pay taxes about once in five years and then at the earnest solicitation of a militia company sent up from the capital.

Ottawa has no tributary farming country worth speaking of, although the railroads are developing that portion of Ontario north and west of the city very rapidly.

The city, now the seat of Britain's American demain, may yet see itself the capital of a mighty rival of our own greatest government on earth. The Canadian Pacific has opened up to her an empire of timber, coal, grazing and grain country. It has already knit the people of Canada into a harmonious whole. There are dreamers about the Parliament buildings who confidently expect to one day hear a Canadian Pacific conductor shout: "Ottawa! Change cars for New Orleans, New York, Upernavik, Hudson Bay, San Francisco, Sitka and Pekin!"

French statistics just published contain alarming information concerning the increase of crime among children of both sexes. The demoralization of the young idea has evidently reached a point in France which demands the serious attention of all interested in the future welfare of the country. The number of offenders under 16 years of age has augmented from 2 235 to to 5 579 for boys, and from 418 to 908 for girls. From 16 to 21 years of age the number of criminals has increased from 5 936 to 20,489 for boys, and from 1,046 to 2 839 for girls. The ratio of crimes among offenders under age has therefore considerably more than doubled during the past five years. The statistics register for the first time numerous cases of suicide committed by children.

Animals' Medicine

A French physician and savant says that animals are as good practitioners of medicine as a majority of the human species, and that in hygiene man may take a lesson from them. Elephants, stags, birds and ants wash themselves or bathe. Some animals get rid of parasites by the use of dust, mud, or clay. Those suffering from fever restrict their diet, keep quiet, seek darkness and airy places, drink water, and sometimes plunge into it.

If a dog loses his appetite, he eats "dog's grass." Sheep when ill seek out certain herbs, and puss also finds an emetic or a purgative in a certain species of grass or herbs.

When a dog is constipated, he eats fatty substances with avidity. An animal suffering from rheumatism keeps in the sun. The warrior ants have ambulances, and when an investigator cut the antennæ of an ant, other ants covered the wound with a transparent fluid, secreted from their mouths.

A wounded chimpanzee stops the bleeding of a wound by placing leaves and grass on the wound. A dog on being stung on the muzzle by a viper, plunged his head repeatedly for several days in running water, and recovered.

A sporting dog was run over by a carriage. During three weeks in winter he remained lying in a brook, where his food was taken to him, and he also recovered.

A terrier dog hurt its right eye. He remained lying under a counter, avoiding light and heat, although he had previously been in the habit of keeping close to the fire. He rested, abstained from food, licked his paw, and applied it to the wounded eye.

Seeking Medical Relief.

It was formerly the habit of Irish peasants to go the rounds of the houses of the gentry when afflicted with any disorder which did not yield to their own rough-and-ready treatment.

A retired army surgeon, having fixed his residence in the south of Ireland, was often visited by the neighboring peasants, anxious to avail themselves of his good-nature and professional skill. The accounts they gave of their complaints were grotesquely graphic.

One applicant for relief described himself as having "a great billin' in his treat, and his heart was as if ye had it in yer hand, and were squeezin' it."

Said another patient: "Savin' yer Honer's presence, me shtomach has gone to the weasht of me ribs."

A third was "throubled wid conthrary spits tangled round his heart,"—in other words, with an accumulation of phlegm. Sometimes the connection between the disorder and the demanded remedy was not obvious.

"Please, marm," said a ragged gossoon, applying to a lady, "me mither's lying down, and I want some tay and sugar."

"Please your Honer," whined a barefooted woman, "I'm in great distress. I fell down yesterday, and bruk five of me ribs under me right breast, an' for the blessing of God, could ye spare me a thrifle?"

One liberal gentleman was constantly visited by girls who begged for a "dhrop of castor oil," to ease some internal malady. When, however, one damsel asked him to put some scent in the castor oil, he inferred that she was intending to apply it to her hair.

A Faithful Animal.

A very strange and pathetic occurrence has just come under observation at Tiffin. Last October little Freddy Luiz, son of Mr. and Mrs. Luiz of Tiffin, was taken suddenly ill and died. He was a kind and loving boy, and had for a pet a little terrier dog, to which he was very kind. After his death the dog showed signs of great grief, crying and howling piteously. Since the death of their loved son the parents have regularly visited his grave and strewed flowers and dropped tears upon the little mound. The dog always accompanied them, and at the grave would show unmistakable signs of grief. A few days ago the family visited the grave and the dog did not return home with them. Late in the evening the superintendent of the cemetery, Mr. Clouser, saw the dog lying on his young master's grave howling piteously and tried to drive him away, but he would not go. He laid there until the middle of the next day, when he was finally driven away with great effort.

He'd Vote the Way His Master Did.

Old Tam Murray, who was well known for his Radical opinions, was interviewed at the last general election by the laird's wife, who was canvassing for the local Tory candidate, and great curiosity was experienced by Tam's comrades as to what reception the lady would meet with. "Weel, how gat ye on wi' my leddy?' was the first question asked at Tam, as he presented himself at the smithy on the evening of the interview. "Oh, brawly," said Tam, with a twinkle in his eye: "I'm thinkin' there'll be a pheasant up my way the morn." "Ay, man! what said she? Was she askin' ye to vote for Sir George?" "Ay, an' I pleased the body gran', for I tell't her I was to vote the way the maister voted. Ye see the maister'll vote for the man that he likes best, an' I'll vote for the man that I like best, an' that's votin' the same way as the maister does, isn't it?"

Orders have been given to the Montreal police force to stop the circulation of all the advertising "dollar bills," and to confiscate all those found in the possession of any one. Merchants found issuing them will be prosecuted.

Citizens of Vancouver, B. C., are complaining of the selection of the site of the new postoffice, which they say has been placed far away from the business part of the city in obedience to the wishes of some real estate brokers.

A codfish caught by the schooner Lightfoot recently, near Kantville, was found, on being cut open, to contain a cent and a portion of a human scalp. At the same place this spring a fish was caught with a button embedded in its head.

Near Peterboro a young lady was standing on a wharf saying good bye to some friends who were leaving by a steamboat. A spark from a smokestack set her dress on fire. The flames were extinguished by a young man, who grasped the blazing calico in his hands.

At Greer Valley, Hugh Macdonald was searching the bush for his missing four-year-old son. Looking down from a bridge which spans the River Beaudette, he was horrified to see the boy's body lying at the bottom of the stream. He plunged in and brought the body to shore, but life was extinct.

The other day Mr. Geo. Luxton, of Peterboro' County, after lighting the fire in the stove left his aged wife who was crippled with rheumatism, and had lost her voice, sitting in a chair a few feet from the stove. Returning in a few minutes afterwards he found his wife enveloped in flames lying on the floor. She died a few hours afterwards.

Mr. Justice Gray recently gave a decision in the Supreme Court at Victoria which practically settles the right of the Canadian Pacific Railway to build the road between Port Moody and Coal Harbour. The consent of the property-owners is not required. All that the company is bound to do is to pay the landowners the compensation provided by statute.

Lightning played some queer pranks with the residences of Mr. A. J. Fortier, Town Clerk of Pembroke. It entered by a window, broke several holes in the wall, and went across a bedroom breaking a large mirror. On the ground floor it passed through the parlour, cutting away part of Miss Fortier's shoe, and burning a leg off the piano. In the dining room it went through the wall, burning a picture. Mr. Fortier was standing at the back door and lost part of his boot. His son was sitting by the window when the lightning entered, and although the sash and glass was smashed he was unharmed.

A Prediction Fulfilled.

The Emperor Napoleon III. was by nature very superstitious. The following anecdote was related in 1864, long years before the fulfilment of the prediction that it contains. Napoleon III. one day took it into his head to consult the celebrated chiromancien, Desbarolles, who died the other day at a very advanced age. Desbarolles told him some curious facts respecting his character, his tastes, and his past life. "Now," quoth the Emperor, "tell me something about the future. Where will my death take place, and by what malady shall I die?" Desbarolles hesitated for a moment. "Sire," he said at length, "you have asked me for a frank response, and I will reply to you frankly. You are destined to breathe your last on English soil, and you will perish by the knife." Very curiously was the prediction fulfilled, though the knife proved to be not that of an assassin, but that of a surgeon.

Ha!

When trade grew slack, and bills fell due, the tradesman's face grew long and blue; his dreams were troubled through the night with sheriffs' bailiffs all in sight. At last his wife unto him said, "Rise up at once, get out of bed, and get your paper, ink, and pen, and say these words unto all men: 'My goods I wish to sell to you, and to your wives and daughters too; my prices are so very low, that all will buy before they go.'" He did as his good wife advised, and in the paper advertised. Crowds came and bought of all he had, his bills were paid, his dreams were glad; and he will tell you to this day how well did printer's ink repay. He boasteth, with a knowing wink, how he was saved by printer's ink.

SUMMER CHILLS.

"Ah," said Mrs. Dacenberry, with a sigh, "a woman's work is never done." "Neither," rejoined Mr. Dacenberry, with a brutal laugh, "is this pie, my dear."

A little girl lately wrote to her friend: "Yesterday a little baby sister arrived, and papa is on a journey. It was but a piece of luck that mamma was at home to take care of it."

The pretty maiden fell overboard, and her lover leaned over the side of the boat as she rose to the surface, and said: "Give me your hand." "Please ask papa," she said, as she sank for the second time.

Cole: "Say, old fellow, what you got your winter overcoat on to-day for?" Beggs: "Well, I've got the chills, and my wife thought it a good time to shake the moths out."

Schulze: "And how do you like the parrot I sent you?" Muller: "It was a bit tough." S.: "What! Have you eaten it, then? Why, the creature could talk!" M.: "Well, why didn't it say so, then."

Lightning struck the residence of W. H. Tears, last week, and demolished it entirely. Those who have tears to shed will please send the shed to Mr. Tears, until he can build a new house.

A Frenchman thinks the English language is very tough. "Dere is 'look out,'" he says "which is to put out your head and see, and 'look out' which is to haul in your head and not for to see—just contrairie."

At a flower show two young and talkative ladies were discussing their reasons for their fondness for particular flowers. "Oh! I do love heliotropes," said one. "They are so fragrant. They smell just like vanilla ice cream!"

The words selected for an examination, with their definitions, were "aqueduct, a conductor," and "effervesce, to work." One of the sentences handed in was: "My father is an aqueduct, and has to effervesce very hard."

"Was Sue Fitzpercy at the social last night?" asked the high school girl's mother. "Yes," replied Mildred, "and she took the initiative on leaving." "That's just like that girl; she'll take everything she can get her hands on."

Husband to Young Wife—I couldn't help being so late last night, dear. You mustn't chide me, love. We should not quarrel, for you know you and I are one, now. Young Wife—We are one, are we? Well, if we are I must have been fuller'n a goose last night without knowing it.

A story is told of a Scotch wife, shortly after the nuptial knot had been tied, mildly expostulating with her husband for indulging in two tumblers of whiskey-toddy just before going to bed. "My dear Agnes, a glass o' whisky-toddy makes another man o' me." "But, my dear William, you take two." "Ay, Agnes, that gangs to the ither man."

"Wonder what I'd better name him," said Johnny, thoughtfully, as he watched the new dapple colt drinking eagerly in the brook. "I'll tell you," said his comrade Willie, eagerly. "Call him Preserved Fruit." "Why Preserved Fruit?" "Because," replied Willie, "he's such a dry dapple."

"Well, John," said the judge to a pig-tailed Celestial, "what can I do for you?" "Want to getee name changed." "What's your name now?" "Sing Sing. No goode. Too muchee aldelman. Getee changed to Walkie Twicee." "To Warble Twice?" "Yep. Allee samee Sing Sing."

Mrs. Stillpeer: "And so you really sail to-morrow for Europe, Mrs. Newlyrich?" Mrs. Newlyrich: "Yes, everything is ready." Mrs. Stillpeer: "Has your husband obtained a letter of credit yet?" Mrs. Newlyrich: "Oh! we shan't ask for credit. John expects to pay cash down for everything."

"Does your husband write his own stories or does he keep an amanuensis?" "He does all his writing himself." "I should think he would find it so much easier to have an amanuensis, and he is well able to afford one." "That's true, but he is of so genial and kindly a disposition that he could never dictate to anyone."

He (in the waltz)—You told me you would send an answer to my proposal by letter. She (blushingly)—And I did. He—Then I have not received it. Ah! do not trifle with me, sweetest Angelina. She—I have no wish to trifle with you. I sent my answer. It is strange you have not received it. I sent it yesterday noon by a messenger boy. He—By a messenger-boy? Oh, then, I'll get it to-morrow. Thanks for the explanation. You have relieved my mind greatly.

"Mr. Schmidt," said a German gentleman, yesterday, as he entered a Berlin merchant's office. "Mr. Schmidt, I haf der schmall pox." "My Goodness! Mr. Schneider!" was the hurried reply, "don't come here," and the clerks rapidly disappeared in various directions. "Vot's der madder mit you fellows, anyhow?" pursued Schneider. "I haf der schmall pox full of butter oud in mine wagen, vet der Mrs. Schmidt ortered last week already."

At the Temple Place tensorial trimmer's, Spicer had just settled himself in the chair for a summer short cut, when the artist in attendance threw over him a calico apron, on which were pictured innumerable little greyhounds. "That is very appropriate," said Seth. "Vy do you call ze little dogs appropriate, Mr. Spizare?" asked the hair cutter, as he tucked the apron into his victim's neck until his eyes bulged. "Because," gasped Spicer, "greyhounds are good to catch the hare." Such a silence fell upon the room that the milliner next door looked in to see if anybody had dyed.

"Mamie," said a grammar school girl to a member of the graduating class, "have you finished your essay?" "Er—no," replied Mamie, "but I have commenced it, and I wish the awful thing was in Halifax." "What is the subject?" "The curse of Slang." "Gracious! Isn't that a difficult subject to write?" "Difficult! Well I should giggle. I'll have to hump myself to get it finished in time for the Commencement, and I've a good notion to let it slide. I might shut up the Professor's optic by pleading illness, but I'm not that sort of a hairpin. But come, walk up into my room and look at my stunning graduating harness. It'll paralyze you!"

YOUNG FOLKS.

Queen Elizabeth.

Queen Elizabeth was the daughter of the wicked Henry the Eighth and of Annie Boleyn. Elizabeth was about three years old when she was left motherless. On the death of her sister Mary she ascended to the throne, and amid joyful acclamations was proclaimed Queen.

As the grand procession moved along the queen was very kind and gracious, and the poor came up to her carriage, with messages for her, and when any one wanted to speak to her, she would stop the carriage. The coronation took place at Westminster. The crown was placed upon her head amidst great shouting and rejoicing. Elizabeth placed a ring upon her own finger, to signify that she was espoused to the realm of England, and that ring she wore for forty years.

Elizabeth was a fine scholar, and in many respects her reign was prosperous, but she was very irritable, and did several things which have marred and stained her name.

Of course there is very much to learn about her which you must read yourself in history. You will there be told about her troubles with the unfortunate Mary, Queen of Scots, who was her relative, and who after being a prisoner in Fotheringay Castle for many years, was executed.

She was very beautiful. It is thought that Elizabeth envied her remarkable beauty, which is a very wicked thing to do. Elizabeth, though homely, was very vain, and dearly loved compliments.

At one time there were many pictures of the queen circulated, much resembling her, and therefore not very handsome. So the queen issued a formal proclamation against them, forbidding the people to sell them, and stating that an artist would be employed to make a true picture of her. What a pity she did not realize that beauty of mind, kindness of heart, nobleness of character, and above all, the true Christian spirit, were much more to be desired than anything so frail and perishable as human beauty. Never, in any reign, has England known such pomp and splendor as in Elizabeth's time. She was fond of parade. She once went to church surrounded by a thousand men in armor, and drums and trumpets sounding.

You will read in her life about the Earl of Essex, who was a prime favorite with Elizabeth for a long time, but he offended her, and she caused him to be executed. She had once given him a ring, to be returned to her in case he ever needed her aid. When in prison he sent it, but it was intercepted. The queen got angry because the ring did not come, and therefore thought Essex was very proud. After his death, however, she learned about the ring, and was therefore thrown into deep distress, and soon pined away and died. She had about three thousand dresses at the time of her death, in her wardrobe. Her last words were, "Millions of money for an inch of time."

She was buried in Westminster Abbey, where many of the great of England sleep in unbroken repose.

In the Good Old Colony Times.

(From the Pennsylvania Gazette of 1789.)

Some time since six convicted servants, viz., four white men, one white woman, and one mulatto man, living with several masters on Rappahanneck River, combined together to run away, and accordingly stole a boat, went down the river to the bay, and proceeded to the mouth of York River, where they met with an old man and his boy in a small sloop going to carry corn from one part of the bay to another. They forced the man and boy to surrender the sloop and gave them the boat which they had. Then they proceeded in the sloop toward New York, but, by their unskilfulness in navigation and contrary winds, they were kept out so long that they were almost perished with hunger. At length they were met by Capt. Long in his Majesty's ship the——. The convicts told the Captain a formal story that they sailed from London in a ship bound for these ports, but were unfortunately met with by pirates on this coast, who took them and their ship, stripped them of all, and turned them (poor creatures) adrift in that little sloop, &c. The Captain had compassion on them, took them on board, ordered them to be better clothed and fed, and so proceeded toward Virginia. Meantime one of the man-of-war's sailors, rummaging their little sloop, found some screws and rollers, who immediately informed the Captain of it, and told him that as these things were used in no other country than Virginia or Maryland for rolling tobacco, he believed these people were runaways from thence, and had imposed falsehoods on him. The Captain thereupon ordered one of them (a young man of better countenance than the rest) to be brought to him, who, upon examination, confessed the whole story of their running away, and taking the poor old man's sloop from him. They were secured, and when the ship arrived in Virginia were delivered up to justice, committed to prison, and were last week tried at this city by a Court of Admiralty, were found guilty of piracy, and all six received sentence of death. His Honour the Governour, through his own clemency and the intercession of Capt. Long, has been pleased to reprieve the young man above mentioned, and one other, and the rest, viz., two white men, one white woman, and a mulatto man, are to be executed in a few days, and two of them hung in chains, viz., one at Rappahannock River, near the place whence they ran, and the other at York River, near the place where they committed the piracy. This account we thought proper to publish, in hopes it may be a means to deter others from such wicked courses, lest they should fall under the like unhappy circumstances.

A Nautical View.—Mamma.—"Don't you know that your father is the mainstay of the family?" Freddy.—"Golly ain't he, though! And the spanker, too!"

A foolish exchange say "A hairpin is a woman's best friend." This is really absurd. Does a hairpin ever come home very late, sit around the bedroom and look foolish while she blows it up to her heart's content? Does a hairpin ever buy new bonnets, promise her in July a new sealskin next January, and next January stave it off with a promise of a session at the seashore next July? The man who wrote the item either is employed by some hairpin manufacturer or else he is a cynical bachelor.

CATARRH OF MANY YEARS STANDING CURED.
Dr. N. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, Toronto and Halifax:
DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to express my entire satisfaction at the results of your "New Method" of Inhalation which has cured me of Catarrh of a very troublesome character; in fact all the usual remedies failed to give me any relief. I used your Treatment, from the first, gave great relief, and in a few months entirely cured me of a most annoying disease. I can honestly recommend it to any who may be suffering as I was to your earnest consideration.
Yours truly,
GEO. GOULDING,

A few bottles will cure the most aggravated case. It is also invaluable for Sprains, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Scalds and all complaints required external application. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co., Druggists, Markdale. Aug.

The Lecture by Rev. T. Woolsey on Tuesday evening last was both interesting and instructive. He gave a thrilling account of his missionary work, (having been in that capacity nine years in the North-West commencing in 1854) together with vivid and amusing narratives of hunting, fishing. fowling. and occasionaly almost starving. Rev. Mr. Woolsey has been a missionary among the Indians for 23 years, so that he is quite familiar with their language as well as customs. He is now superannuated and resides in Toronto.

A DANGEROUS CONDITION

One of the dangerous conditions is a neglectful complaint. When you suffer from weary aching back, weakness and other urinary, troubles apply to the back a Burdock Porous Plaster, and take Burdock Blood Bitters, the best system regulator known for the Liver, Kidneys, Stomach and Bowels.

THE garden party, given by the West back line, at the residence of Mr. Edward Rutledge last Wednesday evening, 11th, was a very enjoyable affair. The night was delightful, being clear and warm. The beautiful spacious grounds were handsomely lit up by the full moon which threw the smaller lights quite in the shade. Markdale was largely represented, as is always the case in the country gatherings as well as in town. Every one appeared to thoroughly enjoy themselves by swinging on the merry-go-round and other amusements. Proceeds $20.75.

JOTTINGS FROM ABROAD

Mr. A. Hill is absent from town on a trip east, His brother, from Markdale, is managing the tailoring in his absence.—[Orangeville Advertiser.

The Owen Sounn Advertiser's, Chatsworth cor. says "A dude struck Campbell's Hotel last Monday and had dinner. It came from the direction of Durham and excited considerable curiosity for a while. It was on foot, but had evidently started from somewhere on a bicycle and lost it."

INDIANS.—Among the passengers by the Athabasca on Monday morning were three Indians from the North-West, whom the Rev. Geo. McDougal who accompanied them, is taking through to Ottawa to interview the Government there in regard to their grievances. They were rather an intelligent looking lot, and attracted considerable attraction from the crowd on the dock.—[O. S. Advertiser.

A BIG BLAZE.—On Sunday the 8th inst., the barn and outbuildings of Mr. Robert Ringland, lots 20 and 21, con. 9, Proton, together with their contents which consisted of three calves, the season's hay, and his farming implements were destroyed by fire. The fire was communicated to the building from bush fiires which was raging in that vicinity. We learn that there is no insurance.—[Dundalk Herald.

Chatsworth correspondent to the O.S Advertiser say's "Reports had been in circulation that the drowning of young Norton at Walter's Falls on the 12th of July was not entirely due to accident—that in fact there had been something like intention on the part of at least one of those who were in his company in the boat that day. Mr. Wm. Norton, father of deceased, wishing to have the matter investigated, asked Mr. McGill J. P., of this village, to take the evidence of the parties interested. Mr. McGill and Mr. Simpson went out last week and arrested one of the young men whose name were prominently connected with the accident. Evidence was heard, but nothing was proved to justify intentional foul play on the part of the young men, although the magistrate thought there was very great carelessness."

McGREGOR & PARKE'S CARBOLIC CERATE.

Have you an old Sore, Cut, Burn, Bruise, Corn, Bunion, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches, Rough Hands or Face? If so, there is but one cure, namely, McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate. If you but try it, it will convince you. It costs 25c. at R. L. Stephen's Drug Store, Markdale. 2

TORONTO INDUSTRIAL FAIR.—The success which has attended the Industrial Fair in the past, appears likely to be eclipsed by the success of he one for the resent year, which opens at Toronto on the 6th of Sept. next. Already the space in all the large buildings is nearly taken up, and the character and novelty of the exhibits will be far ahead of those of previous years. The latest improvements in farming implements, machinery, and all kinds of manufactures, will be found there, and the number of entries ensure a magnificent display in this respect. Our space will not permit us to particularize, but an excellent programme of special attractions has been provided, and the reputation of the Toronto Show in this respect justifies us in saying that they will be of an interesting and novel character. Cheap excursions and reduced fares will be given on all the railways. A large number of conventions and other attractions will be going on in the city at the time of the Fair, and any of our readers contemplating taking a holiday, will not have a better opportunity of spending it with pleasure and profit than by taking a trip to the Toronto Industrial Fair. Entries in all departments close on the 28th inst. For prize list and all particulars drop a post card to Mr. Hill, the secretary, at Toronto.

SALT RHEUM CURED.

McGregor & Parke's Carbolic Cerate has been tried and found to be the only positive cure for Salt Rheum, Pimples, Blotches on the face of hands, Cuts, Burns, Bruises, or any Sore that nothing else will heal. THE FARM.

Farmers Boys and Their Prospects.

Lately I heard utterance given to an opinion entertained by a large number of our most intelligent people. The speaker said that "the prospects of the farmers' boys were daily growing less bright, and in the near future his labor would be narrowed down to a mere struggle for bread." "Look," he continued, "at the profits accumulated by the merchant, the lawyer, and other classes of men with whom the farmer is compelled to transact business. Absolutely the farmer has no chance of bettering his condition; but on the contrary, he must, by the very nature of things, naturally sink lower in the financial and social scale." This talk is merely wind—evil wind, evil in its tendency to degrade the noble pursuit of agriculture, and evil in its drift to turn the minds of our young men from agricultural occupations to the already overcrowded professional and mercantile channels. We can not call this talk anarchy, but it is extremely detrimental to the best interests of our laboring element. To my mind the prospects of farmers' boys were never so enticing as now. Years ago, comparatively few, a boy was expected to toil from before dawn till after dark, with only time to partake of his meals. Even then to ask for a horse would have been all his day was worth. Mind, I do not intend to say this was true in all cases, but a majority were so. Now it is different. Houses are made bright by the organ or other musical instrument. Good books and papers come into the house to aid in developing the intellectual faculties and cultivating the mind. Holidays are more plentiful, and machinery having succeeded hand labor on the farm in so large a degree, the boy's life is rendered far easier.

One who can be willing to be content with a fair return for his labor is better situated to obtain a good living than ever before. True, produce is much lower in price, but provisions are reduced in a corresponding ratio. Transportation charges are hardly a tithe of the former cost of conveyance, and the modes of carrying together with the possibility of securing daily market reports have practically placed the markets at our very doors. Improved methods of farming have done a vast amount to advance the cause of agriculture. In raising any product for our markets it must be borne in mind that only first-class produce can command first-class prices. It will not do to put up butter in ill-looking packages, or to send your eggs unless perfectly fresh. Fruit and vegetables must be assorted and neatly packed, beef and pork must be fattened in a superior manner. Have a standard and keep all the produce up to that standard, and your prospects are as bright to-day as they would have been fifty years ago.

Practical Poultry.

Rice is excellent to feed to young, growing chicks, and is not very expensive.

Ducks, after commencing to lay, drop one egg very regularly every 24 hours, almost invariably after night.

If your young chicks appear droopy when about a week or ten days old, examine them carefully under the wings and on the head; you will soon find the cause—lice. Mix a little sulphur and lard together and apply to these points. One application is usually sufficient.

If your hens lay soft shelled eggs, give your fowls plenty of cinders, oyster shells, lime rubbish, etc.

This season of the year is a good one to set Bantam eggs. These hatched in September and even autumn are, however, often the best, as the lateness of the season tends to keep down the size.

Is the poultry business overdone? Does this, from a trades paper, indicate such a state of affairs? "About forty million dozen more eggs are needed in America this year than are supplied by our fowls; so we will have to send across the water for the deficiency."

Always have a tight roof to your chicken coops; cold rains are very destructive to young chicks.

Keep young chicks growing steadily; do not feed them too much at a time, but feed them often, and with good, nourishing food.

Those using brooders should exercise great care about getting them too warm; the heated and relaxed chicken runs out into the cold air and gets inflammation of the lungs.

Clean out your chicken houses at least once a week.

Thinning Root Crops.

It may seem sometimes a hard thing to do to pull up promising plants and throw them away, and a farmer is thus tempted to permit the roots to stand too close in the rows. But it is indispensable to success that the plants have plenty of room. Large roots weighing ten to sixteen pounds cannot be grown at less than sixteen inches apart, and eighteen inches is better still. At this distance, with full rows, there will be forty-nine tons to the acre. At half the distance the roots may only average three pounds, making only little more than twenty-nine tons to the acre. The same applies to corn, for all plants need abundant feeding space for the roots, and must not be crowded much.

A Startling Discovery.

A startling and important discovery was made when, after long and patient experiment, the combination of Nerviline was reached. A grand victory, indeed, for the suffering have an ever ready, prompt, efficient, and cheap remedy at hand. Do you know that for 10 cents you can buy a trial bottle of Polson's Nerviline and test its great power over pain of every description? Polson's Nerviline cures chills, pain in the stomach, side, and back, rheumatism; in fact all pain. Sold by druggists and country dealers.

It is said the English Government is vainly seeking a place of confinement for its cranks. Italy has no difficulty that way. She attaches them to a hand organ and sends them to this country.

LATE DOMINION NEWS.

Halifax and St. John expect to have street railway systems shortly.

Gen. Sherman, of the American army, will visit Victoria, B. C., shortly.

Excellent brick is manufactured at Calgary. The color is a cream and the price $13 a thousand.

A child was born on the Athabasca during a recent trip and was christened Herbert Athabasca.

From Glamorgan township a story comes that three wolves chased an old horse until it was tired and then ate it.

Two magnificent Rocky Mountain eagles, each measuring 17 feet from tip to tip, were exhibited at Port Arthur recently.

A Prince Edward Islander has a horse which has lost one of his eyes, and can breathe through the place occupied by the missing optic.

A baby carriage in Stratford was blown down a hill and dashed to pieces against a tree at the bottom. The baby escaped with a few scratches.

Mr. Van Horne, of the C.P.R., told a Calgary stockdealer that he would give orders for the immediate construction of stockyards in that town.

It is said that one result of the visit to the Maritime Provinces by Hon. Mr. Foster, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, will be an improvement in the system of lighting adopted along the coast.

A Janetville hen prides herself on the production of two big eggs, one measuring 8¼ inches around lengthwise, and 7 inches across, the other 7½ by 6 inches, the aggregate weight being four ounces.

Mr. Wm. Sandham, of Middleton, was struck by lightning recently. It did not kill him, but broke his shoulder blade, left a thin red and black streak down his body, tore his clothing, and made a hole in the sole of his boot.

A big fish story comes from New Brunswick. It is stated that two persons caught, with hook and line in Fall Brook, St. Francis, in a part of two days, 1,580 trout, and that on another occasion two Frenchmen caught, in the same time, in the same brook, 1,200 of the same kind of fish.

In Turnberry a little boy was feeding some horses in the stable, when he touched one of them on the chest with the fork. The animal plunged forward, received the prong in the heart, and died. The other horse was frightened, and began to kick, and the little boy was rescued only after his arm was broken.

Capt. E. G. Green, of the Montreal Field Battery, committed suicide by shooting himself at Chateau Lamothe, near Bordeaux in France. Mr. Green was a native of Birmingham, was 39 years of age, and had many friends in Montreal. He was doing well in his business, and his suicide is inexplicable.

At Lawrenceville a young farmer named Tibbits mounted his horse and started for the river to rescue two drowning sheep. He was just entering the stream when his horse pitched him over his head. He appears to have been struck by the animal's hoof and stunned, for he sank at once, and when the body was recovered there was a black mark on his forehead.

At L'Etang, near the border line between New Brunswick and the United States, there has been discovered a deposit of mineral earth which has the property of preserving fruit from decay. This quality was accidentally discovered. A barrel of the stuff stood in a St. John store and a lad put some Bartlett pears in it, where they were forgotten and remained some months. On emptying the barrel the fruit came out perfect in size, and with the taste unimpaired. Mixed into a paste with paraffin it burns, giving out a great heat and a light. It is also manufactured into paint. The bed has a surface area of 300 acres, and it is at least 24 feet deep. The substance comes out in a solid mass, but crumbles easily into powder.

A Steam-Boat Trip.

Old hunters say that the tiger which has tasted human flesh will henceforth take no other; and it is equally true that he who has once traveled free on rail or river ever afterwards seeks to ride on his "pass." The Boston "Record" tells of such an individual, once a reporter and long a "deadhead."

One exceedingly hot day, having made up his mind that the proper thing to do was to take a salt-water excursion, this man of cheek strolled along the wharves of Boston in order to pick out the likeliest excursion steamer he could find. He selected one at last, went on board, hunted up a chair, took a seat in a shady place, put his feet on the rail, and began to read a newspaper. In about fifteen minutes a sailor-looking man opened a door, looked at him about a minute, and disappeared. In about ten minutes more the sailor-looking man came back and addressed the newspaper man.

"What are you doing here?" said he.

"O!" exclaimed the newspaper man, "only going to take a little trip with you." And he whipped out his card and presented it. "Member of the press, you know—give you a good notice in the paper next week."

The sailor-looking man said not a word, and went back into the bowels of the vessel.

Fifteen minutes more and the steamer hadn't started. The newspaper man began to get a little weary. He waited a little while longer, and went inside and hunted up the sailor-looking man, who was apparently engaged in polishing the ship's cable.

"Say!" said the newspaper man, "how long before this boat starts?"

"Well," said the sailor-looking man, as he went on with his polishing, "I think she'll sail about a week from next Wednesday. She's laid up for repairs."

Science Baffled.

Young Man—Is it true, Doctor, that smoking cigarettes tends to soften the brain?

Physician—There is a belief to that effect but with all our boasted modern scientific appliances it can never be verified.

Young Man—Why, Doctor?

Physician—Because nobody with brains ever smokes them.

HEALTH.

To Avoid Contagion in Small-Pox.

1. On the first appearance of the disease, the patient should be placed in a separate apartment, as near the top of the house as possible, from which curtains, carpets, bedhangings, and other needless articles of furniture should be removed, and no person except the medical attendant and the nurse or mother should be permitted to enter the room.

2. A basin containing a solution of carbolic acid or chloride of lime should be placed near the bed for the patient to spit in.

3. Handkerchiefs should not be used, but pieces of soft rags instead, for wiping the nose of the patient. Each piece after being used should be immediately burned.

4. A plentiful supply of water and towels should be kept for the use of the nurse, whose hands, of necessity, will be soiled by the secretions of the patient. In one handbasin the water should be impregnated with Platt's or Cady's chlorides, by which the taint on the hands may at once be removed.

5. Outside the door of the sick a sheet should be suspended, so as to cover the entire doorway; this should be kept constantly wet with a solution of lime. The effect of this will be to keep every other part of the house free from infection.

6. The discharges of the bowels and kidneys of the patient should be received into vessels charged with disinfectants, such as the solution of carbolic acid or chloride of lime, and immediately removed. By these means the poison thrown off from internal surfaces may be rendered inert, and deprived of the power of propagating disease.

7. The garments and bed clothing of the sick should be placed in a disinfecting fluid until boiled in the wash. Such a fluid may be made thus: Dissolve together in water in the proportions of four ounces of the zinc sulphate and two ounces of salt to the gallon of water.

A Wet Sheet Pack.

This valuable process in water treatment may be briefly described as follows: Have ready two or three comfortables or thick blankets, one woolen blanket, and a large linen or cotton sheet. It is important to be certain that the sheet is sufficiently large to extend twice around the patient's body. More blankets are required in cool weather than in warm, although the pack should be taken in a room at temperate heat. Spread upon a bed or straight, bread lounge the comfortables, one by one, making them even at the top. Over them spread the woolen blanket, allowing its upper edge to fall an inch or two below that of the last comfortable. Wet the sheet in water of the proper temperature, wring out so that it will not drip, then gather the ends so that it can be quickly spread out. Now place its upper end even with the woolen blanket, and spread it out on each side of the middle sufficiently to allow the patient to lie down upon his back, which he should quickly do, letting his ears come just above the upper border of the sheet, and extending his limbs near together. Wrap the patient snugly, carefully first with the sheet and afterward with the blanket, taking care to exclude air from the neck to the toes. After the bath give the patient a cool or tepid sponge bath, or a wet sheet rub, and he will probably feel greatly refreshed and invigorated. This form of bath is particularly useful in diseases of a febrile type.

A Meteor Falls in Midday.

A startling phenomenon occurred at Valcartier, Quebec, the other day in the shape of a blazing meteor making a rapid descent. The meteor was probably 10 feet in circumference. After touching the earth it emitted a strange light, reminding one of the pictured scenes of the infernal regions. The sight worked on the minds of the people, many conjuring up the worst fears and looking forward to a speedy dissolution of the universe. What most enhanced their fears was the fact that just previous to the occurrence the sky lowered, the beasts of the field sent up unearthly and distressing screeches, bringing the credulous trembling to their knees. Within the past few days the lightning has been very severe and earthquake shocks have been frequent.

Some men have greatness thrust upon them; especially when a fat person sits next to them in the street cars.

An Expert in Human Hair.

Mme. Shaw is an expert in human hair. She studied the subject.

"Ah," said she, "why is it you ladies of New York, and the American women generally, are so careless about your hair, and if you have lost it, why so economical in purchasing this adornment? You do not hesitate in giving ten, twenty or more dollars for 'a love of a bonnet,' but will hesitate in buying the artistic arrangements in hair made to supply nature's defects, and that are so essentially necessary for your good appearance."

"That is a novel idea," said the reporter, "but doubtless you are correct. Tell me why we lose our hair while young and otherwise hearty."

"Oh, for many reasons. First, you do not take proper care of it. Foreign women of all classes wash, comb and brush their hair frequently. Take a practical illustration. Mrs. Blank notices that the tails of her carriage horses grew shorter and thinner every day and asks John the reason for it. He professes not to know. She then goes to the dealer from whom she purchased the horses. He quickly replies, 'It is because your coachman neglects to wash, cut, comb and trim their tails."

"So," says madame, "it is gross neglect with you ladies. You give more attention to any other part of your person than the locks which should be your crown of beauty. And you are in a hurry; you have so many distractions. Your mothers and women twice your age have many of them luxuriant hair, for when they were young it was still the custom to brush the hair at night and wash the scalp frequently. Ladies cover their bald heads, but if they did not what a droll sight any ordinary audience would present."—New York Journal.

No Armour for the Back.

Let me advise you to wear no armour for your back when you have determined to follow the track of truth. Receive upon your breast-plate of righteousness the sword-cuts of your adversaries; the stern metal shall turn the edge of your foeman's weapon. Let the right be your lord paramount, and for the rest be free and your own master still. Follow the truth for its own sake; follow her in evil report; let not many waters quench your love to her. Yield to no established rules if they involve a lie. Do not do evil that good may come of it. "Consequences!"—this is the devil's argument. Leave consequences to God; but do right. If friends fall thee, do the right. If foemen surround thee, do the right. Be genuine, real, sincere, true, upright, godlike. The world's maxim is, trim your sails and yield to circumstances. But if you would do any good in your generation, you must be made of sterner stuff, and help make your times rather than be made by them. You must not yield to customs, but, like the anvil, endure all blows until the hammers break themselves. When misrepresented, use no crooked means to clear yourself. Clouds do not last long. If in the course of duty you are tried by the distrust of friends, gird up your loins and say in your heart I was driven to virtue by the encouragement of friends, nor will I be repelled from it by their coldness. Finally be just and fear not; "corruption wins not more than honesty;" truth lives and reigns when falsehood dies and rots.

His Reason for Quitting.

"I am going to quit smoking cigarettes," said a young man who has led more than one german in St. Paul. "What's the matter?" I asked. "Well," he responded, "it isn't because it's a vile habit that is going to carry me down to an early grave, or anything of that sort. One placed me, or rather a young lady, in a very embarrassing position. There is a certain charming young lady on St. Anthony Hill whom I should like very much to make my wife, and I know she feels as I do. But I am not yet able to support a wife, so I have never said a word to the young lady's parents. Well, the other evening she and I took a stroll. It was about 9:30 when we returned to the house, so I did not go in. We stood chatting a few minutes and I lighted a cigarette. When she went into the house I, of course, kissed her good-night. Well, without giving it a thought she went in, bade her mother good night, and kissed her also. The old lady immediately detected the odor of the cigarette on her daughter's lips, and questioned her about it. The poor girl either had to acknowledge that I kissed her or that she smoked a cigarette. When the young lady told me about it I had not the courage to ask her what course she chose. Now you knew why cigarettes and I will be strangers in the future."

Chapels for the Queen.

The Queen has recently fitted up a private chapel at Osborne, for use when it is inconvenient to attend service at Whippingham church, and above the altar three new pictures by Sir Noel Paton, which he painted by Her Majesty's command, are to be placed. The centre is to be filled by a work entitled Vigilate et Orate, which depicts Christ in the garden finding the three disciples asleep, and on each side are to hang the Good Shepherd and the Man of Sorrows, these two being replicas of larger pictures by the same distinguished artist. Her Majesty is about to build a small private chapel at Balmoral, but as it is to be arranged only for Presbyterian "worship," the interior will be perfectly plain. Workmen have been for some time occupied at Glengelder quarries in hewing stone for this structure, the erection of which has been contemplated for more than twenty years past. When it is finished Crathie Church will cease to be the great centre of attraction on "Sabbath" to the tourists at Braemar, as the royalties will then perform their devotions in the comfortable privacy of Balmoral.

A Massachusetts camper has seen the sea serpent, and says that he watched it for a long time "glass in hand." Undoubtedly; this is about the only way a sight of the sea serpent can be enjoyed.

There is some doubt as to the accuracy of the story that a deacon and his family have been pelting a clergyman with rotten eggs. Connecticut deacons have not been suspected of willingly throwing away eggs—even if they were rotten. Somebody would have bought them.

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Kitchen Hints.

Keep large squares of asbestos pasteboard hung convenient to slip under pots, kettles, stew dishes, and spiders, wherever you set them down.

Don't flirt dirt from one piece of furniture to another and call it dusting, but take it up carefully in a dusting cloth and shake it from the window.

To clean bottles, put into the bottles some kernels of corn, a tablespoonful of ashes; pour it half full of water, and after a vigorous shaking and rinsing you will find the bottle as good as new.

A teaspoonful of borax put in the last water in which clothes are rinsed will whiten them wonderfully. Pound the borax so it will dissolve easily. This is especially good to remove the yellow that time gives to white garments that have been laid away two or three years.

How to take grease spots out of silk: For any color that water will not injure take wheat flour and mix with water to a thin batter, spread on the grease spots, and dry in the sun or by the fire until quite dry and crisp, so that you can crush it like dry leaves; then brush it off with a brush; do not use an iron. This is much better than any chemical preparation and does not leave any spot to show where the grease spot was.

"Sufferer" writes: "Having suffered greatly from corns, and having obtained complete relief, at once, from the following simple treatment, I send it to you for the benefit of your readers. Pare the corn and put around the toe a strip of what druggists call surgeons' adhesive plaster. The strip must be wide enough to completely cover the corn, and long enough to encircle the toe or it may not stay in place. Warm the plaster well before putting it on. Renew when worn out, paring the corn each time. Five cents' worth of this plaster will supply two corns six months."

Choice Recipes.

PLUM JELLY.—Boil the fruit with sufficient water until it is cooked. Strain through a thick cloth; to every cup of fruit add a cup of sugar, and let it remain until next day. Then melt all together, and then take small quantities at a time and boil it until it jellies, which you can tell by trying a little at a time. Do not stir during the last boiling.

PEACH BATTER PUDDING.—Twelve ripe peaches, pared but not stoned; one quart of milk, about ten tablespoons of prepared flour, five beaten eggs, one tablespoonful of melted butter, one saltspoonful of salt. Set the peaches closely together in a buttered pudding dish, stew with sugar, and pour over them a batter of the ingredients above named.

BAKED HUCKLEBERRY PUDDING.—One pint of milk, two eggs, one quart of flour, (sifted), one gill yeast, one saltspoonful of salt, one teaspoonful of boiling water, nearly a quart of berries dredged with flour. Make batter with these ingredients—leaving out the berries—and set in a warm place to rise for about four hours. If light pour in the dredged berries, pour into a buttered cake mold, and bake one hour in a moderate oven. Turn and eat with hard sauce.

BLACKBERRY ROLY-POLY.—One quart of prepared flour, one heaping tablespoonful lard and the same of butter rubbed with a little salt into the flour, enough milk—about two cups—to make soft dough. Roll out into a sheet a quarter of an inch thick. Sew leaving a narrow margin at the sides, with sound blackberries sprinkled with sugar. Roll tightly. Sew up with a felled seam, in a cloth leaving room for swelling. Put into a pot of boiling water and keep at the boil for an hour and a quarter. Dip the cloth in cold water to loosen it, and turn out. Eat cold with hard sauce.

PEACH LECHE CREMA. — Twelve ripe peaches, pared, stoned, and cut in halves; three eggs and the whites of two more, one-half cup of powdered sugar, two tablespoonfuls of corn-starch wet in cold milk, one tablespoonful melted butter, one pint of milk. Scald the milk, stir in the corn-starch, and when it begins to thicken take from the fire and put in the butter. When lukewarm whip in the beaten yolks until all are very light. Put a thick substratum of peaches into a dish, stew with sugar, and pour the creamy compound over them. Bake in a quick oven ten minutes and spread with a meringue made of five whites whipped stiff with a little powdered sugar. Shut the oven door until this is firm. Eat cold with cream.

A Strange Sect of Italian Robbers.

The capture of a brigand near Recchigliere, a hamlet situated in a remote part of the Calabrian highlands, has revealed the existence in that region of an extensive sect, remarkable alike for the wildness of its tenets and the nefarious character of its practices. Its head is an ex-sergeant, Gabriel Donnici, who claims to be the Deity, and represents the Advent as still to come.

During the last five years he has been organising this sect which comprises nearly all the small farmers and shepherds of the district. His gospel seems to be a sort of communism of the lowest and most sensual type. The clandestine meeting of the sect are alleged to be marked by orgies and obscene rites, recalling the worst features of Oriental paganism. Donnici's own sister-in-law, for refusing to conform to these practices, was shut up in a cave and left there to die. This nearly led to the breaking up of the community, as Donnici and his followers were arrested and tried for murder; but owing to the impossibility of procuring witnesses against them, they were acquitted.

The sect has now been brought into notice by the capture of Serafino Brune, one of its leading members, or saints, as they are styled. This worthy, after murdering a doctor, betook himself last April to the woods, and with the connivance of his co-religionists flourished there as a highway robber. The police having failed to track him, Brune was arrested the other day by a local landowner, Count Conversano. His capture occasioned great demonstrations of grief at Recchigliere, where hundreds of men and women hung about this precious saint and kissed him rapturously.

THE WORLD OVER.

There are 200,000 Italian settlers in the Argentine Republic, 82,000 in Brazil, 40,000 in Uruguay, and 6,000 in Mexico.

A Sunday-school teacher in Litchfield told his infants to ask any questions they had in their minds, and a little one asked: "When is the circus coming?"

A New London oyster dealer has invented a dredge with which starfish, the greatest enemies of the oyster, can be taken from a bed without disturbing the oysters.

Mrs. Hansen, while picking blackberries near Oakland, Ill., was bitten in the ankle by a blue racer. She was at once placed in a wagon and driven homeward, but she died before her home was reached.

When an Elkhart, Ind., farmer was unloading a load of hay which he had driven to market and sold, he found a very lively rattlesnake in the hay, and in the serpent he found two meadow mice still alive and kicking.

Tom Higgins of Spirit Lake, Ia., had a sunstroke the other day. His brother started for the doctor in a hurry, and the horse he rode stumbled, threw the boy over his head, and stepped on his chest, inflicting injuries from which he will probably die.

A horse owned in Springfield, Ill., choked while eating corn. Its owner thrust a whip stock down the horse's throat to remove the obstruction, and the horse bit the stock in two, leaving a foot or more of it in his throat. A horse doctor came and cleared out the much obstructed channel.

They tell of a clergyman in Lynn who hired out to a church at a nominal salary of $4,000, agreeing privately to make the church a present of $1,000 of it. A congregation in Connecticut heard of the $4,000 preacher, thought he must be extra good, offered him $4,500, and got him. Then the Lynn people understood why he pretended his salary was $4,000.

Ralph, a six-year-old in an East India missionary's family, was much impressed with recent disclosures of theft by native servants. After one of these domestic sensations, he indirectly confessed to some peccadilloes of his own, by this codicil to his usual nightly petitions: "And please God, give me clean hands and a pure heart, and don't let me steal anybody's things or take the monkey's peanuts."

A clergyman at Lebanon, Pa., when he began his sermon recently announced that as soon as three of the congregation fell asleep he would stop preaching. The afternoon was rather warm, and some heads became heavy. After a while the preacher observed that three had gone to sleep, and stopped his sermon. This made somewhat of a stir in the audience, and soon raised all drooping heads, when the sermon was continued.

From Sam Jones' sermon in Kansas City: I have not chawed tobacco since I left Chicago. If I had done everything I am accused of I ought to be in the penitentiary. I am a great deal like the man who was met by a friend who said: "Why, I heard you were dead." "Yes, I heard so, too, but I did not believe it." When I hear these stories I don't get mad, but if they are true I feel so bad that they are true that I can't get mad, and if they are lies I am so glad they are lies I can't get mad.

Australia is again in the field with a world's fair, which she has appointed for next June at Adelaide. It might have been supposed that with her double dose of international exhibitions less than seven years ago, when she held one at Sidney in 1879 and another at Melbourne in 1880, she would have had for the present a surfeit of them. But these shows have come to be almost exclusively trade affairs, and Australia finds that business purposes will be served by holding a fair in 1887. Doubtless American manufactures will be well represented, as before, in the antipodal bazaar.

A two-foot alligator and two big artificial swans are in a fountain basin in Macon, Ga. The other day it was noticed that the alligator was not to be seen and that one of the swans seemed to be anchored close to the fountain. Investigation showed that some boys had tied the alligator to the swan to see him drag it round the basin, and that the 'gator had wound himself up around the fountain and could not come to the surface; and not only that, but had wound the string tightly around his mouth. When released he showed great pleasure, opening his jaws to their full extent, lashing the water with his tail, and barking like a dog.

In Almonte, druggists are allowed to sell but one gallon of whiskey at a time. Knowing this fact, a thirsty man went to a drug store with a two-gallon jug and asked to have it filled. The druggist said that he couldn't sell but a gallon. The man said he must have two gallons, and if the druggist would put one gallon in the jug, he'd run and get the other at some other store. This was done. Soon the man returned and said the other druggist wouldn't sell the other gallon. The man seemed sad. One gallon was no use to him; would the druggist kindly take it back and let him have his money? The druggist would, and did. But he didn't take back the whiskey after all. For the man had not been to another store, but to a convenient place where he took out a big half of the gallon of whiskey and replaced it with water. He then returned the whiskey and water to the obliging druggist.

What Ailed A Sentimental Young Lady.

In Liverpool, not long since, a sentimental young lady from town was on the Cunard steamship quay, where she saw a young girl sitting on a trunk in an attitude of utter dejection and despair. "Poor thing," thought the romantic lady, "she is probably alone and a stranger. Her pale cheeks and great, sad eyes tell of a broken heart and eyes running for sympathy. She has probably had some unfortunate affair and has left her lover in the far West." She went over to the traveler to win her confidence. "Crossed in love?" she asked, sympathetically. "No," replied the girl, with a sigh: "crossed in the Servia, and an awfully rough passage, too!"

It was very appropriate for Cooper Graham to go through the whirlpool by steamboat.

A UNIVERSAL BENEFACTOR.

The Great Inventor's Investigation for Hydrophobia.

Pasteur is a universal benefactor. His achievements in chemistry and microscopic biology have been among the most important of the century. His theories upon fermentation and the study of germs have produced immense results. He is the terror of the dishonest wine merchant, having elucidated the various systems of wine falsification, while his research and studies into the diseases of cattle, silk-worms, and other animals has been an epoch in chemistry's annals. Pasteur seems still a young man. He was born at Dole, in the Jura country, Dec. 22, 1822, and at a very early age was already a professor of chemistry in the great Sorbonne, of Paris. Sixty-four summers have only ripened his talents, for his face is youthful despite his grey beard, and his hair, of unusual thickness, scarcely hides even one white thread. His life is one of constant trial, research, work, and public benefaction. Day, month, and year his services are given gratuitously to the people; rich and poor fare alike at his kindly hands, and if he had millions, all would be spent in doing good. He gives on an average sixteen hours a day of his time to his work and his patients. It seems enormous, yet it is not an exaggeration. This, too, for the moment. The wonder is how his own health can stand such a strain. The demands upon his time, the responsibilities of his position are so great, the trials and worries attending it are such that at his laboratories his face wears an almost habitual expression of perplexity and sadness. It seems to say:—"Even I scarcely knew where to turn or what to do," and yet he is ever there, constant, ready, cheerful, and patient. I would advise any one coming to Paris, if they wish to assist at a scene which they will remember for a lifetime, to pay a visit one morning at half past 10 No. 14 Rue Vanquelin. Vulgar curiosity stops before the spectacle of such individual humanity, courage and greatness.

WITHOUT RECOMPENSE

As Dr. Pasteur bid me good-by, and as he let me out of the little side door, I said to him:—

"You should be the happiest man on earth when you think of all the good you do."

"I am afraid human nature is much the same," he replied, sadly; "we never think of our good fortunes, but always of our misfortunes. I alas feel and appreciate only what I am unable to accomplish."

A Hail-Storm to Brag of.

It is seriously asserted that during a storm in the western part of Texas, recently, hailstones weighing from seven to twelve pounds fell in great numbers, and the occurrence is held up as something extraordinary. It isn't a marker, however, says The Philadelphia Press, as compared with the rip-and-tear storm which swept down the valley of the peaceful Conewago creek in Crawford county during the hot summer of 1848. An old inhabitant who witnessed that storm remembers that the hail came down so thick that after the particles became pulverized somewhat there was good sleighing for three days; one conical-shaped hailstone fell through the roof of a blacksmith shop and punched a 3 inch hole through a case-hardened anvil; another struck a 12-foot bar of railroad iron squarely on the end and split it in two as perfectly as if it had been sawed; one large hailstone was housed over and covered with sawdust and furnished three families with ice until the new crop came in the next winter, besides providing enough for the lemonade at two granges' picnics; the weather was so cold for five days after the storm that wood went up 50 cents a cord, and when the cattle killed by the storm were dressed their hides were found punched so full of holes that they were sold to a porus plaster foundry for a mere trifle; the hail that fell into the Conewago caused a gorge in that stream which overflowed the whole valley, and the water was so cold that potatoes in the ground were frozen hard enough to use for billiard balls in the country taverns; and the places where some of the hailstones struck the ground were afterward used as postholes by farmers in building fences. If Texas ever witnesses a storm of the Conewago variety we shall be disposed to listen to it, but it won't do to send up any little penny commonplace about seven-pound hailstones.

Entertaining the Egyptians.

Mr. James, in the "Wild Tribes of the Soudan," gives the following description of a magic-lantern entertainment given by him to a crowd of the natives, which must have been quite as amusing to the exhibiter as to the audience:—On one occasion we exhibited the magic-lantern to the intense delight of a large crowd who came after dinner on purpose to see it, and had never seen anything so wonderful before. We worked the lantern from the inside of a tent, with a sheet hung in front of the door. We always commenced the show by a display of portraits of the Queen and Prince of Wales; these were both very popular, and invariably redemanded. We had been careful, before leaving England, to choose subjects for the slides that we thought would interest the people; and their exhibition was always successful. The most popular consisted of a series of animals found in Africa, such as the lion, hippopotamus, elephant, &c.; and when we displayed a representation of a man escaping up a tree from a crocodile, with the beast opening and shutting its mouth, and trying to seize him, they fairly shrieked with laughter. Some of the slides represented the Suez Canal, English scenes, caravans in the desert, African villages, &c.; and all these were explained to them in Arabic, to their intense delight, while the Arabic was translated into their own tongue for the benefit of those that did not understand that language. As a termination to the entertainment we sent up one or two rockets and lighted a Bengal light or two, by which time our reputation as wonderful magicians was fairly established among them. As a hint that the show was over and it was time for the crowd to retire, we hit upon the expedient of conducting the sheik by the light of a Bengal light to his horse, which was waiting for him outside of our zareba. The result was a most happy one; a veritable stampede took place, and the camp was cleared in less than five minutes.

MARKDALE, AUG. 19, 1886.

—The recent elections in France were all held on Sunday.

—The corner stone was laid in Hanover last week, for a Lutheran church.

—Dundalk is to be an incorporated village on the 1st January, and yet has no magistrate.

—All the ministers in the new English parliament have been re-elected without opposition.

—A by-law was carried in Stratford last Saturday to give the G.T.R. $120,000 as a bonus to establish their locomotive works and car shops in that city. The vote stood 880 for and only 12 against.

—Mr. R. McKnight, Registrar of North Grey and formerly a merchant of this town, shipped recently, to the Colonial Exhibition in London, England, about two tons honey from his own Apiary.

—Advices from nearly every station in Manitoba and the North-West indicate that the harvest was nearly all finished last week. All reports agree as to the superior quality of the grain, although the average yield per acre will likely be under twenty bushels.

—The new postoffice at Orangeville was opened Friday evening for public inspection. The building is to be lighted with gasoline. An expensive cut stone fence is being placed around the postoffice. Orangeville will then have one of the finest public buildings in Ontario.

OUR CIVIC HOLIDAY.

Wednesday was one of the most beautiful days of the season, and was duly recognized by our business men as a holiday. Some went picnicing to Eugenia Falls in the morning, and others sought amusement and recreation in various ways, but the chief attraction of the day was the annual picnic of the united Sabbath Schools of the Presbyterian and Methodist churches, which was held during the afternoon in Mr. McDuffie's grove. The two schools met and marched to the grove where the company swelled until there were about 400 in attendance, over 300 of which were children and young people. The provision made in the shape of swings, games, &c., was not near sufficient for the occasion, yet all appeared to enjoy themselves, and a very sociable and friendly time was spent. A detachment of "Knights of the Maple Leaf" put in an appearance about 4 o'clock, dressed in full regalia, and very soon added several members to their band. The provision for the inner man was abundant and of a superior quality, also lemonade in abundance. All passed off most harmonious and successful.

The Brass Band played a few choice selections on the street in the afternoon.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents

To the Editor of the Standard.

DEAR SIR.—As there is a good deal of grumbling, and some very uncomplimentary remarks made about the village road work, and how it was done, or not done; would it not be well for the pathmasters to give a detailed statement of how and when and where it was performed.

MORE LIGHT

Card of Thanks.

To the Editor of the STANDARD

DEAR SIR,—We wish, through your paper, to thank the Northern Assurance Company for their very prompt and satisfactory settlement of our claim on our mill which was burned on the 21st of July, 1886, and the check for payment being forwarded to their agent, Mr. Geo. Rutherford, of Shelburne, on the 4th day of August, being fourteen days after the fire; and we would here recommend the Northern Assurance Company and also their Agent, Mr. Geo. Rutherford, to all parties wishing to insure in a good Company.

Respectfully yours,
E. & A. NELSON.

DO NOT DELAY

Do not delay, if suffering any form of Bowel Complaint however mild apparently may be the attack, but use Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is the old, reliable cure for all forms of Summer Complaint that require prompt treatment. Ask your Druggist and all dealers in patent medicines.

Kimberley.

From our own correspondent.

The world is on fire in the swamp near Kimberley. Some enterprising rustler is supposed to have put a match to it.

Harvesting is near through. Fall wheat is a good sample, with something below an average crop; spring crop light; apples rather small; fair crop potatoes, small and not very many in a hill.

The Rev. Mr. Corcoran has come among us here and has gone right to work (he is likely to do some good). He does not seem to be lazy.

The long talked of valley road will soon be ready for travel (Euphrasia part of it), and it will not cost this township much as the people most interested built the bridges at their own expense, and made a good job of them.

Politics are being talked up considerably. The people will try to get a man to represent them who will try to do away with some of the extravagance and Tom foolery the government has been practising. There will be no use in men coming here talking of dead issues or dead men, I believe we know what we want and we will try and make our representative understand it to.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

Mr. W. Badger, who formerly taught school here, and is at present living in Manitoba, paid a flying visit to this place last week. He looks as young and fresh as ever.

The members of the Wesley Church are going to get it painted and fixed up generally. It is about time that such improvements were made.

Messrs. Ross and Sparling are out on the war path with their steam thresher.

Mr. W. Gilbert's house had a narrow escape from being burned last week. The roof caught fire, but with a few applications of water by Mrs. Gilbert it was put out before much damage was done.

The brick layers are busy erecting a house for Mr. Carson.

Messrs. Warling & Brodie are building a new house for Mrs. Foley.

The farmers are busy with their harvest, some of them being pretty well along with it. Notwithstanding the extreme dry season that we have had the prospects are good. Mr. D. Walker says that he has two fields of peas that cannot be beat.

Osprey.

(From our Osprey correspondent.)

Fine harvest weather with fair average crops.

A stable was raised at R. Y. Burk's on Friday, size 25 x 40, with the usual amount of shouting and lifting. The hop at night was enjoyed by the young folks.

Mr. A. Herron's shingle factory was burned on Thursday night or rather on Friday morning. A quantity of shingles, a grain chopper, and traction engine were consumed.

Mr. A. McGirr, Feversham, has sold out to John McAleer of Eugenia.

Mr. Henry Hudson, jr., lost a valuable mare on Thursday.

The STANDARD is much sought after in Feversham on Friday evenings now. Every one expects to see their name in it; and find out the latest news.

We don't know whether the "Butcher Girl" has changed hands this week or not. Most likely she will as she is a rare beast and sportsmen are plentiful in town.

What has happened "Phiz?" He and Bridget must have died, as he is never heard from now at all.

T. L. B. Hamlin is visiting friends in Maxwell just now.

Any other person whose name is not here and should have been, will excuse your cor. as I am in a hurry just now, and I will mention them again.

Mr. Thomas Mann,
Markdale:

DEAR SIR,—This is to certify that you are the only authorized agent of this company for the townships of Artemesia, Euphrasia, East half Glenelg and Holland, and any statements to the contrary are not authorized from this office.

Yours truly,
R. J. DOYLE,

A PLEASING DUTY

"I feel it is my duty to say," writes John Burtnn of Dysart, P. Q., "that Burdock Blood Bitters cured my wife of liver complaint from which she had been a chronic sufferer. Her distress, painful symptoms soon gave way, and I can highly recommend the medicine to all suffering as she did."

THE BEST YET!

THE FOURTH GRAND ANNUAL

EXCURSION

Of the Shelburne Lodge

ANCIENT ORDER OF UNITED WORKMEN

Will be given to

Owen Sound & Meaford

THURSDAY, AUG. 26, 1886,

Shelburne Merchants' Holiday.

This splendid trip will be made via C. P. R. to Owen Sound, whence the fast, staunch and commodious Royal Mail Steamer

Frances Smith

Will give excursionists a delightful sail to the thriving town of Meaford.

The "Citizens" Silver Cornet Band, of Orangeville,

And an excellent Quadrille Orchestra, have been engaged to accompany the Pleasure Party, so that abundance of high class Music will enliven this magnificent trip. FAST TRAIN, well equipped, will leave as follows:—Orangeville, at 6 a. m.; Dundalk, at 7 26; Proton, at 7.40; Flesherton, at 7.55; Markdale, at 8.15; Berkeley, at 8 30; Williamsford, at 8.45; Arnott, at 8.55; Chatsworth, at 9.05; Rockford, at 9.20, arriving in Owen Sound at 9.45. The Steamer will leave her wharf at 10 reaching Meaford about 1 p. m., and departing upon the homeward journey at 4 o'clock. MEALS served upon the Steamer at 40 cents each. The Special Train departs upon the return trip from Owen Sound at 8 o'clock.

LACROSSE.

At Meaford a grand Lacrosse Match for a Silver Cup, presented by citizens of Shelburne, will be played between the Shelburne and Meaford Clubs. At Owen Sound, on the forenoon of the 27th, a match has been arranged between the Shelburne and Owen Sound teams.

TICKETS for round trip have been placed at the following extraordinary low figures:—From Orangeville and the Junction $1.50: Laurel to Markdale, $1.25; Berkeley to Rockford, $1.00. Children, under 12, half-price. From Owen Sound to Meaford and return, only 50 cents. Those who wish to remain in Owen Sound can return by any of the regular trains next day, upon exchanging tickets at the Owen Sound depot, and paying the trifling sum of 40 cents extra. Tickets can be obtained at the Stations, and from members of the Committee on board the train.

Our Farmers' Future.

(From Mt. Forest Rep.)

So far this year we have had every month: there are signs of rust on wheat in some sections, and while rust does not damage grain like other blight generally does in this section of Ontario. We mention these facts to show that grain raising is unprofitable for the majority of farmers in this and adjoining counties. Let our farmer friends only grain cease to depend on their outlook should be a hopeless one: but cattle raising is left them and the sooner grain raising is given up as the principal farming industry and cattle raising and dairying substituted, the better. There is not much prospect of the market being over-stocked with cattle as shown in the following letter from Mr. G. F. Frankland, of Toronto one of the most prominent shippers of cattle from the Dominion to the old Country.

The section of Ontario being so much more suitable for cattle raising than grain growing, we would urge upon our farmers to depend more on stock raising and would recommend them to read and consider the facts we give in Mr. Frankland's letter:

North-western hotel,
Liverpool, 5th June, 1886.

"Dear Mr. R.—Knowing the great interest you take both publicly and privately, in the development of the ocean cattle trade, as well as in maintaining a reciprocity of feeling between the Mother Country and her colonies, I take the opportunity of saying, before I leave for London, that Canada is coming to the front with first-class grade cattle although for the last four years prices have been low, the trade continues to improve as regard to numbers, shipping, and quantity. This progress has been accelerated by the great interest awakened through our Dominion and Provincial Governments, Farmers' clubs and institutes are now organized in almost every part of Canada, under the parental care of far-seeing men, who recognize that agricultural science is still in its infancy. Apart from the commercial advantages following upon the introducing of colonial cattle into Great Britain has been the means of attracting thoughtful men to the fertile fields of the Dominion When we remember that Great Britain, has a population of nearly forty millions and that a moderate allowance of one pound of beef and half a pound of mutton per head per week represents 3,200,000 cattle and 16,000,000 sheep annually required to supply the food, it is no wonder the development of our cattle resources is being pushed forward. We mean to be your meat purveyors if we can possibly manage it. I wish it were possible to bring this matter more prominently before the public.

Home Happiness.

Probably nineteen twentieths of the happiness you will ever have you will get at home. The Indebenepnce that comes to a man when his work is over and he feels that he has run out of the storm into the quitr harbor of home where he can rest in peace with his family, is something real. It does not make much difference whether you own your house or have one little room in that house, you can make that little room a true home to you. You can people it with such moods, you can turn to it with such sweet faces, that it will be fairly luminous with their presence, and will be to you the very perfection of a home. Against this home none of you should ever transgress. You should always treat each other with courtesy. It is often not a difficulty to love a person as it is to be courteous to him Courtesy is of great value, and a more royal grace than some people seem to think. If you will but be courteous to each other you will soon learn to love each other more wisely, profoundly, not to say lastingly, than you ever did before.—Exchange.

Selecting Candidates.

Isn't it strange that we select men to represent us in our legislative bodies almost solely on their qualifications revealed by the gift of gab? In anything else than politics the same smooth-tongued man is an object of suspicion. The lightening rod man, the life insurance agent, the patent right solicitor are all to a certain extent under the ban of public opinion because of their limber tongues and their ability to work upon the gullability of human nature. It is easily demonstrated that the most successful men in this world are, as a rule, not the best talkers. and while the ability of expressing one's self clearly and forcibly is not to be under-rated, executive ability as demonstrated by what a person has accomplished, is a better test of value. But so long as the majority of people are more impressed by words than deeds, just so long will we continue to select silver-tongued orators to manage affairs that should be entrusted only to men of the highest executive ability.

A Liver Cure

One single trial of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure will convince the most skeptical and confined better than thousands of testimonial that it is a sure cure. Medicine and Receipt Book $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co. Aug.

An Outsider's Opinion.

The following from the Chicago Canadian-American of July 23rd is well worthy of a place in any Canadian journal that realizes the promising future awaiting our great trans-continental line:

"The completion and opening of the Canadian Pacific Railway from ocean to ocean is one of those events which serve as a reminder of the terrific pace at which we Americans are moving. To those of us who have spent their earlier years in Canada it seems but a little time ago that the project of an Intercolonial railway was regarded as a mere sentimental pandering to imperial military necessities; brought strikingly home indeed by the transport of troops from the sea-board to Quebec during the exciting weeks following upon the Trent affair in December, 1861. That road was simply to be connecting link between the maratime and upper provinces; especially during the season of closed navigation. Not a quarter of a century has elapsed since then, in fact barely a decade since the inception of the road, and yet to-day the Intercolonial is already earning dividends for a government which was blamed for sinking Canadian money in what was by some designated as a useless and senseless enterprise. But if this railway, running as it does, largely through that absolutely barren waste which borders on the south shore of the lower St. Lawrence, has already made for herself, irrespective of through business, a considerable local traffic, what may be expected of the C. P. R., which traverses the finest wheat belt on earth—a region which was so aptly characterized by the keen observer; Lord Dufferin, as a country of unlimited possibilities, and which only awaited the event of the iron horse for develpment into homes for teeming multitudes! The marvelous energy which built Canada's greatest trunk line four years inside of contract time is not likely to flag in its determined effors to put the C. P. R. in the very forefront of contintential railways. It began well, Its first through passenger train, leaving Montreal on June 28th reached the Pacific terminus on time, Possessing, by virtue of its following, the lien of a great circle of the globe, a route that saves 1,200 miles between Yokohama and Liverpool, its real termini, it is not surprising to learn that already the second cargo of tea has left Japan for transmission over the C. P. R. to England, It will probably have the freightage of 12,000,000 bushels of Manitoba and Northwestern wheat this autumn to swell the figures of its way business, a business which already complete connections on the two oceans. When the people can go from the old country to the aggregates at the rate of a million of dollars a month; and which promises to double itself in less than two years as soon as the ordered line of fast steamers are ready to Pacific within ten days the full import of the opening of the C. P. R. and its relation to the older and competing inter-ocean lines of railway will be fully realized; and that we may expect to see in less than eighteen months. But the subject is so fruitful in crumbs of food for reflection that we must just now be content with submitting only a few of them as suggestive of ground for that confidence in the future of the country which is a marked characteristic of all trust Canadians."

CHAPTER V.

"The lady—where is the lady?" Mr. Danvers demanded almost fiercely of the innocent porter.

"Lady!" the man echoed astonished. "There wasn't no lady here, sir."

"No lady?"

"No, sir; the carriage was empty, just as you see it now. Did you expect to find a lady here, sir?" The man was curious.

Mr. Danvers turned back with a sudden suspicion; he glanced first under the seat of the carriage, then up to the rack over his head. The travelling bag, the dressing-case, were both gone. He had not remarked their disappearance until now. He sprang from the carriage at a bound, a muttered imprecation escaping him he pulled out his watch.

"When will the next train to St. Sebastian's start?" he demanded of an inspector who stood in his path.

"This train has just come from from St. Sabastian's," the man answered oracularly, and with the usual official contempt for the ignorance of an interrogater.

"I know," Mr. Danvers returned impatiently. "I want the first down train."

"One just gone—won't be another for three hours."

"Is this your luggage sir?" the porter interrupted, pointing to a lady's travelling trunk, new and handsome, and to sundry similar articles. "Where shall I take 'em, sir?"

"Take them to——"

Mr. Danvers left his sentence unfinished.

"Shall I label them sir," inquired the porter, who was a little deaf, and was besides rather dazed by the steam of an engine blowing off rather close to his ears. "Shall I label them?"

"No," roared the gentleman—"confound you!"

"You might keep a civil tongue in your head, at all events," the man grumbled to himself as he turned away. "But I reckon something's gone a good way wrong with my gentleman on the road. I wonder what made him think there was a lady on the other side of that carriage?"

And so curious was the man on the subject that he went back to the carriage in question and examined it minutely—with no result, it is true, but apparently with some gratification to himself. Just as he was turning away he espied a small folded paper lying on the ground.

"Is this yours, sir?" he inquired, turning back to the gentleman.

Mr. Danvers read it and thrust it away.

"Here call a hansom, and take these things to the cloak room,' he said to the porter. "Leave them there—confound the ticket! Put the portmanteau in here. The telegraph office," he called to the driver as he got in.

The porter stood on the kerbstone looking after the retreating vehicle and saying to himself—

"Well this is a rum go! I'd give something to know what's up, I would. The gent was liberal enough, for all his bad manners—a real gent, though airitable," he concluded, tossing up the half-crown Percival Danvers had thrown him. "I shouldn't mind a hard word or two more at the same price any day."

Meanwhile Mr. Percival Danvers had caused himself to be driven first to the telegraph office—where, however, after writing out a message addressed "St. Sabastian's," he suddenly changed his mind and tore the paper in half—and then on towards the Euston Station. Not that he particularly cared where the man took him; but he had been forced to name some destination. His plans were as yet in chaos, only a dim instinct suggested the order for the station for the North. As he sat back in his cab he was scowling at a pale spectre which had risen up from amongst the flowers and favours of his bridal festivity—the spectre of a dead past, long buried out of sight and forgotten.

"Dead and buried," he repeated to himself more than once—"dead and buried. Who shall dare to say it is not a lie—a wretched lie?' he repeated with a savage emphasis—"a forgery—the device, of some wretched creature who owes me a grudge perhaps?"

Yet there was a strange fatality in the resurrection of that dead-and-buried secret past just at this supreme crisis of his life; and certain words he had heard somewhere in some period of childish superstition, words of solemn threatening and retribution, came back to his mind. He cast them aside impatiently. Such old men's fables should not fetter a resolute will and a strong mind. He needed both for the emergency in which he found himself.

It was an awkward situation; it was worse, it was a ridiculous one. His bride had run away from him on her wedding day She had cheated him—this innocent unsophisticated girl—by a ruse as simple as it was successful. Could she have devised it alone? For a moment a dark suspicion clouded his brain; then he thrust it from him. Even in his bitter anger and humiliation he could not so insult her—his pure-hearted, innocent young bride.

How was he to save scandal? he wondered. That ravenous wolf the world must not have such a daintily morsel as Percival Danver's bridal fallen to gnaw and tear. He did not believe her few words—that she had fled from him and from all who belonged to her, and that it would be useless to seek her. She would, she must, take refuge in her own home, and with her own people—she was so ignorant of the world, so timid and helpless. He would take the next train back to St. Sabastian's, and then—— Then two courses would be before him; which should he take? Should he still hold to the tone he had already taken with Eve—that the tale was only a trick—a silly school-boy scare? Or should he grasp his nettle boldly, and tell out with convincing candour that old story of the past which he had counted for ever buried and hidden away in the secret chamber of his own heart? Should he confess the grain of truth, and so found with a high hand, the mischievous falsehood?

The candid course involved a good deal, as he perceived. It involved a peril which, for all his determined repudiation, his heart recognized as real and menacing. What if the story should be no falsehood but a horrible reality? What if proof of this should be lying in wait for him there, at St. Sebastian's, where of all places in the world, he had least expected to be confronted with such a risen ghost?

How and whence had that mysterious paper found its way into his wife's hands? He had not dared in those first moments to question her. Now he would give all he possessed to know in what quarter to look for his enemy. He took the crumpled note from his pocket and smoothed it out on his knee. It was written in a tremulous uncertain hand, in half formed foreign characters, and the words, as he read them now, were startling enough for a young bride—convincing enough, he thought with a thrill of exasperation to any unwilling one. If Eve had loved him, could she so easily have accepted her release?

"Marie Delorme Danvers"—so the billet ran—"lives still. The marriage of this morning can be no marriage. Percival Danvers would, to her, have called these lines melodramatic and strained, an obvious and clumsy invention. Now, to himself, he called them nothing of the kind. He had seen something only too like these trembling characters before; he was familiar with that style, pathetic and simple in its forgiving reproach. His dark cheek paled and his strong hand trembled as he drew from the innermost recess of his pocket-book a tiny strip of printed paper—a newspaper paragraph apparently—and laid it beside the written paper on his knee, as if to confront the one with the other.

"Died, at Bella Vista, St. Jerome, June 10th, 187—, Marie Delorme Danvers."

"It is a lie!" Percival Danvers cried suddenly and violently, striking the written witness with his open palm. "A wretched lie! Some old servant perhaps has concocted it. Yes, there was a woman—a Frenchwoman—I remember, who was in her confidence, knew all her secrets. This woman has turned up—Heaven only knows how—and is trying to make a market out of her knowledge. She must have been in the place by some unlucky chance, have heard of the wedding this morning, and lain in wait for me, to threaten me with what mischief she could do, and to make me buy her silence. Stay! There was a woman hanging about the carriage-door as we left. I thought she was looking for the seat. She must have been looking for me, and, by some fatality, let her precious concoction fall into my wife's hands, defeating her own ends, and ruining me."

Yes, ruin would be the consequence of this fiasco, if he were awkward—ruin to his heart and to his life. Percival Danvers saw plainly the fatal depth opening before his feet. He knew that he must crush the danger with resolute—it might be with unscrupulous—fingers, or the airy and promising fabric of happiness and of gratified ambition which he had just reared so successfully would be shattered into fragments about him.

He loved that lost bride of his with all the passion of his matured manhood—a passion as different from the soft sentimental fancy of his foolish youth as the burning fervour of the tropical sun is from the feeble ray of the pale moon. In spite of her coldness, in spite of her unresponsiveness, perhaps because of them, he who had had a world of women at his feet loved this young girl as he had never yet loved woman. It maddened him to think of losing her. He vowed that he would not lose her, cost what it might—that he would yet win his wedded but unwon bride.

He thought out his plan of action with his head between his hands, as his cab rattled through the noisy streets, and, when it turned into the great gates of the Euston Station his course was resolved upon. He would take her at her word. She might perhaps try to hide herself, as she had threatened, from all belonging to her, for a time; but in any case, he reflected, he could trust Mrs. Dalamaine's worldly wit and promptness of resource to cover the escapade and save the scandal until it should please him graciously to return from the silence of his high displeasure, in the role of a justly-offended but generous husband, and to receive his erring bride back again. He would profit by the time thus given him to arm himself with a complete refutation of the foolish tale that had scared her away; and his return would be a triumphant one, giving him the right to start from a new point, and, he told himself, with a new and overwhelming prestige in his favour.

Even whilst he vehemently repudiated them, there were doubts and fears haunting him which, for the sake of his own peace, he must clear away and set at rest for ever. The edifice of social success which he had been building up so carefully must not have a flaw in its foundation, threatening it with terrible downfall at any moment. His face darkened as he vowed it should not.

"For Liverpool," he said to the clerk at the booking office. It was the first step in the journey which was to set him free.

CHAPTER VI.

The shock of the sudden revelation had roused the listless young bride effectually. She believed implicity in its truth. Percival Danvers's conscience-stricken look had forced conviction home to her heart. So full and perfect was this conviction that she seemed to have known it all along. It was this which had stood in the form of a faithful instinct between her and the lover whom all the world praised.

An indescribable horror and loathing of the man took the place of the toleration with which she had accepted his courtship. She covered her eyes that she might not look at him. She felt herself trembling with a storm of indignant repulsion. She shrank as far away from him as the limits of the carriage permitted. She could scarcely breathe in his presence. Then the train stopped at the junction station, and Mr. Danvers descended. She was alone. She could breathe freely once more. A sudden overmastering impulse seized her to escape, to set herself free.

It was the work of a moment to shake a long travelling-cloak out of its straps, to hide beneath it the elegant and conspicuous "going-away" costume, to snatch up dressing-case and bag, to hurry into the next compartment through the communicating door, and to fasten it securely behind her. What if the outer door should be locked? A panic seized her. No; it yielded to her touch, and she sprang down amongst the rails, intersecting each other here in a kind of iron cat's-cradle.

A train was standing by the opposite platform, just on the point of departure; and, in the bustle of large party of excursionists, Eve's misdemeanour passed unnoticed as she scrambled up from the forbidden lines. A good-natured inspector, struck perhaps by the beautiful troubled young face, civilly took her burdens from her as she stumbled along and hurried to a first-class carriage.

"Where to, miss?"

Her eye caught the placard over the carriage window.

"To Blankstone," she said hastily. It was a place she had scarcely ever heard of, and therefore, she quickly recognised, the more likely to be a safe venture. "I have no ticket," she added to the man; and he called a porter.

"Bring the lady a ticket for Blankstone," he said.

"How much will it be?"

"Fifteen shillings, miss."

She handed him a sovereign as she shrank breathless into a seat. Would he never come back? Would the train never move on? Fifty seconds had not elapsed before his hand was thrust in at the window, making her almost shriek out in her terror; and yet it had seemed an age.

"Ticket, miss, and the change."

She gave him one of the two half-crowns he handed her. The whistle sounded, the train moved on slowly—oh, so slowly! She crouched down, hiding her face. Fortunately she was alone. The speed of the engine grew faster and faster, the station buildings glided by, the outskirts of a town were passed, green meadows and clustering woods approached and glanced by, and the sun shone out. She was free! She was safe!

The shadows lengthened, the afternoon waned, and still she journeyed on and on, with no other aim than to put as wide a space as possible between herself and the man whom, a few hours since, she had vowed to "love, honour, and obey," till death did them part. She thought with a shudder of these solemn vows with their awful binding power. She knew that Percival Danvers meant to claim all they gave him—that her only chance lay in flight, in hiding herself from him and from all who belonged to her. She knew too that there was no one to whom she could turn for help. The events of the last three months had taught her to distrust all those who were nearest and dearest to her, to count them all as ranged on Percival Danver's side. Her story, unsupported by any proof—for such proof as she had was, she remembered, left in his hands—would be received with utter incredulity in her own home; her convictions, her feeble word, would be overborne by his powerful protestations. She would be bitterly reproached for the disgrace she had brought on herself and her family, and would be handed over a second time to the man whom she loathed. She could hope for no mercy now. Had she not already been refused it?

She was faint and sick with hunger, but she dared not stay even to eat. She bought a Bradshaw at one of the stations at which the train stopped, and found that, at a junction just short of Blankstone, she could catch a train bound for the distant North Welsh border, a part of the country quite unknown to her, and not likely to be visited by any of her people. There she might hope to be safe, she thought. She tied a thick gray veil over her golden hair and fair young face; and, as her carriage gradually filled with fellow-passengers, she shrank into her corner away from the curious and interested glances sometimes directed towards her. She had never travelled alone before, and, as the first excitement subsided and the depression of a long sleepless night-journey began to make itself felt, the sense of loneliness penetrated to her heart. Then with the night came terrors which the daylight and the sunshine had held at bay.

The chill gray dawn for which she had longed through the darkness seemed when it came only to give a fresh impetus to her nervous terrors. She grew sick with fear at each recurring station, lest the face of Percival Danvers; lest the shouted message from official should be the signal that she was discovered.

It was a relief when she left the train at last at the terminus. The porter who carried her scanty luggage conducted her to a quiet little hotel, where a pleasant-looking motherly landlady took charge of her at once, spread a cosy comfortable breakfast, and hovered about in a kindly interested way, very comforting to her, lonely and faint as she was.

She was provided with the means of living for some time—in her ignorance she thought for a long time. In the dressing-case she had been so careful to secure was a packet of bank-notes the present of her rich godfather, given to be spent on her honeymoon tour in Roman mosaics or Venetian lace, or in such foreign trifles as might please her fancy. And this store exhausted, she would still have her jewels to fall back upon; she had read of heroines in distress selling their jewels.

Her first care was her wardrobe. She went out into the town and chose a simple outfit, such as a young governess might be provided with, and lost no time in exchanging the handsome travelling dress for quiet brown attire which would baffle identification. Then with trembling fingers she hid her long fair hair, closely knotted, under her hat.

In the loneliness and weariness of the night it had seemed to her so easy to be lost; now, with quick inconsistency, it seemed to her so easy to be found. Would it not be safer to hide in some remote country village? a girl passed at the moment with a basket of fresh flowers, heaped up with a liberal hand, from some country garden. A breath of green fields, of ferny shady woods, came, wafted with the perfume of sweet woodruff and fragrant Mary-lilies, to Eve's harrassed senses. She turned and went back at once to the pleasant faced landlady.

"Can you tell me of country lodgings in some pretty quiet village?" Eve asked.

"Let me see," said the landlady looking reflectively at the outlet she had just set before her guest; "there's room at Hanshaw and at Barnam; but are you likely to stay any time, ma'am?"

"Yes, some time"

"It'll be lonely," the landlady said tentatively.

"I don't mind being alone," Eve said hastily. "That is—I ought—I mean I must get used to it."

"Ah, ma'am! You are a widow, mam?"—her eyes were fixed upon the bright new wedding-ring which Eve had forgotten to hide. "Dear, dear, you're young ma'am to be left!"

Eve flushed crimson as she looked down on the tell-tale badge; then she looked up at the honest kindly face of the woman, and a sudden impulse seized her. She felt in her heart that that face was trustworthy.

"No I am not a widow," she said. "You will keep my secret will you not? I am unhappy—I am in great trouble. I want to find a quiet place where I can live—perhaps where I can find a few children to teach—until—oh," she exclaimed suddenly bursting into tears—"oh, perhaps for all my life!"

"My dear," said the good woman "don't fret"—patting the little white hand tenderly. "It'll all come right, never fear. I can see how it is; you've fallen out and come away in a pet. You haven't been married as I have, and you haven't learn't the ways of men, and you're frightened at the first hard word. But you're too young, and—you'll excuse me—too pretty to be wandering about by yourself alone. Make it up dear; make it up and go back to him."

"Oh, no, no," the shuddering loathing in the fair young face startled the landlady into a new view of the matter—"I cannot go back! You will not betray me?"

"That I won't, my dear. You may trust my word."

"Help me to find a home," Eve entreated.

Mrs. Smith set herself to think the matter out.

"I've got it!" she said at length triumphantly. There's Sarah Jeffcott. She said she'd like a quiet lodger or two if I came across any that would suit. Her rooms is nice—a farmhouse—and she's a very respectable woman and a good woman, too. We lived together before I was married; and I ought to know her well, for I've summered her and wintered her, as I may say; and I can answer for her."

"Where is it?"

"It's about twenty miles from here—as pretty a country place as you'd wish to see. The station is two miles from Sarah's place. If you tell her you come from me—Ann Smith of the Welsh Harp—she'll do well by you. And I'll drop her a line myself to make more sure."

So it was settled; and Mrs. Smith saw her young guest into the fly which was to take her to the railway station, and came back to her own parlor behind the bar, with a satisfied countenance.

"It's as well Smith was out of the way," she said as she poured herself out a cup of tea. "He'd be asking questions, and he'd get short answers. Men want to know everything; and they're not to be trusted with it when they do know it!"

There were two stations between Eve's starting-point and her destination. In the carriage where she found a place were already seated two ladies and one gentleman. The gentleman, a grave person in clerical attire, handed the young wife in politely, rearranged his own baggage and wraps to make room for hers, and these civilities offered, retired to his corner and his newspaper, and appeared to be absorbed in the latter. He left the train at the next station; and Eve saw him on the platform up to the last moment, waiting quietly, with his overcoat and rugs in a loose heap over his arm and his bag at his feet—a highly respectable, perfectly irreprorchable, typical country parson.

Ten minutes later the train stopped again, and Eve prepared to descend. Suddenly she stood still and startled her fellow passengers by a cry—

"My dressing-case—it is gone!"

She was standing with her veil thrown back, the better to assist her fruitless search and her beautiful young face white with the dawning consciousness of all the loss involved to her. Her money—all save the change from the five-pound note with which she had paid her hotel bill and her fare—and her jewels, the store on which she had counted—were gone!

"Gone!" one of the ladies repeated. "Surely not; I saw you bring it in in your hand. It cannot be gone—let us look!"

She searched, her companion assisted, the porter rummaged under the seats and inspected the rack overhead; the ladies left the carriage the better to assist the search. But the case was certainly gone.

"It was the clergyman!" one of the ladies exclaimed, after a few seconds of dismayed reflection.

"Hush Annette!" the other said reprovingly. "How can you say such a thing?"

"I am sure of it!" she answered. "Who else can it be? No one but he has left the carriage, and I saw it just before. I remember it distinctly. It was in a Russian leather cover, with a strap. I do remember now that he shuffled up his coats in an awkward manner when he got out.

"But a clergyman!" the other remonstrated.

"Don't you know that they often dress up like a bishop?" her sister replied. "I hope you have not lost much"—to Eve.

The tears were rolling down the girl's white cheeks, but she struggled for composure.

"Thank you," she said; "it is a serious loss for me."

"Telegraph back at once," the elder lady advised, as she resumed her seat; "you may catch him yet. Here is the station-master; speak to him."

There was a little crowd already collected round the carriage; heads were thrust out of windows, curious at the delay. Eve drew her veil over her face and shrank back.

"This young lady has lost her dressing-case; I saw it put into the carriage. A parson—a middle-aged man, dressed like a clergyman, got out at Hemshaw. No one else was in the carriage. This is our name and address," the lady called Annette said, proffering a card to the official. "We hope you will recover your property"—kindly to Eve, as the train moved on.

"You must give me your own name and address. You will have to appear against the man, if we catch him," the station-master explained to Eve.

"Appear against him!" Eve stammered.

"Yes, before the magistrates—in Court."

"Oh, I cannot! I—that is, I am not sure the clergyman took it. I would rather lose it than appear against any one. Please do not telegraph!" Eve entreated, trembling at the threatened publicity and alive to the risk to herself of discovery.

"Will some one"—looking at the man—"take my luggage to Mill Farm—Mrs. Jeffcott's—and direct me on the way there?"

A volunteer stood forth [illegible] while the station-master stood looking [illegible] the young lady.

"It's a queer thing," he said. "I'll graph all the same. She'll be glad to find it if it comes back. Yes, I'll graph." he repeated decidedly, turning to his office.

Fish that Walk and Climb.

It is not to be supposed that a fish [illegible] solutely comfortable away from his own [illegible] ment, but it is nevertheless true that [illegible] sometimes sees fit to live on the land [illegible] short period. Of all land frequenting [illegible] the most famous is the climbing perch [illegible] India, which not only walks out of the [illegible] ter, but also mounts into trees by means [illegible] sharp spines situated near its head and [illegible]

It has a peculiar breathing apparatus [illegible] which enables it to extract oxygen from [illegible] water, stored up within a small chamber [illegible] near its gills, for use while on land.

The Indian snake-head accommodates [illegible] himself to the season, when the pond which [illegible] he inhabits is entirely dry, by storing enough water in his special chamber to moisten his gills during that trying time. [illegible] can thus remain for a long period in a dormant condition, buried within the dry bed of the pond. Old residents of India say that these fish will survive for many years in a state of suspended animation, and that when ponds which have been dry for several successive seasons are suddenly filled by heavy rains, they are found to be swarming with full-grown snake-heads.

In countries where the ponds regularly dry up, at certain seasons, the fish [illegible] ing them either lie dormant in the mud, or make their way overland to fresh [illegible] water.

Full-grown eels journey across [illegible] when the ponds in which they live become dry in summer. To keep their gills wet during these excursions, they distend the skin on each side of the head, and fill the pouch thus formed with water.

A singular walking fish is the periophthalmus, of the tropical Pacific shores. At ebb tide he literally walks out of the water, and, erect on two legs, promenades the beach in search of stray crabs and other marine animals left by the receding waves.

The Lesson of a Dream.

John Wesley was once troubled in regard to the disposition of the various souls and the chances of each in reference to future happiness or punishment. A dream, one night, transported him to the gates of hell. "Are there any Roman Catholics here?" asked the thoughtful Wesley.

"Yes," was the reply.

"Any Episcopalians?"

"Yes."

"Any Presbyterians?"

"Yes."

"Any Congregationalists?"

"Yes," again was the answer.

"Any Baptists?"

"Yes."

"Any Methodists?" by way of a climax, asked the pious Wesley.

"Yes," to his great indignation, was answered.

In the mystic way of dreams, a sudden transition, and he stood before the gates of heaven. Improving his opportunity, he again inquired:

"Are there any Roman Catholics here?"

"No," was replied.

"Any Episcopalians?"

"No."

"Any Presbyterians?"

"No."

"Any Congregationalists?"

"No."

"Any Baptists?"

"No."

"Any Methodists?"

"No."

"Well, then," he asked, lost in wonder, "who are they inside?"

"Christians!" was the jubilant answer.

Fulfilment.

He stood beneath her window
And beneath the ilex-shade
(The ilex was a maple),
And he sang a serenade.
We will hope she gauged his fervor by
Th' amount of noise he made.

"Oh, why art thou not near me?"
He sang it sixteen times,
To "fear me," and to "cheer me,"
And to fourteen other rhymes,
And interspersed with language culled
From Oriental climes.

She leaned from out her lattice;
Her lattice was not barred (Her plate-glass window, that is),
And perhaps she leaned too hard,
For the lattice was wide open, and
It opened on the yard.

A sudden flash of lightning,
Or so it seemed to him—
Then he felt his muscles tightening,
And his sight grew strangely dim,
And they sank together earthward, and
All nature seemed to swim.

Was he happy, was he grateful
For this complaisance of Fate?
No—he muttered something hateful
As he crawled off toward the gate.
Is fulfilment of our wishes worse
Too soon than if too late?

How the Apaches Live and Ride.

An Apache will ride a horse down, kill the animal, and cut as large a piece of meat out of him as he can conveniently carry, steal a fresh horse, and pursue his journey. He will ride the fresh horse until it can carry him no further and his supply of meat from his last horse is exhausted, and, then kill the steed and steal a new one, as before. The government scouts are Apaches, who are allowed all the ammunition they want. They, of course, stand in with those on the war-path and supply them with cartridges. In this way they are enabled to keep up the war. When the scouts are discharged they return to the reservation and there break out themselves.

There is discussion as to the propriety of putting "boodle" into the dictionary. As it would have to come under the head of B's, and consequently after Alderman, and as it is well known that Alderman is always after "boodle," it would of course look very much out of place.

My Beautiful Idol of Clay.

BY ROSA EVANGELINE ANGEL.

...a temple, and in it I hid
...eautiful idol of clay;
...herever I walked, or whatever I did
...my idol seemed never away.
...crept in the night to my idol's throne,
...my love at its feet cast down;
...dreamed all day of my idol alone,
...alled it my king and my crown.

...ome evening the sun in the west sank low,
...the chill of the night-wind's breath
...over my heart like the curse of a foe,
...that night brought my idol's death!
...I awoke in my tears, and my temple fair
...shattered and ruined for aye:
...low in the dust lay my idol there,
...beaut'ful idol of clay!

...my beautiful dream-god I crowned you ...kept.
...I clothed you with vesture bright;
...I placed on your finger my true love's ring
...I looked to your smile for light!
...I hushed my heart when she fain would ...speak,
...whisper, "Your idol is clay!"
...would not hear, as I kissed your cheek
...dream of you night and day!

...my heart rose up, and I could not drown
...voice with my prayers or tears;
...she cast from your head the jeweled
...crown,
...had worn, ah! so many years.
...she turned your face to the sun's pure
...light
...she bade me to look and see
...my kisses were vain, and my mist-dimmed
...sight
...he that which was death to me.

...the thing I had loved and had glorified
...a glory it could not claim
...dust. So my beautiful idol died;
...had loved but a dream—a name!

PETER-PATRICK.

Peter-Patrick O'Rourke came down, one November morning, into a world short of ...ons (he had to take that of two of his ...r brothers combined), short of jackets, ...rt of trousers, short of bread and butter, ...rt of everything in fact, except "biys" ..., as Mrs. O'Rourke herself tersely described his advent, "Anither o' thim great ...thering biys!"

Came into a world of crusts and gristle ...f bones, beatings and scoldings and cuffings, cold and hunger and rags, and straightway set out to grow a robust inch every day ...his life on them, until as "eld" Peter, ...s father (there were three Peters in the family), exclaimed, "The pigs in the pin, ...and the wades in the garden hadn't a show ...side o' him!" And when Mrs. O'Rourke, ...with equal acrimony, had pieced him together some garments for his need, lo! it ...seemed but a week before there were his ...re plump arms hanging away down out ...of them, with an equal amount of thumping ...ee and muscle showing between the ...extremities of his trousers and those dilapidated parodies on leather, called his "shoes."

Dan nature tricked him out with such a ...redundant crop of tight-curling red hair, as ...though she hadn't already supplied seven O'Rourke brothers plentifully with that ...material, and his eye had a snap in it like a ...live coal, and the weariest summer day ...couldn't wilt the roses in his cheek, and his ...teeth made no more of cracking the hard ...shell of a walnut than they did of disclosing themselves in a broad and jubilant grin, ...which was the normal attitude of his features, for that matter.

Mirth and mischief mixed in generously ...with the abuse showered on him through the week, the kickings and thrashings manifold; ...and then, of a Sunday, to stand up in the ...church at the head of all the choir-boys, he ...—the little choir-boy surplice put on over ...his rags—rolling out praise and gratitude to ...God in a voice that hadn't a single husky or ...faltering note in it! Loud and sweet and ...clear, clear above all the rest; so that the ...choir master loved him, as he listened, ...though he had to thresh him very often, at the rehearsals, too.

But now of a week day morning, Peter-Patrick, having already had a cuffing from old Peter, and a rating from Mrs. O'Rourke, tied up the fast-loosening sole of his shoe with a tow-string, drew a brush through his hair, which therefore only curled back on him the tighter, stuck what was left to him of a cap jauntily off over one ear, thrust his hands in his pockets, and started for school with the air of a grand duke; it being impossible for anyone with so much gladness of heart not to have, as Peter-Patrick himself expressed it, "some sthyle about him."

He stopped as usual before the house of the Hon. John Granville, up on the hill, to turn somersaults for the delight of poor little Barney Granville, who, unlike Peter-Patrick, didn't grow. Unlike Peter-Patrick too, there had been jackets enough and trousers enough, of the finest cloth, waiting for him, and the tenderest meats and juiciest puddings, and lands and houses and colleges and horses and what not, and now he grew so weakly and tardily, as though he could never catch up with him.

But Barney thought it was as good as a circus brought to one's own windows, to see Peter-Patrick perform there, standing on his head, and catching his heels in mid air, turning himself wrong end up and inside out, all for Barney's benefit, and clearing the big gate at last with a bound: "Come now, Misther Barney, and have a ride on me shouldthers?"

Barney screamed with delight as the nurse handed him out through the window to Peter-Patrick who, setting him on his shoulders, forthwith trotted and neighed and cantered, and pawed the earth with his feet—the most villainously restive horse that ever carried rider—and landed him at last, after a desperate run, safe in again at the window.

"Yon'll be late at school again, this morning, won't you, Peter-Patrick?" said little Barney, sympathetically.

"Ooh thin," said Peter-Patrick, cheerfully, "wait till they onest have me there airly! Faith, that 'ud be somethin' worth spakin' of, Misther Barney."

"I wonder what makes it so hard for you to learn?"

"Sure, I don't knew," said Peter-Patrick politely attempting to look interested; "the blatherin' larnin'! Faith it won't get into the head o' me, nohow."

"I think it's so easy to learn," said little Barney, his delicate face showing against a background of many red and gold-bound volumes at the other end of the richly-furnished room.

Peter-Pacrick looked at him with genuine, large souled admiration.

"And wouldn't I like though jist to have the larnin', o' ge!—Misther Barney," he exclaimed eloquently.

This made little Barney very happy, and Mrs. Granville, who was sitting in the room, also looked up with pleasure at the blowsy, glowing face outside the window. "I wonder," she thought, "if he wouldn't like a pie. Such great rough boys always do like pies;" but her seamstress entering the room at that moment to ask her some question, she forget all about it.

"Will you get punished again, to-day?" asked little Barney gravely.

Peter-Patrick gave vent to a mirthful roar. "And do ye think it'll be only wan lickin' I'll be gettin' the day, Misther Barney? Faith, ye might hould up all the fingers o' yer two little white hands, and ye wouldn't have enough to be namin' 'em. But don't let that be troublin' the darlin' heart o' ye. My hide's that tough jist, I don't fale 'em at all, at all. Sure they fall off 'n me like the rain-wather off a duck. And I think some o' thim ought to be handin' in a bill, for givin' me so much wallopin' free! Don't ye hear o' wan and another goin' off to the cures, to git their poor bodies exercised jist by poundin' and wallopin' as they pay the docthors a big price for doin' of? Lord knows, Misther Barney, as I feel jist that grateful—bein' too poor indade to pay the docther—to git so much wallopin' free."

Acknowledging with another hearty roar the honor done him by the laughter of the laddies, Peter-Patrick, with a nod, stuck his cap off over the other ear, and sauntered on down the avenue.

So he met the Hon. John Granville, returning home from his morning walk to the Granville ironworks, bearing his corpulent little person along along with a mincing though pompous tread that asserted with each emphatic little step, "I own the town," "I own the the town."

Him having safely passed, as he supposed, Peter-Patrick thrust back his curly head, protruded what was in fact a very empty stomach, and, instead of his own free swagger, proceeded down the thoroughfare with a most striking and life-like reproduction of the Hon. John Granville's grandiose and affected gait, to the vast edification of the passers-by, as well as the irrepressible delight of some servant girls at the upper windows.

The honourable gentleman heard laughter, and looked back. "Look a here! you sir," he cried angrily. You Peter-Patrick O'Rourke, come here!"

Peter-Patrick turned, blushed affably, took off his cap, and approached, very sorry that the honorable gentleman should have incensed himself by looking back, but bless you! if there was a mad bull in the field Peter-Patrick would far rather be inside the bars than out.

"You good-for-nothing miserable paddy," exclaimed the Hon. John, in high dudgeon, "what do you mean by mimicking me!"

"'Dade thin I axes yer honor's pardon," said Peter-Patrick, with sweet tongued moderation; "if you'll belave me, I was only jist admirin' o' yer honor's illegant sthrut. 'Dade and it 'ud be a sorry sight to see a grand gintleman like yersilf, as could go a-whimmin' in his own money if he chuse, and houldin' all the highest offices in the Sthate—and that, as they all say, to the glowry of it—and yit wid niver a sthrut to him! Faith an' if I'd see such a one, I wouldn't be belavin' 'im any gintleman at all! Be dad thin, I have a little sthrut o' me own, sorr," Peter-Patrick concluded modestly, "though of course it don't come anyways up to yer honor's."

Spite of all he could do, the honorable gentlemen realized that all resentment towards Peter-Patrick was melting away in his bosom. The corners of his mouth twitched up weakly.

"I'll tell your father to teach you manners, you young impudence!" he managed to blare out, against his yearning conscience.

Peter-Patrick laughed again. "Weel—weel," he added, "but I'm only fearin' the ould man ain't got many to tache. All the better luck, yer honer, for I get 'em more free-like, ye see, pickin' 'em up on the sthreet."

And with a genial grin Peter-Patrick returned his cap lightly to the verge of the ruddy curls over his left ear, and continued on his way.

And as he went on with ever-increasing jubilance of heart, lo! a little stump tailed dog came out of an alley way, and sniffed affectionately about his heels. Peter-Patrick looked around to see if any of the dog's quondam tormenters were in sight and satisfied that there was no call for immediate vengeance on that score, thrust his hand into his pocket and drew forth a crust, saved from his own scanty breakfast. This, the dog, having, like Peter-Patrick, been imposed upon a community short of provisions, devoured greedily. Oh, but the battles Peter Patrick had fought in defense of that miserable crust! battles upon battles, of old time. Well, there was a peculiar quality of hardness in Peter Patrick's fists. The dog had suffered little hazing of late. He never followed his benefactor home. They both understood that there was already one too many there; but he could give him stolen signs of affection on the street, and that was a comfort.

It was Peter-Patrick's habit, when he reached the culvert, to leave the main thoroughfare and take a new route by crawling through that dark and interesting passage on his hands and knees; and thence by a path along the cliff to the exposed trestle-work of the railroad bridge. Here, some twenty feet or more above terra firma, he was accustomed to pursue his way by leaping along the outmost rails of the bridge. And though the distance to school was by these means, considerably increased, adventure made it all seem but as the fleeting of a dream to Peter-Patrick.

This morning, just beyond the bridge, he discovered, oh bliss of of the moment! some workmen planting new telegraph poles along the edge of the cliff. And there was Charley Granville, Barney's cousin, and the great Judge Granville's son, with written "excuse" from his mother in his pocket with which same excuse he had started for school sometime about an hour or more ago.

Up to him encountered Peter-Patrick, gladsome as the daylight, though with no excuse at all in his pocket.

Now Charley had been bragging, in easy fashion, about his father's wealth, and his own scholarship, and one thing and another, to the crowd of goodnatured, burly workmen; and when Peter Patrick came up with so much engaging swagger about him, and such an inefficient jacket, prudence forsook Charley's brain and he thought still more to distinguish himself by making sport of Peter-Patrick.

"Fair and square, and the witness there. Make your bet, and I'll bet you yet," he cried, in that sacred schoolboy phraseology which is the drum-call to acts of ambitious rivalry. "Bet you, Peter-Patrick, I'll be up one of these telegraph poles before you are!"

Up in a flash, breathless, scrambling, tearing a few more generous rents in his woful trousers, flew Peter-Patrick. Surely he did look comical from that position, in his floating rags, to Charley who had not stirred from his place and now stood laughing insultingly, with his hands in his pockets.

"Well, what do you see up there, Red-Top?" he asked.

"Ooh, thin," said Peter-Patrick, quietly grasping the pole with his legs, and folding his arms, with a narrowing squint down at his questioner; "it's only a little wood-chock I see below there, I guess. Or maybe," he added, it's a skeesk. Faith," said Peter-Patrick, adjusting his cap to the tip of his curls, and sending a still more deliberate and critical squint downwards, "but I'm belavin' it's only a little skeesk, after all!"

Roar after roar went up from the group of workmen. Charley realized that both his wit and his company were at a discount. "You'd better come down then, all afire," he cried, in shrill wrath.

"Oh, I'm a comin'," said Peter-Patrick, in a tone of some import; whereat Charley made no further question, but took to his heels.

Peter Patrick overtook him, and collared him with a grip of iron. "Now I ain't goin' to be givin' ye the lickin' ye desarve, for I'm jist that stronger than ye be—nor I don't bear ye no ill will, nayther, ye little lyin's deceaver—but I'm only goin' to give ye a little wallopin'-like, jist for the health o' ye."

This Peter-Patrick proceeded to do; but as it was not in his nature to give otherwise than generously, it may be supposed that Charley received an amount calculated to inspire him with a sense of considerable physical benefit.

On sped Charley to school, breathing vengeance. His excuse for a quarter-of-an-hour's tardiness was of no use now, anyway; he tore it in pieces, with malicious intent.

As for Peter-Patrick, he sauntered on, at his usual gait.

"An hour and a half late! Peter-Patrick," exclaimed the schoolmaster.

Peter-Patrick was used to the statement, the the tone, and the kindly ministrations to his "health" which always accompanied them. But "Is dthat so!" he answered, scratching his head at the door, with humorous bewilderment. "Dade serr, but me clo's 'll be were out on me, afore night—the time flies so on me!"

And having had his joke, he went up and took his whipping.

But the schoolmaster still retained his hand: "And more than that, sir, you threw down Mr. Charley Granville as he was hurrying on his way here, and beat him, and stole from him the excuse for a necessary tardiness which his mother had written me."

Then all of a sudden Peter-Patrick straightened himself up, and his lip curled, and I think it was a very fine look that came into his eyes; not vengeful, not revealing anything—but only of silent contempt; and he held his hand without a word, without one sign of pain or shrinking, receiving stinging blow after blow; and when it was over, quietly turned, without a word, and took his seat.

There was one seat in the schoolroom that the sun seemed to follow up all day, with a peculiarly blinding and persistent glare. This seat had been assigned to Peter-Patrick. When he took out his book or his slate, letters and figures shone all alike in the white maze of the sunlight. But he could see to whittle out tops and wheels under the shadow of his desk, and he sharpened slate pencils for them all. It was: "Please, sir, may I go to Peter-Patrick to sharpen my pencil?" But often, when the day grew long, and Peter-Patrick's head sank down sleepily onto his desk, it was just wonderful, the glory that sunlight made in his ruddy locks!

Peter-Patrick got whipped for sleeping, and whipped for not studying when he was awake, and whipped when he was made to stay in at recess, and whipped afterwards for the pranks he committed when he was allowed to go out. And when he got home, and old Peter asked him the preliminary question, "Weel did ye get any lickin's in school, the day, Pater-Pathrick?" and Peter-Patrick answered, "Faith, daddy, didn't I thin jist I" never omitting to make cheerful mention, as near as he could remember, as to the approximate number—old Peter, according to rule, made another forcible application of the rod.

So, often after the rehearsal of the choir-boys, in the vestry, the chastisement for the whisperings and gigglings and mischief-makings of the whole class, fell on Peter-Patrick's unshrinking shoulders; simply because the whole element of sin there combined seemed to point back for a spenser to the illumination afforded by Peter-Patrick's radiant grin.

Yet the lad couldn't treasure a thought of injustice or injury in his breast, but was out, with his cap over his ear, hobnobbing with the world, the next morning—loving, forgiving, forgetting. Oh, Peter Patrick!

So much for an ordinary day. There were extraordinary ones; days not only of unusual whippings, but of unusual adventures, by river, bridge, and steeple—for Peter-Patrick seemed not to have so much respect unto his life but that he believed it to be a commodity very plenty, and that he might be easily supplied with another, in case one should give out in a good cause!

It was the last winter of Peter-Patrick's attempt at schooling, and, following the example of his numerous predecessors in the family, he was to go down to the iron-mills to work.

"Wait thin, and I'll be gettin' ye a new gownd, mither," said he gleefully.

"Yo'd better be gettin' yerself a new jacket," said Mrs. O'Rourke, mournfully. And it rankled in her breast because an artist, spending the previous summer in Granville, had painted Peter-Patrick down—red head, ragged jacket, and all—and carried him off to a big town, and sold him there for a thousand dollars. It was pretty hard, she reflected, to have a boy "so comical that the very picture of 'im sold for a thousand dollars!" And Mrs. O'Rourke would have stood speechless with astonishment if she could have heard what that artist-gentleman, in good faith, was describing the painting—that it was "the picture of an Irish lad, down at Granville Mills, who had the most beautiful face he ever saw!"

Christmas day!—and Peter-Patrick had carved the gayest model of a boat, mainmast and foremast, sails all a flying, that he carried up in his bare red hands to little Barney, on the hill. The floor of the library, where Barney sat, was covered with gifts, gifts wonderful and expensive. "Ooh this, but ain't it a beautiful sight af 'em!" cried Peter Patrick, his face beaming with wonder and delight. Barney could not help noticing how cold and bare his hands looked. He had meant to give Peter-Patrick some mittens for a Christmas present, but he had "forgotten" it. Peter-Patrick never thought of that. It was a fact that no one had ever made him a gift in his life—but then, he had never thought of that.

Christmas holiday!—and all the lads and lassies were out coasting with their new sleds, Charley Granville with a famous one, a gift that day, a clipper with iron swan-heads in front, and cushioned seats for four or more. Laughing, shouting, up and down the hill they went, the merriest of all Peter-Patrick, on a plank! steering it on his feet, steering it on his knees, making wonderful manipulations with the crazy old board, riding down anyway but the right way.

Then Charley Granville, in his excitement, chose a longer and a steeper hill; it took in a railroad crossing too; but it was a branch road, no trains due except at night and morning. "Pshaw!" cried Charley, "no danger for hours."

Just as much as the hill was longer and steeper, so much louder and merrier waxed the sport. There, waving his cap, came Charley, a load of little lads and lassies filling his sleigh, tucked in, wedged in, piled in anyhow.

And there, oh God!—around the bank that deadened the sound of its rushing wheels, came an "extra" train on the road, its whistle belching out a shrill agony of warning. No use. Fate sat like death on that glided little sleigh, with its swift flying, helpless load; and with a face like death, Charley Granville threw himself off from the steerer's seat behind—so he might save himself.

Peter-Patrick, returning with his plank had reached the crossing at the foot of the hill. In one brief instant he marked with his keen eye the slight level place just the other side, and saw what he could do. With outstretched arms, the young giant rushed forward, leaped the track to wait that flying, crushing load, that precious, helpless load; the iron swan-heads pierced his breast—but he received it, held it, barred it from death, with his broken arms, with his bleeding and unconscious breast.

Aye, they were saved; and Peter Patrick lay with quiet, upturned face in the sunshine, and with that glory on his head, as when he slept upon his desk at school.

For my part, I am not sorry that he will never go down to the mills to work, nor need that spruce new jacket; for indeed—it may be, Peter-Patrick, that there is life enough always to throw away in deeds like yours.

But when he lay, with his arms folded, in his white grave-clothes, and his features so fine and peaceful in the clustering hair that had been growing dark of late, they began to see upon his face something of that beauty which the painter saw.

They bore him into the church for a little while too, and the choir-boys sang over him. But the choir-master's heart was bitter. Their voices were all husky, faltering, weak. There was no voice there now for him. He did not think how Peter Patrick had learned some ringing notes beyond his scale, but only that there was no voice there now for him.

The Hon. John Granville and the honorable Judge Granville, brothers, agreed that it would be a worthy and appropriate act to put up a monument to the memory of Peter Patrick, with some inscription expressive of the brave manner in which he had met his death. But a threatened depression in certain stocks made it necessary for them to make some change in investments; and I am happy to say that, like the rest, they "forgot" it.

For on Peter-Patrick's neglected grave a slender alder and a sweet wild-thorn bush have sprung up, and in the wild and windy night they lean against each other there, and it makes a cross—not of polished and chiselled marble indeed, but rugged, thorny, sharp, like the one Christ died on; and in the wild and windy night, where no feet passes, the infinite multitude of stars look down, and they behold it.

Poverty progresses arithmetically. When a man meets with reverses, he advertises his house "2 Let." When he is utterly ruined, he advertises it "4 Sale."

The great reputation of Briggs' Electric Oil is such that it has induced unprincipled persons to adopt other names as near like it as possible. The proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil have the name and style of the Electric Oil registered both in Canada and the United States, and no one can use it but themselves.

Others hearing of the success of Briggs' Electric Oil have adopted other names similar such as "Eclectric Oil," "Electron Oil," &c., and are striving to induce the public to buy them instead of the genuine Electric Oil.

In fact so determined were they that they brought a suit at Law, in the High Court of Canada, to deprive Briggs & Sons of their right to control the same; but the Courts and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa fully sustained their registered trade mark.

Briggs' Electric Oil cures Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains and Bruses, complaints arising from Colds such as Sore Throat, Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis and difficult Breathing.

Coming Home to Die.

At a period of life when budding womanhood requires all her strength to meet the demands nature makes upon it, many a young woman returns home from the severe mental strain of school with a broken-down constitution, and her functions disarranged, to go to an early grave. If she had been wisely counseled and given the benefit of Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" her bodily development might have kept pace with her mental growth, and health and beauty would not have given way to decline and death.

CATARRH OF MANY YEARS STANDING CURED.
Dr. N. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, Toronto and Halifax:
DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to express my extreme satisfaction at the results of your "NEW METHOD" of Inhalation which has cured me of Catarrh of a very troublesome character; in fact all the usual remedies failed to give me any relief, but your Treatment, from the first, gave great ease, and in a few months entirely cured me of a most annoying disease. I can honestly recommend any who may be suffering as I was to your skilful consideration.
Yours truly,

A Prize "Pomely".—A rule of business we advise, sound, sensible, and true wise: 'tis simply this no more no less—make known your business through the press. Yes, advertise and never grudge it, and swell thereby your golden budget; a dollar spent in printing ink returns ten fold we surely think; yes advertise, and raise to fame, to all the world your wares proclaim. Early to bed and early to rise, never get "tight," and advertise.

No Use of a Self-Binder.—Last Saturday Sandy Anderson, John McDonald and Angus McDonald, of Glenelg township, bound 18 acres of wheat as it was left on the ground by one of Mr. Bell's self-rake reapers on the farm of Mr. Governor Kitchen, South Dumfries tp. The wheat was good, in fact as fair a crop as will be met with this year. There is no humbug about this, and if any one knows of a better record we would like to hear from them.—[Brantford News.

The heaviest rain storm ever known in this vicinity visited it this week. It was an awful down-pour Saturday night and Sunday, and a great deal of damage has resulted. Bridges and fences have been swept away, crops damaged, and the Northern railway track washed out a short distance south of this town. No trains got through here on Monday, but mails and passengers were transferred late in the evening. Much of the cut grain is said to be growing in the shock and the loss to farmers is inestimable.—[Thornbury News.

A Free Gift.—Around each bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a Medical Guide and Receipt Book containing useful information, over 200 receipes, and pronounced by Doctors and Druggists as worth ten times the cost of the medicine. Medicine and Book $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

The Shelburne A. O. U. W. excursion last Thursday to Owen Sound and Meaford was a grand success. The day was fine, the excursion largely patronized, and a very enjoyable day spent. The lacrosse match played at Meaford between the team of that town and those from Shelburne was won by the latter. The party had an opportunity of seeing the electric light in Owen Sound on their return trip. The light is most handsome and brilliant. While the train halted at Rockford, going north, to allow the S. S. express to cross, a lot of the boys thought they would treat themselves to apples from an orchard which was convenient, but the old man, with a large dog, suddenly appeared on the scene, and the old lady bro't up the rear and sho'd the vagabonds, shaking her skirts as if to chase a flock of goslins out of the garden, and the "bhoys" took leg bail, leaving without a trophy. The Shelburne lacrosse team remained over at Owen Sound for a match with the O. S. team, which had been arranged for, and added another feather to the victors cap.

To the Rescue.—"When all other remedies fail," for Bowel Complaint, Colic Cramps, Dysentry, &c., "then Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry comes to the rescue." Thus writes W. H. Crocker, Druggist, waterdown, and adds that "its sales are large and increasing.

Good Value.—Many suffers buying medicine have been disappointed, don't give up, buy a reliable article like Dr. Chase's Liver Cure, and with it you get a receipe book alone worth the money.

Another Postal Robbery.

A young lad named Peter McBride has for some time past been employed in driving the mail wagon between Heathcote and Thornbury. On Tuesday the 12th inst., the boy reached his destination minus the mail bag, and told a cock-and-bull story about having been attacked by a man on the road who stole the bag. The story was not credited, and warrant was issued and placed in the hands of constable Scott of this town for execution. The officer arrested the boy and succeeded in eliciting a full confession from the prisoner. Word was sent to Inspector Spry, of Barrie, who reached Clarksdurg the same afternoon, had the lad examined before Jos. Rorke, J. P., who committed him for trial. The bag contained two registered letters from which the sum of $37.62 was taken. The boy pleaded guilted and showed where he had concealed the money, which was recovered.—[Thorndury News.

An Interesting Harvest Scene.

The particulars of quite a harvest scene which occured near Davisburg is told by the Holly Advertiser. A young lady from that beautiful burg was spending a few days on the farm enjoying the much needed(?) pure country air, and never having seen a binding harvester, wended her way towards the field. She wore a "Mother Hubbard" which was not belted down, and while standing near the machine the horses became frightened at the flying "Mother Hubbard" and started to run, the young lady fell from the table and was carried up with the grain: and being about the size of a bundle she came through with a neat little string around her waist. One of the harvest hands caught holt of her, after the machine had "kicked" her out, and stood her up. At the last reports she was convalescent.

MEETING OF THE GENERAL CONFERENCE AT METROPOLITAN CHURCH TORONTO.

The General Conference which assembled at the Metropolitan Church yesterday, is the supreme governing body of Metnodism in Canada. It is composed of an equal number of ministers and layman, who are elected by their respective annual conferences. There are ten conferences in which there are over 1800 ministers. As one minister in ten is elected, the clerical representation is 180, and including laymen the total number of delegates is 360. The General Conference meets only once in four years, and its session lasts a fortnight or three weeks Its membership includes all the leading divines of the Church and many men prominent in business, professional and political circles, forming a highly intellectual and able body.

YOUNG FOLKS.

Rhymes of the Play-ground.

Nursery rhymes have received much attention of late as an expression of national life, and many collections of them have been made. The quaint rhymes of the play-ground, some of which are very old, have received less attention. H. Carrington Bolton, of Trinity College, contributes to the Boston Journal of Education the following specimens of "counting out" rhymes, collected by him from children and by correspondence. A favorite jingle is

"Ore-ry, o-ry, ickery Ann,
Fillison, follison, Nicholas, John;
Quevey, quavy, English navy,
Stingalum, stangalum, buck."

This rhyme is widely used, having been reported to me from Connecticut, Philadelphia and Cincinnati. It is subject to many variations: "English navy" becomes "Irish Mary;" some insert the word "berry" or the word "John" before "buck" in the last line. "Ickery" is "hickery," etc. New York City:

"Ana, mana, mona, Mike,
Barcelona, bona, strike;
Care, ware, frow, frack,
Hallico, ballico, ws, wo, wack."

This also is subject to countless variations: "Barcelona" becomes "tuscalena," etc. One form ends in—Central New York—

"Huddy, guddy, bee, out goes you."
"Ana, mana, dippery Dick,
Della, Dolla, Dominick;
Hitcha, pitcha, dominitcha,
Hon, pon, tush."

In some districts the third line is given as "Houtcha, poutcha, dominoutcha," and in others "Hotcha, potcha," etc. "Tush" may also become "tus" or "tusk." Delaware, Rhode Island, etc.:

"Haley, maley, tippety, fig,
Tiney, taney, tomb, nig;
Goat, throat, country note,
Tiney, toney, nig."

"One, two, three, Nanny caught a flea;
The flea died, and Nanny cried; out goes she."

Scotland:

"Eatum, peatum, penny pie,
Babiyoni, stickum, stye."

Besides rhymes of the character of the above,—i. e., consisting of gibberish, with disconnected words,—there are very many rhymes containing no uncouth words, but possessing, in general, a jingle easily recognizable:

"One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight,
Mary at the cottage gate, eating grapes off a plate.
One, two, three, four, five, six, seven eight."

This is given also "plums" in place of "grapes," and "garden gate" for "cottage gate." When "cottage door" ends the second line, the counting stops at "four" to satisfy the rhyme.

The collection is quite incomplete. What Western forty-year-old boy or girl does not recognize the following?

"Intry, mintry, entry, corn,
Apple-seed and appl-thorn;
Wire, brier, limber, lock, three geese in one flock,
One flew east, and one flew west,
And one flew over the cuckoo's nest.
One, two, three, out goes he."

Our "devil" contributes the following:—

"One-all, two-all, zigs all zan,
Bobtail vinegar, tickle-m, tan,
Harem, scarem, popularem,
Bz, baw, buck."

The Man Under the Apple-Tree.

There was once at the University of Cambridge, England, a student who, in after years, gained a great name. A disease breaking out in the college, drove him to his father's home. One day he went into the orchard and sat down to read under a tree.

He raised his eye from his book and saw an apple fall. That was a common thing. Millions of people had seen apples fall. But this young man was set to thinking. What made the apple fall? Not the wind; it was a quiet day. Why, when the stem broke, did it not stay in the air?

This thoughtful young man did not stop thinking about the falling of the apple until he had discovered the cause that made the apple fall; and that the same cause keeps the moon and planets in their paths. This young man was Sir Isaac Newton.

Now, let us see what kind of boy he was. His father was a yeoman or a farmer. He was sent to school but "he was always full of the business he was born for." When other boys were at play, he would be after his own work, call it what you like.

He made water-wheels, models of mills and machines. He made a water clock from an old box, and fixed it to an index which moved as the sinking weed, floating on the water, fell.

But his father would not hear of young Isaac doing such foolish things. He must farm. He was to learn about wheat and grass lands, and to feed and sell sheep. So he was sent to the fields, and was usually found lying under a tree reading when he should have been with the cattle and the laborers.

When he was sent to market, he permitted an old servant to sell the sheep, while he went into a hayloft to work out a mathematical problem. His father found that he could not make a farmer out of him, so he let him devote himself to study, and he became a great philosopher. There was in England a breed of very small curly-haired dogs, called King Charles Spaniels, because they were great favorites of the king. Newton owned one of them, whom he called Diamond. He was very fond of the little creature, and was continually caressing it and stroking its glossy hair.

One night he left his library and in it this little black Diamond. The dog jumped upon the table, overturned the candle, and set fire to papers upon which were figures that had cost his master years of hard work. They were all destroyed, so that when Newton returned to his room he found, in place of the papers, nothing but ashes.

What should he do? Fall to beating and kicking the dog? No; he was a great-souled, self-governed man; and he simply said. "Ah, Diamond! Diamond! little thou knowest the mischief thou hast done."

Fashionable Lady: "Don't you think, Doctor, that my husband ought to send me to some fashionable watering-place for my health?" Doctor: "Why, madam, you have a phenomenonally robust physique. Fashionable Lady: "I knew there was something the matter with me. Where have I to go to get rid of it."—

The Queen at Osborne.

The regular congregation of Whippingham church for the most part consists of the queen's pensioners and employes, writes an Isle of Wight correspondent of The Philadelphia Press. She paid for the entire cost of its erection. It was designed by the prince consort, to whose memory it contains a beautiful mural monument, put up "by his devoted and broken-hearted Victoria." It is under the shadow of this monument, secure from the vulgar gaze, that the queen's chair is placed, in view of the members of her own household seated in the chancel, but completely hidden from the curious crowd who throng the little church whenever there is a prospect of her majesty attending one of its services.

Victoria never permits herself to forget her husband; but in her remembrance of the dead she does not neglect the living. Her nearest neighbor at Osborne is her youngest daughter, who has allotted to her a little bit of a house, such has may be found by the dozen in suburban London, having a double front—i. e., a door in the center, with a window each side, a grass lawn and flower-bed in front. The residence of the crown princess of Germany and of the prince of Wales are only divided by a wire fence stretched across the ground, and they are within easy reach of Osborne. There is always someone at Osborne, the queen having plenty of grandchildren, and consequently the establishment is somewhat of a large one. But the stables are by no means extensive, most of the horses and carriages being hired. In fact, the queen keeps only eight on the island.

To look after these eight horses there is such a number of upper servants that the poor stablemen get very badly paid. Three dollars a week and a bed is the return they receive for a day of twelve hours. They rise at 5 a. m. and knock off at 5 p. m. with an hour for dinner, and in the absence of the queen the occupants of her house take care there shall be no lack of work. Women servants, butlers, lacqueys, waiters and flunkeys ride about in imitation of ladies and gentlemen in waiting, who are much more royal than the queen. One of the old woman living in the Whippingham almshouse was asked how she like her majesty. The old lady, an Irish woman, and not far off 103 years old, said: "Sure, and her majesty is a darlint; but the Lord preserve us from the ladies in waitin'." There are numerous inconsistencies attracting attention in the management of the queen's estate. Bearing reins have been loudly and widely condemned when used in Hyde Park to show off a fine horse by keeping the head up and the neck always arched, and yet the queen not only permits their employment, but encourages it, and even her cart horses in the field are subjected to the cruelty that they may look their best. Still her majesty has a tender heart. The land she sublets is poor, overrun with rabbits, and giving the farmers a meager return. But her majesty will not allow a single "pussy" to be shot, or a stock dove killed. What is the consequence? In winter all the loafers in Ryde are poachers. They disregard the severe penalties, and walk about Osborne with lurcher dogs. Sometimes they come into contact with the keepers, and last February they laid in wait for one, and maltreated him to such an extent that they left him for dead.

A Counter-Irritant.

A physician occasionally produces an irritation in one part of the body in order to relieve an irritation existing in another part. Not unfrequently a counter-irritant is as useful in a moral as it is in a physical disease. A self-willed young man, living in the South, and sick with intermittent fever, sent for a physician, a naturalized Frenchman, who was noted for insisting upon literal obedience to his prescriptions. He came, inquired, prescribed, and left two or three sorts of medicine, with minute directions for taking them.

The next day, a little before the time when the patient should have experienced a return of the usual chill, the doctor rode up to the house, and entering asked how the sick man was. He found that the wilful young gentleman had not taken a drop of the medicine, and that the chill, coming on earlier than the expected time, had sent him to bed shaking with the ague.

The angry doctor stamped up to the patient's room, stripped off the bed-clothes, gave him a smart whipping with a riding-whip, covered him up, and left him roaring with pain and vexation.

A profuse perspiration followed, and neither the ague nor the doctor returned. But the young man, as soon as he got out, sued the doctor for assault and battery. At the trial the doctor pleaded his own case.

"I only did my duty," said he, "as a doctor. I had to prescribe, and when I found my prescription neglected, I had to administer. It was the crisis of the disease; there was not time to make a mustard plaster, and I therefore administered the only remedy which the time and circumstances admitted. I used a counter-irritant, and its effect was beneficial to the patient's mind and body. The patient began to get well from that very hour.

"I do promise the court," he continued, speaking in broken English so as to intensify the laughter, which already convulsed the judges, "that de charge of sault and batter is not true. Cooks use salt and batter, but a doctor—nevare!"

The laughing court gave the young man one shilling damages, and the next day he received from the doctor a bill for "medical treatment in his intermittent fever."

Polson's Nerviline.

Hundreds who have experienced the wonderful power of Nerviline in subduing pain have testified that it is the most potent remedy in existence. Nerviline is equally efficacious as an internal or an external remedy. Polson's Nerviline cures flatulence, chills, spasms, cholera, cramps, headache, sea sickness, summer complaints, &c., &c. Nerviline is sold by all druggists and country dealers. Only 25 cents a bottle. Try it.

"Billy Jones struck a great snap," said a man to an acquaintance. "Has he, indeed?" was the reply. "Well, I'm mighty glad to hear it. Billy is a first-class, hard-working, young fellow and deserves a good thing. How did he run across it?" "Why he monkeyed with a turtle in front of a restaurant."

THE HOUSEHOLD.

Tested Recipes.

A DAINTY DISH.—Take is for breakfast or luncheon, and is made of fresh crisp toast, buttered very slightly. On each slice put salmon and cucumber, or cold meat and chutney, sprinkle with pepper and wrap each slice in a lettuce leaf that has been steeped in vinegar.

TOMATO SOUP.—To one quart of boiling water add one quart of tomatoes; boil again and put in one teaspoonful of soda; and as soon as it has ceased foaming, add one pint of milk, four rolled crackers, butter, pepper and salt, and serve very hot.

CREAM POTATOES.—Chop cold, boiled potatoes, put two or more tablespoonfuls of butter into a frying pan when hot, rub into it a spoonful of flour, but do not brown. Add a cup of rich milk, and when it boils, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, pepper and salt, then the potatoes. Boil up well and serve, a little onion may be added if desired.

TUTTI FRUTTI.—One quart of rich cream, one and one-half ounces of sweet almonds, chopped fine, one-half pound of sugar; freeze and when sufficiently congealed add one-half pound of preserved fruits, with a few white raisins chopped, and finely sliced citron. Cut the fruit small and mix well with the cream. Freeze like ice cream. Keep on ice until required.

CURRANT CAKE.—Cream three ounces of butter with two ounces of powdered sugar and three eggs, one at a time, using one ounce of flour with each egg, and beat well until quite smooth. Add one ounce of citron, finely minced, and pour the mixture into buttered cups or moulds. Have an ounce and a half of currants nicely cleaned, and sprinkle them over the tops of the cakes. Bake in a moderate oven until light brown.

COTTAGE PUDDING.—Two eggs, one cup of sugar, butter, size of a walnut, 1½ cups of flour, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Bake in a loaf like a cake twenty minutes and serve with lemon sauce. Two eggs, yolk of one, cup of sugar, one-half cup of butter, one tablespoonful of cornstarch. Beat eggs and sugar till light, add grated rind and juice of one lemon. Stir the whole into three gills of boiling water, and cook until sufficiently thick for the table.

SNOW-FLAKE CAKE.—Beat half a cupful of butter to a cream, add gradually a cupful and a half of sugar and the juice of half a lemon; when very light, add one fourth of a cupful of milk, the whites of five eggs beaten to a stiff froth; next add two cupfuls of flour in which a teaspoonful and a half of baking powder, or one teaspoonful of cream of tarter and a half a teaspoonful of soda, is mixed. Bake in sheets in a moderate oven. For frosting, beat the white of three eggs to a stiff froth, add by degrees two large cupfuls of powdered sugar, half a grated cocoanut and the juice of half a lemon.

Hints.

Remove flower-pot stains from window sills by rubbing with fine wood ashes and rinse with clear water.

Washing pine floor in a solution of one pound of coperas dissolved in one gallon of strong lye gives oak color.

Stains on ivory may be taken out by washing with soap and water and placing it, while wet, in the air to bleach.

If matting, counterpanes or bed-spreads have oil split on them, wet with alcohol, rub with hard soap and then rinse with clear cold water.

To take ink stains out of table cloths, napkins etc., put the article to soak immediately in thick sour milk, changing the milk as often as necessary.

Wash hair brushes and combs in soft water and liquid ammonia in the proportion of four teaspoonfuls of liquid ammonia to one quart of water.

Kitchen tables may be made as white as new if washed with soap and wood ashes. Floors look best scrubbed with cold water, soap and wood ashes.

Egg shells crushed into small bits and shaken well in decanters three parts filled with cold water will not only clean them thoroughly, but make the glass look like new.

To prevent lamp-wicks from smoking they should be soaked in vinegar and then thoroughly dried. It is said that they will never smoke if this process is adopted.

HEALTH.

Sanitary Precautions.

The present is a peculiar season. The [illegible] of the early spring was about the [illegible], but May was excessively wet, and [illegible] rainfall of the month was nearly all con[illegible] to one week. The ground at the end [illegible] saturated with water. But from the [illegible] of May only a very small amount of [illegible] has fallen, and the dry season, which [illegible] comes between the middle of July and [illegible] 1st of September, commenced June 1st. [illegible] effect upon the crops in all this region [illegible] serious, and already many complain of [illegible] result from the effect of the dry air upon [illegible] body. The usual depression of dry sea[illegible] has been relieved by the amount of [illegible] which has been present in the air, and [illegible] which stimulates the body as well as puri[illegible] the air, for ozone is nature's disinfect[illegible]. Now this condition demands some [illegible] care to preserve the health, particu[illegible] in country homes and at summer re[illegible].

All should look out for impure water. [illegible] country homes are supplied with wa[illegible] from surface wells and springs; that is, [illegible] which are filled from the grounds in [illegible] vicinity. The water falls upon the [illegible] and immediately around, and simply [illegible] down through the soil and loose [illegible] into the well. When surroundings [illegible] cleanly, these wells usually contain [illegible] water; otherwise they become filthy [illegible] dangerous. In seasons of drouth like [illegible] present, all such wells become low, and [illegible] danger of impurity is increased many[illegible]. The result is too often seen in the [illegible] number of zymotic diseases in the [illegible] (perhaps better called filth diseases) [illegible] every period of drouth. The danger [illegible] be exaggerated. The writer once ex[illegible] boiled the water from a well and found [illegible] unseen grains of organic matter to a gal[illegible], when the limit of safety is two! Ty[illegible] fever is emphatically a disease of the [illegible] in the fall, and it comes because of [illegible] in the well. There is no reason [illegible], with proper care, the country should [illegible] be free from all these diseases. Far [illegible] often the weary man of affairs leaves [illegible] city for a few days, only to go to some [illegible] resort where there is no care to se[illegible] pure water, there to suffer from some [illegible] these filth diseases.

Then, again, care must be taken to re[illegible] all masses of decomposing matter. [illegible] this material always accumulates around [illegible] dwellings. These refuse heaps fester in the [illegible], and then they usually reveal their [illegible] presence and the danger through the eder. [illegible] But it is not always so. Sometimes [illegible] there is just moisture enough to trickle [illegible] down into the ground and so poison the [illegible] water. The gases which arise from them [illegible] are debilitating, though not often directly [illegible] deadly. But it is very easy to remove them [illegible] completely, for a thin layer of dry earth [illegible] will absorb all the products of decomposition [illegible] and the danger is gone. Dry earth is the [illegible] proper disinfectant for country use, and it [illegible] is always at hand when most needed—in [illegible] seasons of drouth.

Then there is one more caution which [illegible] applies to city and country alike. It is to [illegible] avoid all unhealthy food. There is much [illegible] built in the market which was good food [illegible] once, but is always on the point of decompe[illegible]sition. Frequently dangerous substances [illegible] are produced by such changes, and danger [illegible] lurks in all decomposing food. This source [illegible] of danger should be shunned. All should [illegible] keep the body well. It is a sacred trust. A [illegible] little care at this season will enable those of [illegible] ordinary vigor to pass the season in health [illegible] and comparative comfort.

The Germ Theory of Disease.

It really seems as if there is nothing new [illegible] under the sun. We have all along been [illegible] supposing that to Pasteur and his contem[illegible]poraries belong the credit of first establish[illegible]ing the fact that the propagation of diseases [illegible] in animal system was due to the reproduc[illegible]tion of invisible bacteria within the organism; [illegible] but a Doctor Guiffen, who published a work [illegible] on the "Origin of the Plague," in 1721, an[illegible]ticipated Pasteur and his associates by over [illegible] one hundred and fifty years. His statement [illegible] of the theory is so precise that it is worth [illegible] reproduction here. He says: "Minute in[illegible]sects or worms alone can explain these dis[illegible]eases. It is true they are not visible; but it [illegible] does notherefore follow that they are non-[illegible]existent. It is only that our microscopes [illegible] are not at present powerful enough to show [illegible] them. We can easily imagine the existence [illegible] of creatures which bear the same proper[illegible]tion to mites that mites bear to elephants, [illegible] No other hypothesis can explain the facts. [illegible] Neither the malign influence of stars, not [illegible] terrestrial exhalations, nor miasmata, nor [illegible] atoms, whether biting or burning, acid or [illegible] bitter, could regain their vitality once they [illegible] had lost it. If, on the other hand, we ad[illegible]mit the existence of minute living creatures, [illegible] we understand how infection can be convey[illegible]ed in a latent condition from one place to [illegible] break out afresh in another." Yet this [illegible] acute and wise anticipater in medical [illegible] science was not only ignored in his day, but [illegible] was regarded as a crank.

FAME AND INFAMY.

The Difference of Condition Which Give Rise to the Two Words.

Fame is the sum of all the good acts of all time.

Infamy is the sum of all the bad acts of all time.

Fame confers the highest honor.

Infamy the deepest disgrace.

Fame is the reward of an unselfish life.

Infamy is the reward of a selfish life.

It is a bad error to mistake infamy for fame.

Infamy shows well for a time to the uninitiated, surpassing even fame.

Every right work is fameward.

Every wrong act is in the line of infamy.

Infamy insures a harder life than fame.

Fame comes by benefitting our fellows.

Infamy injures them.

Fame's honors are pleasant.

Infamy brings dishonor and disgrace.

Fame plants gardens.

Fame excels in all labor.

Fame wins in architecture.

Fame is democratic.

Fame succeeds in war, succeeds in commerce, excites to labor in school, constructs great works, benefits the State and the people, promotes Christian civilization.

Fame is the sum of the ocean of man's best acts.

Every right act of the scholar, the statesmen, the artisan, the engineer, the laborer, is a drop in the sea of fame.

Every act of our lives adds to the sea of fame or of infamy.

Infamy is fame's enemy.

Infamy is the ally of slow disease, indolence, and ignorance.

Infamy chooses the down-hill path.

Infamy's great works are wrecks.

Infamy slanders.

Infamy suspects.

Infamy seduces.

Infamy is jealous.

Infamy traduces faith.

Infamy defies law.

Infamy promotes disorder and disobedience.

Infamy is the enemy of discipline.

Fame begins in the school to labor upward.

Infamy floats ever downward.

Fame's labour is rewarding and satisfactory.

Infamy's work is disorganizing and bitter.

Improved roses, luscious fruits, finest works of art, and unselfish Christian lives are the products of fame.

Ruins, stolen fruits, lusts, intemperate and untimely pleasures are the work of infamy.

We choose for which we shall strive—the honors of fame, or the indolent, poisonous, bitter fruits of infamy.

FOREIGN FLUTTERINGS.

The Cremation Society of England has forth a statement, congratulating its friends on the steady progress which the society is making. It appears, however, that it has only cremated six corpses in the last two years.

In Russia a very large proportion of the marriages are between boys and girls under twenty years of age, and no less than from 60 to 70 per cent. of the conscripts, who cannot be twenty-one years of age, are already married when they come to be enrolled in the army.

It is proposed to place a marble medallion of large size in the Poet's Corner of Westminster Abbey, as a memorial to Sir Walter Scott. The medallion, which is to be the work of Sir John Steell, is to cost £157, and it will scarcely credited that the fees to the Dean and Chapter for the site amount to the scandalously large sum of £101.

At Madras the other day a European employed on the railway, previous to committing suicide, posted letters to two of the officials saying that he had been on the lookout to take their lives, but, since that could not be managed, he was resolved to take his own. His correspondents must have been rather glad that he changed his mind at the last moment.

A great number of policemen at Amsterdam have tendered their resignations in consequence of their functions having become too onerous and disagreeable. Nowhere, perhaps, does there exist a more stupid hatred of the police, as the guardians of public order and safety, than among the populace of Amsterdam and the other large towns of Holland. In fact, the baiting of policeman seems to be considered by the Dutch rabble as even a more innocent and legitimate game than eel-baiting.

A glance through the last report of the British Registrar-General reveals some very interesting information. For instance, according to this authority, the English are a people very much given to matrimony. Not only is their average annual marriage-rate higher than those of all other European countries, with the exception of the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires, but they also marry at an earlier age than is the case in any other European country, excepting Russia.

Aristocratic society in London is rejoicing over the fact that the aristocracy had no representatives in the Crawford-Dilke affair at all. Mrs. Crawford's father was a merchant and shipowner; her mother, the daughter of a gentleman in the East India Company's service. As for Sir Charles Dilke, although he comes of a highly respectable family, there is not the slightest tinge of blue blood in his veins. His mother was the daughter of a captain in the Madras Army, while his father owed his baronetcy to the Queen's favor.

Lovers of art have been long puzzled to account for the disappearance of several frescoes and other decorative paintings described by Jacob Vos in his account of the Museum at Amsterdam. They were not to be found any longer, and there was no record of their fate. Some years ago M. Greeve, the Curator of the Academy of Science, discovered a fresco on a ceiling in the museum which had been painted over. This fresco was by Niklaas Held Stekade, according to Vos. He has again lately, in the hall in which Rembrandt's "Night Watch" is placed, discovered a series of frescoes, which seem to be nearly as old as the building. They were all covered over with a thick paper, which had been painted and grained to imitate walnut wood. It is conjectured that this was done about the time of the French invasion, 90 years ago, to protect the pictures from appropriation by the French generals. On the whole they are in a fair state of preservation.

A WHALER'S DOOM.

The Mate Who Struck Fleetwood.

"I was on a Nantucket whaler called the O. M. Case," said William Smith, "and we were on the Brazilian Banks when the adventure occurred which I am about to relate. It had been five days since we had heard the cry of 'There she blows!' and everybody aboard, from Captain to scullion, was cross and out of sorts. The Captain had offered a prize of I don't know how much tobacco to the first one who sighted a whale, but it was no use. It was during this state of affairs, with the mates aching to catch us tripping as an excuse for venting their ill feelings, when one morning after breakfast the old man ordered down two of the boats for a little practice to keep the blisters on our palms from healing up. The first boat had moved off about twice the ship's length, and the men were just getting settled on the thwarts, when a big bull whale at least seventy feet long came up directly under the boat and sent her sky high. I was in the other boat, and it seemed to me for a moment as if and broken boards. The boat was smashed into fifty pieces, and with a frightened flop of his flukes, the whale killed two of the swimming men, rolled over and over two or three times and then took a header for the bottom.

IT RAINED MEN AND OARS

"We had been looking for whales, and one had turned up under our noses with a vengeance. The survivors of the boat were pulled aboard of the ship, and we lay there waiting and watching for the whale to show up again. He was half a mile away at the next spout, and went down before we could get to him. He then disappeared for good, and we drifted all day without sight of another spout. Our poor luck and the loss of the boat increased the Captain's ill humor, and the mates, of course, took their cue from him and knocked the men about with free hand. The first mate, in whose watch I was, was particularly abusive toward a young sailor named Fleetwood, who was not only homesick, but in poor health. At length, seizing upon some slight pretext, the officer felled Fleetwood to the deck and then brutally kicked him. It was enough to make every man's blood boil, but a word on our part would have been mutiny. When the young man got up, his face smeared with blood and his limbs shaking under him, he staggered to the side, called good-by to us, and went overboard before any one could raise a hand to prevent. There was a cry of horror, followed by a groan of dismay from the men, but the mate tried to bluff it out by declaring that he was in no manner to blame, and that Fleetwood had been insubordinate ever since the voyage began. As we gathered forward, one old man whispered that God would surely punish the mate for his cruelty before that voyage was ended. Next morning the Captain held an investigation, but it was a farce. Those of us who were called into the cabin were talked to, instead of being permitted to tell our stories, and it went down on the log book that Fleetwood jumped overboard rather than do duty and finish his voyage.

"At about 11 o'clock that day, while we were drifting, that same whale broke water again so near the ship that we could have pitched a biscuit clear over him from the rail. There were plenty of barnacles clinging to him, and he had other evidences of old age. We knew him to be the same from

A PECULIAR SCAR ON HIS HEAD.

From a point just above his left eye there was a gash three feet long, or what had once been a gash as it was now fully healed up. In healing it had left a ridge, and this ridge was of a lighter color than the rest of the head. However, aside from this mark, any one of us could have identified the monster. No two whales are any more alike than two horses or two oxen. Every man was on deck, and the voice of the captain calling away the boats had scarcely been heard before the first one was in the water. The whale was too quick for us again. As the boats moved away he went down, and twenty minutes later came up half a mile to windward. Away went the boats, that of the mate leading. I pulled an oar in his boat, and as we led the other, and as it was seen that the whale was resting on the surface, the mate gave vent to his exultation in language to make you shudder. He cursed and abused us for lazy louts—cursed the whale, the ship, the sea—flung his cap overboard, and called upon the Almighty to kill him should he ever go to sea again with such a set of men. Indeed, he seemed to be out of his head entirely. We pulled as if our lives were at stake, and as we sent her through the water. We got no word from the mate to cease rowing as we drew near the fish. The harpooner stood ready with his instrument, but he got no sign. As a matter of fact we ran the boat dead against the whale, striking him near the hump. At the same instant the harpooner put in his iron, and then tumbled among us over the thwarts from the collision. It was not twenty seconds later when the boat was lifted fifteen feet high, and at the same time completely wrecked. We spilled out one after another, and as we came down each man grasped something to float him. We were on either side of the whale, some close to his head and others back of his hump. He made just the one grand splash which sent us flying, and then lay quiet, as if too astonished to move again. The mate called to us to work away from the monster, and in the course of three minutes we were a hundred feet to leeward of him, being helped along by the send of the sea. The other boat had come up before this, but was edging off to leeward to pick us up before daring to put in another harpoon.

THE BOAT FAIRLY HISSED

"I was the first one reached, and one by one the men were picked up until only the mate remained. He was using the water keg as a float, and I think he had been hurt as the boat was struck. At any rate, he was still fifty feet away when all the others had been hauled in, and he was cursing like a pirate at the slowness of the boat. Such was the state of affairs when the whale rolled over and over half a dozen times, as if to rid himself of the harpoon, and then turned on us, and made a rush for the boat. We got out of his way, but only by such a close shave that we were nearly swamped by his sea, while he RAN RIGHT OVER THE MATE.

He went to leeward a quarter of a mile, and then turned and passed us by a few fathoms and ran out of sight to windward, dragging several hundred feet of line in his wake. We made search for the mate, but got no trace of him. His death was only what some of the old men had predicted, but it was three weeks later before we knew the full truth of the matter. We rose that same whale one afternoon and killed him. He was all in a tangle with the lines, and when we came to pull them in we found the mate's body. It was held fast by three or four turns around the body, and had been towed about ever since that fatal day. The flesh had fairly been worn off the bones, and the corpse presented a terrible spectacle. If heaven had a hand in it, to avenge poor Fleetwood's death, as most of the men believed, it had selected almost the worst form of death that a sailor could die, for there was no question but that the mate was towed a living burden for a long time—perhaps an hour or two."

CHARGED BY "REDS."

An Incident of the Late Rebellion.

The country was rough and broken, and the Indians had gathered until their number was estimated at 1,200. It was evident from their actions that they were determined to oppose further progress.

The idea had first been to find the Indians and fight them. The camp on the bank of the stream was a good defensive position, being on a bluff well covered with trees, and the ground pretty well broken. The camp extended along a front of half a mile, taking in a sort of grove. To the west there was an interval of a quarter of a mile, and then a smaller grove, while to the east the ground was clear for miles. The attack first came from the Indians. At daylight they sent forward sharpshooters, who crept as near the camp as possible and opened fire with considerable effect. This was speedily returned from the rifles of the scouts and the carbines of the troopers, but after an hour the men were ordered to save their ammunition. During the firing a large number of Indians crossed to the north side of the stream and opened fire from that direction, but they wasted their bullets.

It was afternoon before the fight opened in real earnest. At least 500 dismounted Indians then advanced upon the front of the camp, taking advantage of every rock and and hollow, although the camp could not have been better sheltered a number of men and horses were hit within an hour. It was soon discovered that the real attack was to be made on the right flank.

MOUNTED INDIANS

to the number of 300 gathered on the open ground between the groves for a dash into the camp. With the troops strung out on such a long front and having plenty to do, a flank attack meant disaster, and the commander prepared to checkmate it. Fifty men were ordered into the saddle under cover of the trees, and at the blast of the bugle they charged full at the force of red skins. After a volley from the carbines the men drew sabres, and with the war cry which had echoed on a score of battlefields of the South, they rode down upon the dusky foe. The Indians at first seemed determined to stand, but as the line came nearer and the naked sabres glittered before their eyes they suddenly broke and fled. The orders to the cavalry were not to push the Indians any distance, but simply to break them; but in the excitement some of the men allowed their enthusiasm to carry them too far. As they finally drew rein at the call of the bugle seven troopers found themselves cut off from the main body. One of them was a corporal, and, as soon as he saw the situation, he ordered the squad to make for the second grove. They reached this to find it about half an acre in extent, the ground not only well covered with trees, but broken into natural rifle pits, and dotted here and there with boulders.

The troopers reached the grove amid a shower of bullets and arrows, which fortunately injured no one, and instead of trying to cover the whole ground they took up a position at the eastern end, and threw up a breastwork of logs and rocks. While they were working at this every one of and the men added the bodies to the breastwork. The entire force of Indians now crowded in between the two groves, thus cutting off all hopes that the seven troopers might be rescued by a charge. The larger body was held under a very hot fire, and every man in it felt that the squadron thus cut off would be butchered within half an hour. It was well for the seven that the corporal was a cool and level-headed fellow. His first instructions were to count their cartridges. While some had sixty, having just been served before the charge, others had as high as seventy-two, thus making the average sixty-five rounds per man. In addition to their Spencers each man had a Remington revolver with abundance of ammunition. From the moment they intrenched in the grove at least 500 Indians turned their whole attention to wiping the little command out. A fire was maintained on a complete crescent, and the troopers did not fire one return shot for nearly an hour. Then, as the emboldened Indians began to creep nearer, the Spencers were brought into play for ten rounds apiece, and at least twenty Indians were killed or wounded. From a tree in a larger camp one of the scouts saw them bear off fourteen warriors in their arms, and six or eight more went limping out of the fight without help. Five hundred bullets a minute during the hottest of the fire struck the breastworks, but not one of its defenders was injured.

About an hour before sundown it was seen that the Indians were getting ready for a grand advance on the isolated troopers.

A SUDDEN RUSH FROM ALL SIDES

would result in the capture of the men. Not one of their carbines had been heard for the last hour, and no one could say whether they were dead or alive. The general belief was that they were dead. The ground was favorable for the Indians to advance on horseback, and some two hundred of them formed in the valley in one long, single line. The firing all at once ceased, and with a "Yi! yi! yi!" the redskins dashed forward at the grove, the ends of the line riding the fastest, so as to completely envelop the position held by the troopers. It was as square a charge as white men ever made; but when the line was within pistol shot of the grove the seven troopers sprang out of their fort, opened out in skirmishing order, and the way the ounce balls from those carbines screamed into the Indians was something to make one cheer. The men hadn't fired three rounds apiece before the line was wavering, and as they kept it up the charge degenerated into a mob. There was cheering, yelling, shooting, and rushing to and fro. Between the reports of the Spencers we got the crack of the revolvers and the snap of the rifles, but the smoke settled down so thick that all objects were speedily shut out. While we cheered our comrades for the brave defence they were making, no one had the least hope of their escape. You can, therefore, judge of our amazement when, after the Spencers had seemed to fire in volleys four or five times, the seven troopers came running in under the smoke cloud. Three of them were wounded with bullets and two others with arrows, but none seriously. They had fought with a plan, and their plan had been a success.

The defence and escape was a matter of wonderment to Indian fighters as well as green hands, and particularly so in the loss to the Indians. Three months later, after the truce, they admitted a direct loss from the defence of these seven men of nineteen killed, eleven wounded, and ten ponies killed or rendered useless. They withdrew without making another serious attack upon us, having suffered a total loss of thirty-two killed and about as many wounded.

The average yearly rent of the Bell telephone is placed at $100. The average cost of the instrument is $3 25, and hence nothing but an early assignment can save the company from total financial ruin.

A gentleman complains that when he enters church Sunday morning his shoes squeak, and he wants to know how the nuisance can be abated. Easy enough. Sunday morning put on a heavy pair of boots and go fishing.

"What a popular girl Miss Harvey is," said one young man to another, of a young lady whom he had been watching for some time as she sat on a hotel piazza. "She has a crowd of admirers around her all the time." "Yes," said his companion, "I've been watching her too. Even the mosquitoes seems to be mashed on her."

MARKDALE, SEPT. 2. 1886.

—An Anarchist system of incediarism, or the purpose of defrauding insurance companies, has been brought to light n New York.

—It is intimated that the Government intend shortly to allow the sale of beer, and all kinds of light wines, to be sold in the North-west. This would, we believe, be a sad mistake.

—Mrs. Cleveland's photographer prints 500 pictures in a day, and still cannot supply the demand. That is in a country where they ridicule our interest in royalty.

—Woodstock is one of the most prosperous towns in Ontario, and now that C. P. R., connection with London is assured at an early date, continued growth will be a certainty.

Some people cherish the delusion that nothing can be raised among the rocks of Muskoka, but in a case tried before Judge Morgan recently it was sworn that a Muskoka farmer had raised a $7 note to $47. Such crops as this should pay.

Sir John Macdonald, Hon. Edward Blake and Hon. Oliver Mowat were the recipients of enthusiastic demonstrations at Ottawa on Monday night. There was two distinct gatherings however, tho' held the same evening and in the same city.

Russia has apparently got the lion share of the territory in dispute between her and Afghanistan. Russia was ready to fight over the question, and England was not; hence the one-sided settlement. If Afghanistan is enabled to retain Herat her Ameer will be satisfied.

—There is a regular crank convention at Niagara Falls, each delegate being professedly bent upon swimming the rapids. Forbid them not. It is better that they should be thus engaged, at their own peril, than be going around shooting statesmen, editors, and other great men.

—The Northern Pacific Junction (designed to give Toronto and all Ontario direct connection with the main line of the Canadian Pacific) has been completed some time, has passed Government inspection, and ought to have been opened weeks ago. But as yet only the 70 miles from Gravenhurst to Sunbridge has been opened to the public: the 40 miles beyond and ending at the C. P. R. is still without a service, and as a consequence travelers to or from Ontario have to take the roundabout way.

—Although Canada has no formal reciprocity treaty with the United States, we have nevertheless reciprocity in thieves, and the advantage is on our side. They send over to us men of the Eno type, with large fortunes in silver and gold, and we send them back an occasional shipment with a paltry thousand or two in his pockets. Putting the moral aspect of the case out of sight, Canada has much the better bargain. And as it is morally as wrong to steal one thousand as to steal one hundred thousand dollars, what is the matter with the moral aspect of the case?

—The Postmaster-General of the United States has decided that postmasters who fail to notify publishers when subscribers remove or do not take the papers from the post office shall be responsible for their subscriptions. In the United States, people appreciate the fact that newspapers, take them all around, are an enormous benefit to the community and guarantee of the public weal and accordingly are disposed to give them fair play. In Canada people have not got so far yet. Canadian laws leave Canadian newspapers largely at the mercy of swindlers and black mailers.

A GREAT AWAKENING.—There is a great awakening of the sluggish organs of the human system when Burdock Blood Bitters are taken. It arouses the torpid Liver to action, regulates the bowels and the kidnies, purifies the blood, and restores a healthy tone to the system generally.

SIX YEARS OLD.

Year after year is fleeting
And again we send a greeting
To our patrons who are scattered,
Far and near.

We hope to always merit
And continue to inherit
Your patronage and friendship,
Year by year.

It becomes our pleasing duty this week to address a few words to our numerous subscribers and friends, on the occasion of the commencement of our seventh volume. The relations which has existed between us during the past six years, has been on the whole, very harmonious. Being young in years, together with a want of journalistic experience, has perhaps militated against us more than we were aware, yet, with the organ of cautiousness well developed, and a smattering of common sense, we have escaped many difficulties and petty annoyances common to editors of country papers.

The STANDARD is a welcome weekly visitor to hundreds of homes, and the number constantly increasing. This week we present it in a "new dress" which we trust all our patrons will duly appreciate. This improvement involves considerable expense, and we hope each subscriber who may be in arrears will show their appreciation of our efforts to improve the paper, by paying their indebtedness promptly.

We return thanks to all who have patronized the paper during the past, and especially would we remember our correspondents, many of whom have been a very material means of strength to the STANDARD. We trust they may not weary in well-doing. We would here earnestly request our near neighbors, as well as those at a distance, that when any items of news occurs in your vicinity, kindly let us know, by card, letter or verbaly. It is only in this way that we can learn and thus publish the local news of the district. We have no other means of learning the various doings of the district more than any other individual; you will therefore do us a favor by reporting, don't leave it for some one else and then wonder we did not find it out; take us into your confidence and you'll not regret it. Wishing you all prosperity, we are yours faithfully.

C. P. R. CROP REPORT.

A LARGE YIELD EXPECTED IN NEARLY EVERY SECTON.

The crops along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the province of Ontario this year have proved to be unusually good, and the following reports, which are summaries of the statements of agents along the lines, have been more than realized in so far as they relate to crops already garnered. On the Credit Valley section westward to Milton fall wheat was reported as light, the average being only 10 to 12 bushels to the acre, but westward from there to St. Thomas the crops was a fair average realizing 20 to 25 bushels to the acre. On the Orangeville and Elora branches 12 to 15 bushels was the average yield. Spring wheat was good throughout the whole section, realizing 15 to 20 bushels. Barley was reported good everywhere yielding 20 to 30 bushels, according to locality. In some few places oats were light, but generally the reports were favorable, the yield varying from 30 to 50 bushels. Rye was but little sown. Peas were everywhere good. Root crops good. Hay fair, and fruit good in most places. Along sections fall wheat was fairly good, except towards Teeswater, but the average in other places was from 20 to 30 bushels to the acre. Spring wheat is a good average, yielding 15 to 20 bushels. Barley was fair till Shelburne is reached, thence the crop was light to Flesherton where good crops are again reported. Oats are a good crop, yielding 30 to 40 bushels. Little rye appears to be sown. Peas are a good average crop, 25 to 30 bushels. Roots will yield well. Hay is fair; but fruits, except at a few points will be light. On the fall wheat in the neighborhood of Toronto was a failure, but further east there was a good yield, average 25 to 30 bushels. Spring wheat was good, 15 to 25 bushels. Barley was excellent, the yield being about 35 to 40 bushels to the acre. Oats also were good, 30 to 45 bushels. Little rye was sown, the average being 15 to 20 bushels. A good average yield of roots is expected. Fruit is generally good, though some few places report light crops.

THE TORONTO, GREY, & BRUCE

ONTARIO AND QUEBEC SECTION,

West's Pain King will never disappoint you It is always ready and costs but 25 cents It is indeed a friends need. Purchase a bottle at A. Turner & Co, and you will be without it. It cures cholera and all bowel difficulties.

McFARLAND

Is taking time by the forlock and preparing for the coming season.

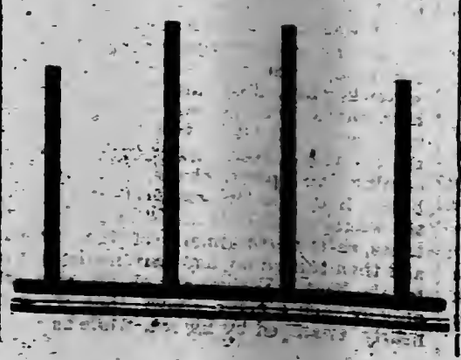
He has just received the following letter from his agent in England:

Manchester, August 4th, 1886.

My Dear McFarland:

Your letter with enclosures received. Having just completed a large order for a Montreal wholesale firm, I will commence here to-morrow to make your purchases, and have pleasure in telling you that I can place your order upon exactly same terms as I did for the wholesale house I bought for. There are some lovely DRESS GOODS, VELVETS and CASHMERES in this market which I will select for you, and then go on to LONDON for the SILKS, LACES, SATINS and other goods you order, as I can do better for you in London for those goods than here.

Was pleased to learn that business with you was good, and that you anticipated an increase in your fall and winter's business. I shall do my part to help the increase, by sending you goods bought on as good terms as any wholesale house in Canada.



I remain,

Yours faithfully,

J. SELWIN.

P. S.—I expect to make a shipment of your goods say in ten days.

NOTES WRITTEN BY ELECTRIC LIGHT.

(From an occasional correspondent.)

On Friday last master Willie Oatt met with a serious accident while out shooting on the bay. It appears he had the gun in the bottom of the boat ready for action, and when some game attracted his eye he lifted the gun and something caught the triggar causing a discharge, the whole contents entered his right arm shattering the muscles fearfully; being alone he rowed as best he could across the bay to his boat house and on arrival fainted with exhaustion. When consciousness returned he managed to walk up town when Dr. Barnhart was called in and dressed the limb and thinks he can bring it around. Since above, he is improving favorably.

The Schooner Q. Q. Lamb arrived last Thursday with part of the machinery of the ill-fated Algoma: Some of the immensly heavy castings, which one would think could not be broken, are a complete wreck.

Lieut. Geo. Robinson and party passed through here for Toronto on Monday after spending a few weeks in the North West.

Str. Athabaska left on Wednesday 25th with 750 tons merchandise and about 120 first and 75 second class passengers.

The Alberta left on Saturday last with 570 tons freight, 95 first and 30 second class passengers. The Athabaska arrived down on Tuesday, (having been delayed a day with fogs) with 75 first and 40 second class passengers and 100 tons freight. The steamers Atlantic, Pacific, and City of Owen Sound were in on their regular trips, all of which had a good list of passengers and freight.

The owners of the Francis Smith are claiming damages from Uncle Sam's Government for illegal seizure. They say they cannot balance any fish question on them.

INVISIBLE BUT INSTANTANEOUS.

All pains or aches will be instantly removed by a few drops of Fluid Lightning applied over the effected parts. No time lost; no nauseous medicines needed; no poulticing or using greasy liniments. It will not blister or discolor the skin. Sold at 25c. per bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist. Sufferers from Neuralgia assure us that they never fear it when their house contains a bottle of Fluid Lightning. 4

Flesherton Station.

From our own correspondent.

The Station now rejoices in a through mail to Toronto by morning train and back at night. This additional mail accomodation will be a great boon to shippers here. It has been in operation over a week.

Business has been dull for some time; signs of revival have already set in however, and as soon as grain begins to be marketed, we will have improved times.

Harvest work has been in progress in this neighborhood for some time and is not nearly through.

Some very fine samples of barley have been safely housed; the weather has recently been very trying on grain lying cut in the fields, but no serious damage done yet.

Our Township Council magnanimously made a grant of a small sum of money by which one of the hills at the station has been considerably improved. This is the first grant ever made to the station, and that it may soon be repeated, and increased in amount is the wish of every saint and sinner belonging to the place.

Long life and prosperity to all.

A FRUITFUL SEASON

The fruitful season of the year is prolific with many forms of Bowel Complaint, such as Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Colic, Cholera, Morbus, Cholera Infantum, &c.; as a safeguard and positive cure for those distressing and often sudden and dangerous attacks nothing can surpass that old reliable medicine Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

Feversham.

From a Correspondent.

Times somewhat quiet owing to harvest operations.

The Salvation Army is getting on very well they had Hallelujah Tinker from Collingwood with them on Sunday. He is quite a dandy.

Arthur H. is the proudest father in town.

Mr. Jos. Henderson had a fine lot of lambs and sheep delivered here for him on Wednesday.

Messrs W. P. Hill and Thos. Brown of Collingwood were up here fishing and secured a number of speckled beauties.

Camp and Conron still visits the bear trap, but as yet no success, not even a porcupine.

Is there no means by which we could prohibit that dark complexion young man from driving our fair damsels around? Say Bob. or Charlie, do something and get across the line.

This man R. T. has made another deal in horse flesh, having parted with the little chesnut mare, and purchased a trotter at least he says he can go some.

Thos. Julian of the 10th con. near Feversham reaped five acres of grain in four hours, one day recently. RUSTICUS.

NATIONAL PILLS will cure constipated bowels and regulate the liver.

Berkley

From our own correspondent

Harvesting is well through and the crops a good average and fine sample.

The rain of Sunday the 15th was the heaviest ever known in this district; the warm foggy weather which followed caused some of the outstanding grain to sprout.

E. Hopps, has built a house, also Sam Lackey a dwelling house.

S. Leslie shot a bear on Thursday last and saw another the same day. A number of ladies, on their return from meeting the evening train one night recently saw a bear right in the village, but no help was available as it was Orange Lodge night and the men folk were there assembled, and the ladies feared to give chase without a shooting iron.

Thos. Sargent had two sheep killed by a freight train last week.

WORTH REMEMBERING.—In a long letter from John H. Hall, of Baddick, Cape Breton, N. S., he says; "I believe if it were not for Burdock Blood Bitters I should have been in my grave." It cured me of kidney and liver complaint and general debility, which had nearly proved fatal.

Meaford Road.

From our own Correspondent.

A narrow escape.—Mr. W. Buchanan Sr. had a close call week before last by eating bread on which rat poison had been sprinkled. The mistake was promptly discovered and an emetic taken, thereby averting fatal result. The greatest care should be taken in exterminating vermin by poison

Cupids Darts.—The little winged god has been busy for some time past with bow and arrow, and as a result Mr. Samuel Gilbert and Miss Annie White has been and gone &c. Rumor has it certain other parties are smitten. Time will prove or disprove the gossip.

Owing to illness Mr. Ayers was unable to fill his pulpit last Sunday in Wesley Church, but Mr. M. Richardson took his place very acceptably.

Miss Ford, our teacher, is to work again after her holidays.

A COMPLETE BREAKDOWN.—"For ten years," says Jennie M, Harrett of Wallaceburg, Ont., "I did not see a well day—was all broken down with dyspepsia, liver complaint, cattarh and debility. Three doctors abandoned hope for me; when Burdock Blood Bitters came to my rescue. It is the best medicine I have ever taken. I say this for the benefit of all suffering as I did.

Kimberley.

From our own correspondent.

Stuart is endeavoring, with hopes of success, to secure telephone connection for Kimberly.

Farmers are sowing fall wheat. They are seeding earlier than formerly, as experience has taught that the early sowing is safest.

The people of Osprey, Proton and Artemesia are coming to this locality for their supply of apples, and now is the time to get them cheap.

Harvesting may be said to be over, and the crop well saved.

Mr. Hammon, our enterprising merchant, has purchased an 8,000 lb. hay scale which he will have in position shortly.

We understand that A. T. Buchanan has sold his farm. Price $3,600; he has also sold his house and lot in Kimberly to William Stuart, price $500.

Probably the youngest preacher in the world is I. E. Bill, Baptist, only 12 years of age, who preached a sermon on Sunday, the 27th ult., at St. Martins, N. B., to a large congregation. He is the son of Rev. I. E. Bill and the grandson of Rev. I. E. Bill, D. D.

Manitoba crop reports were recently published. The wheat yield is most satisfactory. An average of 16 to 20 bushels is commonly reported, and oats vary from light to fair. Barley is not up to the average, and root crops are a satisfactory crop. On the whole the results are better than expected, and the drouth has been less injurious than was feared.

Rev. R. V. Rogers, a Kingston clergyman, died on Tuesday at the age of 84 years. He was a native of Bristol, Eng., and was the son of a commander in the English navy who saw service at Bunker Hill. He has resided in Kingston, with a short intermission, since 1850. Two sons—Mr. R. V. Rogers, barrister, Kingston, and Mr. H. M. Rogers, merchant, of Rochester—and two unmarried daughters survive him.

The wife of Rev. R. Campbell, of Montreal, with her son and Mrs. Evans, was riding in a caleche near Fraser's Forks. The horse, which was attached to the vehicle, was being led by the bridle by a boy, while the picknickers were descending a steep hill, when it suddenly became frightened and bolted off at a frightful speed. Mrs. Campbell retained all her presence of mind, and clasping her child to her breast she clung fast to her seat. The animal left the road at the foot of the hill and dashed through an open field, straight for the Fraser River. They were within a few rods of the precipice, which hems in the river, and had given themselves up for lost when a boy who was working in a field caught sight of them. Throwing aside a rake with which he was working, he grasped a large fence rail, and holding it out at arm's length he ran before the horse and succeeded in making him turn away from the river. His act saved the lives of the occupants of the carriage.

The Antarctic Ocean.

The Antarctic Ocean occupies a position around the south pole similar to that of the Arctic Ocean at the opposite end of the earth. It fills all the space to the south of the Antarctic Circle. It differs vastly, however, from its northern homologue, for, instead of having land at its outer circumference, it has water. While the North American, the European, and the Asiatic coasts encircle the Northern Ocean, the Pacific, the Atlantic, and the Indian Oceans mingle their waters with those of the frozen zone at the south.

As it differs in physical conditions, so also it differs in having received much less attention from the world at large. While the aim of innumerable expeditions for the past four hundred years has been to find a northwest passage to Asia, to plant a flag at latitude 90°, or to rescue some unfortunate commander and his crew from a horrible fate, and while thousands of dollars have been expended, and hundreds of lives have been lost, there is a strange contrast offered when we turn to the far south. The expeditions which have been sent out by the great nations of the world to explore the vast watery expanse about the southern pole are so few as to be counted on the fingers of one hand, and all the ships which have left records of any extensive explorations beyond the Antarctic Circle might be counted on the fingers of two hands. And yet "within the periphery of the Antarctic Circle," says Lieutenant Maury, "is included an area equal in extent to one sixth of the entire land-surface of our planet. Most of this immense area is as unknown to the inhabitants of the earth as the interior of one of Jupiter's satellites. . . . For the last two hundred years the Arctic Ocean has been a theatre of exploration; but, as for the Antarctic, no expedition has attempted to make any persistent exploration, or even to winter there." It is noteworthy, too, that in the voyages which have been made not a ship nor a life has been lost south of the circle. "It does not appear," says one writer, "that Antarctic voyages would be attended with any excessive degree of danger. . . . It may even be found that the Antarctic barriers are impenetrable; but this has certainly not as yet been demonstrated."

POPULATING THE NORTH-WEST.

The Large Influx of Settlers This Year.

Mr. S. O. Armstrong, colonization agent of the Canadian Pacific Railway, states that this season has been far in advance of previous years as regards the number of emigrants who have taken up land in the North-West. From the beginning of the present year to the 1st of July, 1000 miles of country in the Province of Ontario between Mattawa depot on the Canadian Pacific Railway and Port Arthur has been settled and partly cultivated. In the Lake Nipissing district, immense tracts of fine land have been recently opened up, and whereas two years ago there was room for a dozen families, the agents now report plenty of good land capable of supporting hundreds. This district is so favorably regarded that 1700 families have settled between Mattawa and Cartier depots, all in the Nipissing district, and the little depots have become thriving towns with populations of from 200 to 2000 people. Among these may be mentioned Mattawa, North Bay and Sturgeon Falls. The extension and completion of the Algoma branch of railway to the Sault Ste. Marie, which was begun this month, will open up a still more extensive region, where settlers will be near the Great Lakes and take advantage of the facilities for navigation. Westward from Port Arthur there is a great deal of good land called "Brule," or land over which the fire has run several times clearing it of the timber and which quickly covers itself with a thick covering of grass. North-West from Rat Portage along the Winnipeg river to the Lake is a good stretch of black loam. This section has attracted a large number of French Canadians this year, the Roman Catholic Missionary at Fort Alexander having successfully invited them to come. The French Canadian settlements S. E. of Winnipeg on the Rat river have been strongly reinforced by their fellow countrymen from New England and Province of Quebec. On the Manitoba South Western Railway near the Turtle Mountains is a settlement from Labrador and the north coast of the St. Lawrence including families from the islands of St. Pierre in the Gulf. Apart from these the majority of settlers are from Ontario and the old country. Thriving settlements of Germans, Scandinavians and Hungarians have this year been formed on the main line of the C. P. R. beginning about 250 miles west of Winnipeg on the Qu'Appelle River, between White Wood and Regina. About 700 families have settled in this district this year, a larger number than during any previous years. These people all express their intention of becoming naturalized Canadians and British subjects. They all express themselves pleased and satisfied with the country, and many of them have written home to their friends urging them to come over to them. The Calgary district has probably received the largest number and the better class of emigrants than any other section. The immense quantity of settlers' effects and the number of cattle imported into this section has been something unprecedented in the history of Canadian Colonization. Five thousand head of cattle were shipped there by one firm alone, that of Messrs. Gilroy and Co., and a constant influx of cattle is going on from the neighbouring States of Montana, Idaho and Dakota. Across the Rockies, beginning at Golden City and proceeding southward to the Montana and Idaho boundaries is a most extensive valley country, possessing a fine dry climate, good soil and abundance of wood and water. Coal has also been found in this district and is just beginning to be worked. About 100 families have settled in this region and there is ample room for thousands more. From Golden City to the second crossing of the Columbia river there is no land for settlement, but thence westward to Vancouver city and island there is a great quantity of good land ready to be taken up. A number of settlers have already located themselves there, but the returns have not yet been issued. The Columbia and Kootenay rivers have many streams running into them, where placer mining is going on, the majority of the miners being Chinese.

A steamer has been placed on the Columbia river running between Golden City and the Columbian Lakes. At several places in the vicinity quartz mining has begun. A considerable amount of capital has been invested, especially at the head of the river in the Similkameen and Granite Creek regions, about 200 miles due east of Vancouver Island.

DIAMONDS OF THOUGHT.

When one lives entirely with the course of nature, every day is fully lived.

There are three little wicks to the lamp of a man's life, brain, blood and breath.

There is frozen music in many a heart that the beams of encouragement would melt into glorious song.

The wealth of the world is the wealth of civilization, and civilization is the fruit of Christianity.

A tyrant cannot well bind one end of a chain around the arms or legs of a people, without finding the other around his own neck.

A snob is that man or woman who is always pretending to something better—especially richer or more fashionable—than they are.

Grief knits two hearts in closer bonds than happiness ever can; and common sufferings are far stronger links than common joys.

Patience is a moral mosquito net. Politeness is like an air-cushion; there may be nothing solid in it, but it eases jolts wonderfully.

Many a poor but honest man now wakes up feeling that before night some college may give him a degree.

THE FARM.

Seissored and Penned.

Many farmers trust too much to luck and the moon and do too little close figuring.

Too decayed branches of old trees should be promptly removed. Their unsightliness is the least of their evils.

Keep the roadsides free from stones and rubbish, and neatly mown. Don't let them be a nursery of weed seeds.

If the manger or feed box be so foul as to emit a sour smell from any cause, it should be carefully cleansed and washed with a solution of soda or potash until perfectly sweet again.

The bee does not deface your fields by clipping the growing grasses, like the domestic animals; it does not mar the garden plants or levy taxes on your grain. Bees differ from the whole insect world. No tree, shrub, plant or flower is injured by their presence.

A correspondent of the Country Gentleman tells of butter pressed in a mould so as to look exactly like a large fine strawberry. One of these berries stood beside each plate, and an extra supply stood in the centre of the table on a fruit dish. Gilt-edged butter, in such fancy shapes, should sell for higher prices even in hard times.

The Scientific American is right when it says: "Nothing will purify and keep a stable so free from odors as the free use of dry earth, and every one keeping horses or cattle will find it pays to keep it at hand to be used daily. A few shovels full of earth scattered over the floor after cleaning will render the air of the apartment pure and wholesome.

In our present system of education—now, happily, rapidly passing away for a better one—we want one man to be always thinking, and another to be always working; and we call one a gentleman and the other an operative; whereas the workman ought often to be thinking, and the thinker often to be working, and both should be gentlemen in the best sense.

It is estimated, and safely so, that a good well-fed cow puts ten dollars worth of manure on about the four acres of land it takes to keep her for a year on most farms. Putting that amount of fertilization on the soil of a fairly good farm soon makes its produce so that one cow cannot eat the product of four acres, and the result is more mouths to feed and more milk, or larger grain crops to sell.

The desire to get on in the world, to surround one's self with the creature comforts necessary to happiness, to possess even of the luxuries of life should be strong in the breast of every tiller of the soil. He has health and strength. The free, pure air of heaven is his to breathe. Beautiful creations fresh from the hand of God are spread out before him. But these should not satisfy him. He should seek to make his home a bower of love and beauty—flowers, birds, and sunshine around it, within the peace and content which comes of making the highest use of the blessings God has given us.

Some Profitable Experiences.

A gentleman writes:—Two years ago I leased four acres of run-out pasture land to be planted with potatoes. One ton of phosphate was used for the crop. They were hoed twice, and when dug a plow was run through the rows, turning out most of the potatoes to the surface. 634 bushels were raised on the field. I intended to sow it to rye in the fall but did not do it. In the spring of 1885, I sowed it to oats and seeded it down. I did not keep account of the number of bushels raised on the field, but they were very heavy oats weighing 38 pounds to the bushel. I did not plow the field, but harrowed it over with a Share's harrow, sowed my oats and fertilizer, and harrowed them in—using one ton of Lister bone and 10 bushels of unleached ashes at time of seeding. Last fall I could have cut a good crop of rowen had the stone been picked up. This spring I picked up the stone, and have cut eight tons of good quality hay according to my estimate, which I do not think is too high. I am satisfied if farmers would use more pure bone and less adulterated phosphates, they would receive greater and more lasting results.

ODE TO LAKE ONTARIO.

BY JOHN IMRIE, TORONTO.

Thou inland sister-sea, Ontario!
To glide upon thy bosom is sublime;
There feel thy peaceful, steady, onward flow.
Ceaseless and constant as the course of time!

Thy waters seem the same,—yet ever new—
Fed by a thousand streams on either side;
The same clear sky—the same thy depths of blue—
Free as the nations bordering on thy tide!

Vast upper-lakes feed thee with liberal hand,
From higher lands as new as thine hath been,
Where still the Indian and his wigwam stand,
He half amazed with what his eyes hath seen!

To thy embrace, like gallant lover bold,
Niagara rushes in his mad career,
Till tired and spent, past whirling eddies cold,
He calmly sinks to rest when thou art near!

Last of the inland seas!—yet nearest home—
Thy waters soon shall swell the mighty deep,
And mingle with the ocean's briny foam,
There shalt thou rest—and there for ever sleep!

People who live in glass houses should have curtains.

Near at Hand.

It is stated that Howard spent his youth in dreams of heroic deeds and impossible ventures for the help and elevation of uncivilized nations. Being captured while at sea by a French privateer, his attention was drawn to the cruelties practised on prisoners, and on his release he began an inspection of the jail in his native village. The reform he inaugurated spread throughout all the prisons in Europe.

Charles Dickens, while a boy in Jones's school, was in the habit of writing romances for the amusement of his companions of of the most vague and lofty character. His great fame came to him through his pictures of Mrs. Minnis over the way, of the policemen, shop-boys, butchers and cooks who came in his way in his daily walks in the streets of London.

A middle aged merchant in one of our large cities complained a couple of years ago that he had been thwarted in his true work in life.

"My hope was to carry Christianity and civilization to some heathen nation. Then I should not have lived in vain. But I have been anchored here inexorably."

"The heathen have come to you," said his friend, nodding to the Chinese laundryman, with his wooden shoes and pig tail, who was passing.

The hint was taken. Mr. Blank went to Ah Sing's laundry and made a friend of him, persuaded him to come with four of his friends to his house, twice a week, to learn "Melican 'ligion." There are now nearly seventy Chinese men in a Bible class taught by Mr. Blank, of whom a large percentage are sincere Christians.

It is the habit of young and imaginative people to search the far horizon for their career, their work and rewards in life.

Of one fact they may be sure, that when God has work for a man to do in the world, He puts it within his reach.

The great authors and painters of all ages have earned success by depicting that which was most familiar to them.

Here in our every-day life, in the commonplace kinsfolk, trades-people and servants that surround us, is material for all the power in our brains or souls.

The religion, too, which will save a man is not a far-off, visionary rapture, it is in his heart and in his mouth while he is about his daily work.

An humble work-woman taught an English shoemaker the happiness of a spiritual life. On the shoemaker's wall was a map, and the shoemaker looked at it at times while at work, and it conveyed to him the impression that the large part of the world was ignorant of the inward light and joy that made of his life a psalm. The map haunted him night and day. It became an inspiration and in the heart of this man English evangelical missions were begun. He is honored here, but we can not doubt that the poor work-woman has her reward in being among those who, having turned many to righteousness, "shine as the stars."

Miss Alcott, whose own life has been very practical and useful in meeting the duties of her home and town, was once handed an autograph book, and asked to write a sentiment in it. She wrote, "Do the duty that lies nearest you." The thought recalls these simple but telling words of Scripture,—"He first findeth his own brother Simon." But work for others does not end where it began; it is progressive; its influence grows, and is eternal.

The peculiar varnish-like lustre of the petals of the buttercup is attributed by Dr. Mobius, who has recently been investigating it, to a "highly refractive yellow oil existing in the epidermal cells, increased by the fact that the layer of cells of the mesophyl is densely filled with minute starch grains."

The New Orleans Times-Democrat calls attention to the rich but undeveloped sulphur interests of Louisiana. The World's Fair at New Orleans happened just in time to direct attention to the stores of salt, kaolin and other leading interests. In Calcasieu there is a sulphur deposit seventy-five or eighty feet thick.

According to Wright, many of the finer grades of transparent soap sold in England do not contain glycerine, as advertised, but sugar. Sugar seems just as well adapted to making transparent soap as glycerine. As sugar is admitted into England free of duty, and is hence very cheap, this application of it becomes possible.

The physicians at Pennsylvania Hospital, at Philadelphia, have fitted up a pretty tent of snowy canvas on the hospital grounds, and provided it with couches, douche baths, &c., for the purpose of treating sunstroke cases. The following, though old to some, may be new to others, and will enable the latter to make a simple barometer for themselves: Two drams of campher, half-dram of pure saltpetre, half-dram of muriate of ammonia and two ounces of proof spirits, in a glass tube or narrow phial, will make a very good weather guide. In dry weather the solution will remain clear. On the approach of change minute stars will rise up in the liquid, while stormy weather will be indicated by the very disturbed condition of the combination.

Seeing Life.

Boys often talk of "seeing life" in a way that augurs ill for their future. Many of them see life to the destruction of all the noblest and truest within them, and to a life-long shame and sorrow of those who love them. An exchange tells the following pathetic story of a boy who had seen his sorrow.

Although he was shackled to a negro, he was on his way to Jefferson City penitentiary to serve a two years' term for grand larceny. Ed Donelly, a handsome young criminal of twenty-three, maintained a gayety of demeanor which quite surprised Deputy Sheriff Coakley, who was in charge of him and three other convicts. He smoked from time to time, and looked out upon the bright country which the train was rushing through with apparently no thought of the dreary future before him. Suddenly he bowed his head, drew his slouch cap down over his eyes and became silent.

"What's the matter, Ed?" Coakley asked, as he tipped the hat up and looked into his prisoner's face.

"Nothing," the young fellow answered.

"Nothing! I'd like to know what makes you pale as a sheet if there's nothing the matter with you?"

"There's somebody on the train I don't want should see me. Allow me to pull my cap over my face, Mr. Coakley."

"Certainly, hide your face if you want to," said the officer.

Half an hour later, during which time the handsome young convict remained motionless with his hands covering his face and his hat drawn over both, two gentlemen came along. They halted from curiosity, and looked at Coakley's unfortunate charge. The one who kept his face concealed from view excited the interest of the older of the two men, who scanned him from head to feet with pitying eyes. Turning to Coakley, he said:

"That poor boy's repentance comes too late, sheriff. Terrible! Terrible! I knew a boy just about his age—a wild, wayward boy, whom I have not seen for months. Whether he's living or dead, I know not, but rather than have him in such plight as that I'd see him lying"—

"Father! don't!"

The hat was flung off, and, with eyes brimming with tears, the face of the convict looked into the face of the father. The boy outstretched his hands—one of them free, the other shackled to that of a negro—to his father, who seized them and held them tenderly. They were permitted to sit and talk together during the remainder of the ride, and when the penitentiary portals was closed upon the son, the father still lingered near the spot, as though he could not leave it.

All of One Family.

It was the first of July. The great city railway station was crowded with gay, well-dressed people, on their way to some summer resort in the mountains or by the sea. In odd contrast to them was a group of ragged Italian emigrants, with whom a uniformed official was arguing.

"I tell you this is not your station!" raising his voice, as people are apt to do to foreigners. "At the other end of the city. Emigrant station. Two miles. Come, get out!"

The man of the party shook his head stolidly, muttering "Tollide" as his sole answer, and holding out a bit of written paper.

"Toledo, Ohio," read the train-hand. "The idea of a lot of wretches as stupid as dogs going half round the world with nothing but that scrap of paper to guide them!" he ejaculated to his companions.

He bustled away, and the emigrants shrank back into their corner. The man looked at his pale, hunger-bitten little girl and his wife, and then at the groups who were chattering and laughing about him. Some young girls drew their light dresses aside as they passed him, and a sour-looking, middle-aged woman muttered something to them about "the country being an asylum for paupers." The poor Italian scowled with bitter envy at a party of young fashionable men. He carried a stick, with a few rags in a bundle; they were equipped with costly rifles and fishing tackle.

Maletesta looked as though he felt himself an outcast from the happy human race. There was no tie between him and these well-to-do people.

A moment later there was a cry, a fall, and a sudden rush of the crowd toward him. His child, a pretty little girl, had slid from her mother's knee and lay on the stone floor as if dead. The wretched Italian threw himself down beside her.

"Ah Cila! Figlia mia!" he cried, in a voice that made the tears start to the eyes of many a woman.

In a moment the great room was alive with help and friendliness. One of the young men had the child on his knee.

"I am a physician," he said, quietly. "She is not dead. It is the heat and—hunger. Jem, go to the nearest drug-shop and bring"—lowering his voice. "And, well, get some milk from the restaurant."

The young men dropped their guns and reds, and ran; old men, young girls, and negro waiters crowded forward with help. When the child recovered, a dozen eager hands led Maletesta and his wife to the waiting-room, and somebody went round with a hat, collecting a fund for their relief. The young doctor still held the child, fondling it carefully, when the old lady, no longer haughty and sour, came up to him.

"As soon as the baby is fit to travel, I will take them all home with me. The man is a vine-dresser, it seems, and my husband is a grape-grower in New Jersey. They shall have their own roof over their heads before night."

The Italian and his wife stood beside her, crying and crossing themselves. They were believers in the Pope, the doctor was a Baptist, and the good woman a Methodist, but the single touch of suffering had made them all children of one Father.

To clean a porcelain kettle fill half full of hot water and put in a tablespoonful powdered borax; let it boil. If this does not remove all the stains, scour with a cloth rubbed with soap and borax.

A backbiting woman exclaimed, as she threw herself into a chair at a neighbor's, "One half the world doesn't know how the other half lives." "That isn't your fault," quietly responded the neighbor.

... 'There is an error here," he said, re- ... ing the paper to the curé; "the age is ... erroneously stated." He bit his lip to steady ... as he spoke.

... 'If it is so written in the book," the priest ... said, referring to the record; "see for yourself. The age is three years and three months.

Then a glimpse of the truth came to him and maddened him. He threw the fee down upon the table and rushed out into the hot blinding sunshine, walking with a rapid step, never heeding the burning heat nor seeking the shade. His frantic walk ceased before the gate of a low dwelling, half hidden in a rich growth of tropical foliage, its encircling verandahs wreathed with crimson passion-flowers and splendid purple blooms and long drooping sprays of flame-coloured blossom, all untrimmed and untrained in their wild luxuriance.

The house stood silent and deserted, like the castle of the Sleeping Beauty in the fairy-tale. Perhaps it was waiting for the touch of the prince to awaken it to life and love.

Percival Danvers shook off the fanciful thought impatiently as he trod the neglected path and thrust aside the clustering wide-leaved fern, pungent-scented myrtle, and crimson blossoming pomegranate.

An elderly woman answered his summons at the door.

"This is the house of Mr. Delorme?" he said. "Are any of the family living here now?"

"Mr. Delorme has been dead a long time," the woman answered. "There was only his daughter left. She went away five years ago. Are you a friend of the family, sir?"

"Yes—that is, I knew Mr. Delorme. Can you tell me where Miss Delorme went?"

"Miss Delorme? Ah, that is a sad story! It must be many years since you knew the family, sir, or you would know. If you will please to enter, I will tell you."

"Is she living?" That was Percival Danver's next question, and beads of perspiration stood on his pale forehead as he asked it. But the sun-blinds were down all round the cool, shaded apartment, and the woman was too full of the tale she longed to tell to notice the pallor of her visitor. "Is she living?" he repeated.

"That is more than I can tell. Sometimes I think she must be dead, since even the grave in the cemetery has been unvisited for months, and that is the last thing she would neglect. But it has been a sorrowful life, and a lonely one, and she must have had little to grieve for. Did you know her, sir, when you knew Mr. Delorme?"

"It is a great many years ago, and she must have been quite a child then," he answered evasively.

"Yes, she was only a child when she met the man who married her and ruined her life," the woman said. "She was away from her father then, staying with her aunt. She was a sweet young girl, and as beautiful a one as you would wish to see; and, young as she was, she had plenty of lovers. Amongst them was an Englishman. Madame Delorme, the aunt, did not like him, but the young lady did; and—Cecile Lacroix, who was her bonne, told it all to me—they met in secret. Then Mr Delorme heard of the affair, and he called his daughter home. The young man was summoned away at the same time by his father, a rich merchant in Toronto. Mr. Delorme was not rich; he had had great losses, and his daughter would have no dowry. The young people were in despair at the separation, and the young man persuaded her to marry him privately, with only Cecile as witness. She was a Roman Catholic, the Englishman was a Protestant; he bribed a priest to make them one. Then he went away to his father, and she came home here. He was to get his father's consent, and to return to claim her; and they parted, full of love and hope. But the blessing of the Church was not on that marriage; how could it be? The bridegroom never came back; he never even wrote. He was a villain!

"Our poor flower faded and pined. Then the truth came out. Mr. Delorme was furious, and he would have hunted the Englishman to the end of the earth; but the priest put in his word. It was no marriage that had been celebrated, he said; the bridegroom was a heretic, and there could be no sacrament of marriage between one of the true Church and a heretic. So Mr. Delorme forbade her to call herself by the English name, even when her child was born. I think she would have broken her heart but for that sweet child. For her she lived on, and even Mr. Delorme grew soft and tender to the little thing. Then he died, the old man—they say his death was hastened by his daughter's trouble—and she lived on here, with Cecile and the child.

"Perhaps the Englishman died. I have thought so sometimes. Surely he could not have been such a monster as to have forsaken her all these years if he had lived! We may have called him hard names which he did not deserve, and have slandered the dead."

She crossed herself, and went on:

"Then came the hardest trial of all; the child died. She was well and bright one day, playing here under the magnolia-trees, and the next day she was in heaven. It was a sunstroke, some said. Others said it was fever. It broke the mother's heart. She never looked up afterwards, and she could not live here, where the child's voice seemed always in the air. She went to live with Madame Delorme on an estate a few miles away.

"But they sent the notice of the child's death to the English papers: so Cecile told me. It might reach the father's eye—who knew? And Cecile at least never believed that he was dead. Then, more than a year ago, Madame Delorme died. She left her little fortune to her niece, and Cecile came here. She always used to come and tend the child's grave in the cemetery, and she told me they were going away—she and her mistress, for a long time, on a long journey. Sometimes I think she has gone to seek her child's father, and that we shall never hear of her again, as we have never heard of him. It is the land of forgetfulness there, over the sea."

Percival Danvers rose up, white and ghastly, and staggered out into the air.

"It is nothing," he said to the woman, as she followed him anxiously. "I have walked too far in the sun. It will go off presently."

She went to fetch him water; and he sat there in the flower-hung verandah with his world of ruins about his feet and a risen ghost beckoning him with pale hand to his doom.

"I did not mean to desert her!" he cried aloud, striving to thrust back the accusing spirit. "It was my father! I dared not tell him. And then I heard she was dead."

. . . . . .

"Yes; he will live now. It is always so; the worthless lives are spared, the good and the beautiful are taken away."

Was the air full of ghosts still, and had the ghosts voices? Percival Danvers opened his eyes. A face was bending over him—one of the faces which had haunted his fevered dream so long. It was a hard stern face, full of vengeance and of hatred.

"Cecile?" he said weakly.

"Yes, it is I."

"This is no ghost; it is a woman in the flesh," he muttered, as she raised him and held a cup to his lips. "What has happened to me? Where am I?"

"You have been very ill. You are here, in the home of your wife, Marie Delorme—where surely I thought the righteous judgment of Heaven had brought you to die," she added to herself.

"Marie—is she here?"

"No, she is in heaven."

The next moment she was sorry she had spoken, for a flash of joy lighted up the pale features; Cecile knew that not even she could win pity or sorrow from him for the woman he had treated so cruelly.

"Oh, that my hands should have nursed him back to life, the viper!" she exclaimed to the housekeeper.

But he lived and grew strong enough for the homeward journey he was so impatient to make.

"He goes to the young bride," Cecile groaned; "and she—she lies in her grave."

"Cecile, when did she die?"

Vengeance was within her grasp. Could she forego it? That reluctant promise to her dead mistress was forgotten in the whirlwind of her wrath now.

"She died the day she wrote you that letter at St. Sebastian's. That day killed her."

"And you left her there?"

"No, I brought her here. She lies with her child—and yours."

"That is enough. Now leave me."

And she went; for there was something so dark and terrible in his look that she was frightened.

It was the day before he was to sail for England. He had not dared to ask her the question upon which his fate hung until then. Now he drew from his pocket-book the record of his child's death and spread it out before him. As he glared at it with wild eyes, he seemed to see a demon pointing to that solitary figure "3," and to hear it whispering something it had whispered before in the darkness of the night, when his mind was at its weakest. How easy it would be to write another figure before that one! See, there was space left for it! Who would know? He thrust the paper hastily from him. He started up and walked to the farthest corner of the room, and turned his face to the wall. But the blank wall showed him a vision of a ruined man, bankrupt in honour and happiness, shrinking before the scorn of the world which had so lately smiled on him; and of a fair sweet face, with horror and loathing written upon it, turned away from him for ever. And the tempter whispered more importunately than ever. "It is not a crime. It can harm no one. Who would know?"

In another moment it was written, "Marie Dolorme Danvers. Aged 23."

The next day he was gone, and Cecile sent an imprecation after him which made the tender-hearted housekeeper shudder.

"May the cup he would drink be dashed from his lips! May vengeance deg his footsteps, and justice seize him and drag him down!" the faithful servant said, with raised hand and solemn voice.

CHAPTER X.

"Miss Doveton!" Lady Keith was saying anxiously. "It must have been Cynthia. Albinia, it must have been Cynthia."

Lady Saltmarsh said nothing, and Sir George Vivian shrugged his shoulders.

"All cats are grey in the dark," he said, quoting a French proverb.

Lady Keith took up her knitting and sat down. There was an agitated flush on her delicate cheek, and her slender white hands trembled; Lady Saltmarsh's shafts, often essayed in vain, had taken effect at last.

It was afternoon—growing late by the shadows, but early as yet by the clock. There were no lights in Lady Keith's morning room, which opened on to the terrace and looked over toward the park; and without the gorgeous crimson and gold of the autumnal glory had resolved themselves into the sombre neutral gray of twilight.

Sir George glanced outwards, and saw two persons presently mount the terrace steps slowly, lingeringly, and pause at the top, looking back at the shrouded giants in the park below. Lady Keith saw them too.

"It is Cynthia," she repeated faintly.

"Cynthia is in the music-room," Lady Saltmarsh said, pointing to the half-open door, whence came echoing round the rich tones which all knew to be Cynthia's.

Then a white hand came fluttering against the glass, and a gray-robed figure stole in out of the shadows and sat down, just as a footman threw open the door, with a lighted lamp in hand; and, in the illumination, Edith Doveton, all unconscious, raised her beautiful glowing face—transformed in some mysterious way since they had seen it last—and looked at the three who were, each in their own fashion, sitting in judgment upon her in their hearts. There was only one thing which could cause such a transformation in a woman's face. Sir George knew what it was and looked grave; Lady Saltmarsh knew what it was and looked triumphant. Lady Keith guessed dimly and her heart sank.

Miss Doveton was the only one who did not know—did not guess. What she did know was that the world had grown brighter, more beautiful than her dreams; that a subtle philter, sweet as the nectar of the gods, was running through her veins and thrilling her heart with an ineffable joy. Leonard Hope, coming in behind her, looked dazed, as if the sudden light blinded him.

"What are you all doing in there?" called Cynthia's voice from the next room. "You are so quiet. Mamma, is there no tea yet?"

With the last sentence she was with them, and something—a "mind-wave" perhaps, or an electric touch of quick sympathy—warned her. Her proud head was held a shade higher than usual, but her cheek was pale, Sir George fancied, as she seated herself at the little table and filled the china cups, and presently chatted pleasantly with him, and sent pretty messages to Lady Vivian; for Sir George was going away by first train in the morning.

"And, by Jove," he said later, as he ran up-stairs two steps at a time to his dressing-room, "I'm sorry! I'd give something to see the end of it, and it's a precious spec whichever way it goes."

The evening passed with something—no one knew exactly what—weighing the hours, which were wont to be so light-winged in that pleasant circle. It was as if the air were heavy with the threatening of a tempest. Cynthia was calm and a little more stately than usual; all her duties as hostess were punctiliously performed to the little gathering of neighbours and friends who filled her drawing-room. Leonard was grave and preoccupied, Sir George silent and watchful, and Lady Keith's high-bred composure was disturbed. She was restless and nervous, and a flush burnt still on her cheek. Only Miss Doveton was radiantly happy and lovely, wrapped in a sort of dream, which rendered her deaf to the mutterings of the storm. And there was something in her unconscious innocent happiness and in the sweetness of her beauty which told its own story and touched the hearts which should have been hardened towards her.

"We have been to blame. Poor child—how could she know?" Lady Keith said. "We ought to have told her; it ought to have been understood. She is young and susceptible, and alone; and Leonard has been very kind to her. I will tell her to-night."

So Lady Keith sat by the fire in the girl's room later the same evening—it was a motherly custom which she had of bidding her good-night there—and told her what should have been told before.

"So you see," she concluded, "I am quite happy about dear Cynthia's future. In her circumstances and with her responsibilities it would have been an anxious matter to choose wisely; but dear Leonard is all and more than all we could desire. I could not have trusted her to a stranger, but he understands her so thoroughly. It can scarcely fail to be a fortunate and happy marriage."

Origin of Slanting Roofs.

To find the source from which the European nations have derived the art of building in stone, we must look to the land of the Pharaohs. From Egypt the craft passed to Greece, and from the Greeks it was taken up by the Romans, to be by them disseminated through the north and west of Europe in the process of colonisation. The similarity, in regard to the constructive parts of the ancient Greek buildings to some of those found in Egypt of older date, affords strong confirmation of the tradition that the Greeks borrowed the art from the Egyptains. The Greeks, however, in adopting it added a new feature, the pediment, and the reason for this addition is easy to find. Egypt is practically rainless. All the protection from the climate required in a palace or temple in such a country is shelter from the sun by day and from the cold by night, and for this a flat roof, supported by walls, or pillars with architraves, is quite sufficient; but, when, as in all European countries, rain has to be taken into account, a slanting roof becomes a necessity. The Greeks, with their eye for symmetry, provided for this by forming the roof with a central ridge, at an obtuse angle, from which it sloped down equally on either side. The triangular space thus formed at the end of the building above the architrave was occupied by the pediment and this part of the facade, which owed its birth to the exigencies of climate, was thenceforth regarded as so essential to the artistic completeness of the work that it was said that if a temple were to be erected in the celestial regions, where rain would not be possible, the pediment could not be omitted.—Popular Science Monthly.

The great reputation of Briggs' Electric Oil is such that it has induced unprincipled persons to adopt other names as near like it as possible. The proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil have the name and style of the Electric Oil registered both in Canada and the United States, and no one can use it but themselves.

Others hearing of the success of Briggs' Electric Oil have adopted other names similar such as "Eclectric Oil," "Electron Oil," &c., and are striving to induce the public to buy them instead of the genuine Electric Oil.

In fact so determined were they that they brought a suit at Law, in the High Court of Canada, to deprive Briggs & Sons of their right to control the same; but the Courts and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa fully sustained their registered trade mark.

Briggs' Electric Oil cures Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains and Bruises, complaints arising from Colds such as Sore Throat, Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis and difficult Breathing.

Toronto, August 5th, 1886.
CATARRH OF MANY YEARS STANDING CURED.
Dr. N. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, Toronto and Halifax:
DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to express my extreme satisfaction at the results of your "NEW METHOD" of Inhalation which has cured me of Catarrh of a very troublesome character; in fact all the usual remedies failed to give me any relief, but your Treatment, from the first, gave great ease, and in a few months entirely cured me of a most annoying disease. I can honestly recommend any who may be suffering as I was to your skilful consideration.
Yours truly,
GEO. GOULDING,
Rept. C. Turnbull, Galt, Ont.,
also W. H. Storey & Son, Acton.
Dr. Washington will make monthly visits.

Farm for Sale.—See adv. in this paper.

203 head of cattle were sold last fair day in Markdale.

A number of horses have been recently bought and shipped from this part.

HARVESTING is about wound up, and crops are very satisfactory.

LARGE quantities of oats are yet to be cut in Proton and Melancthon townships.

Mr. and Mrs. Ptolomew of Holland, are visiting friends in Hamilton.

FOR Ladies fine kid and calf Boots. go to Wm. McLeod's.

MISS EMMA WRIGHT leaves on Monday to attend Owen Sound Model School.

FLESHERTON correspondence, very interesting, but too late for this week.

THE cheapest place in town for Picture framing is the Photo Gallery.

Go to McLeod's for all kinds of Childrens Boots, buttoned or laced.

Now is the time to subscribe for the STANDARD. Only 25 cents to January 1st.

Clearing sale of ready made clothing at J. G. Anderson's the mammoth house.

Wm. Wright of Flesherton passed through this village last Saturday with a drove of fine hogs.

A number of our people went to the Exhibition this week, and a great many more are going next.

Teas! Teas! Teas! Greater bargains than ever 5lbs of pure uncolored Japan tea for $1.00 at J. G. Anderson's.

REV. MR. WILSON preached a very practical sermon in the Methodist church last Sunday evening.

Boots! Boots! Boots! Any amount of them and right prices at J. G. Anderson's.

HERB. BROWN, Georgie C. Bowes and R. J. Brown left on Monday to attend the Owen Sound Collegiate Institute.

Gents Furnishings a full range and extra values at J. G. Anderson's the cheap cash store.

MR. John Ford. of Annan was in town last Saturday and gave us a pleasant call.

Call at the mammoth house and get 5 to 10 lbs of J. G. Anderson's famous 50c tea. Its grand value.

THE Rev. R. Hosking will preach in the Methodist church in this place next Sunday morning and evening.

Young men wanting a real nobby suit should call at J. G. Anderson's the cheapest cash store in the county.

5 good Farms for sale and 2 to rent. Apply to C. S. Bowes, agent, Markdale.

DR. BRODIE, our new medical practitioner, is becoming more popular as he gets acquainted, and is very successful in his practice.

OUR enterprising neighbor Mr. B. Coleman has purchased a fine Durham bull and a two-year old Berkshire boar recently.

WE have no objections to the Mirror re-producing our editorials, but we have a right to due credit, especially since we do not endulge in them every week.

NEW BARLEY.—Mr. Thos. Kells sold 500 bushels of fine bright barley to W. J. McFarland this week for 60 cents per bushel. This was the first of the season on our market.

Mr. Wm. McBrom has started a weaving business one door from Haskett's hardware on Elezabeth St. where he will be glad to supply the wants of those requiring anything in his line.

THE cattle fair last Saturday was largely attended and a great many cattle were sold. There were a number of outside buyers present, but prices ruled low, as they do all over this year.

School Books, Stationery, Note Paper & Envelopes, a new stock just received and will be sold at lowest cash prices. A. Turner & Co., "Medical Hall."

WHEN you are in Markdale be sure and dont go away without calling at Wm. Mason's carrage works as he is determined to sell the balance of his stock of Democrats, Buggies &c., at a great reduction in price.

HOLLAND Centre has got out fine large posters announcing their Fall Show, to be held on the 28th September. This promises to surpass any of their former shows. They have added largely to their prize list.

W. McLEOD has secured the services off two first class workmen, who have had experience in the best factories in the towns and cities in Canada and the United States, and he is now prepared to supply a class of work which cannot be excelled.

THE Dundalk Herald takes a holiday this week, and the Herald will not be issued. Mr. C. H. Newell, proprietor, is gone east on a visit, and we will be mistaken if he don't have a partner home with him; if he does we'll have another sister-in-law.

WM. MASON is buisy making up cutters, sleighs &c., for the winter trade so now is the time to call and leave your order so as to have it out in good time. He will be glad to have you call in and learn his prices &c.. he is also giving great bargains in democrats &c.

This and That.—The sidewalk has been extended past the elevators——Armstrongs are building a fine bank barn——A stone and iron fence is being built in front of the Methodist Church ——The plate glass for Hill Bros and Mathews shop front has arrived——

THE heat of the past week has been something remarkable for this season of the year; even the nights do not cool down to their wanted tempeture. The themometer registered 90 in the shade and 120 in the sun last Tuesday.

POLITICAL.—We are informed, on creditable authority, that Mr. J. Baldwin Hands, of Toronto, partner of the late A. W. Lander, M. P. for E. Grey, intends effering himself as a candidate for that constituency in the local house at the next election.

THE Meaford Mirror was last week enlargened to its former size. The Mirror is in every respect a first class local paper, and one of our most valued exchanges. We are pleased to see such a practical evidence of success, and wish our esteemed cotem continued prosperity.

THE Toronto Industrial Exhibition is now the farmers great annual holiday, and the show this year promises to eclipse all former ones in extent and grandeur. The fare on Saturday the 11th and to the 17th good to return up to the 20th, single fare, 14th and 15th good to return up to 20th, $2.25 from Markdale.

The program will consist readings, resitations music and addresses. A number of our Markdale non-professionals are billed for the occasion and Dr. Sproule. M. P., for an address. Admission, 25 cents. A big time is expected.

MR. SMITH, the secretary of Holland Centre Agricultural Society requests us to say, that those who wish to compete for anything in their large list of special prizes, will require to enter specially for the desired special prize. This rule was overlooked, and not entered with other rules and regulations on the bill., also that the Methodist people of that village have kindly consented to allow them the use of their large new sheds for a show room for roots, grain, &c., &c.

MR. ROBERT MCNALLY carriage maker late of Chatsworth, was in town last week prospecting, and we understand has decided to commence and carry on business in this place. Mr. Mc. has done a large and growing business in Chatsworth for some years, but was burned out a short time ago since which time he has been prospecting as to a good opening, his partner having decided to carry on both branches of the business in Chatsworth. He has therefore formed a favorable opinion of our town and will be to work shortly, of which due notice will be given.

THE C. O. O. F. entertainment at Holland Centre last Tuesday evening was a grand success; A good program and full house. Hope to give a report next week.

How desirable it is to have bed clothes clean and free from the germs of disease. especially the feather bed. Mr. W. H. Livingstone is now in our village renovating feathers by steam process and makes a splendid job of them.

THE EASTERN WAR CLOUD.

The state of affairs in the east are gloomy and very threatening. Bulgaria and Russia are at loggerheads, while Germany, Austria and England are interested. The leading English papers say that wars is a certainty e'er long.

A Home-Made Telepone.

To make a serviceable telephone, from one farm house to another, only requires enough wire and two cigar boxes. First select your boxes, and make a hole about half an inch in diameter in the centre of the bottom of each, and then place one in each of the houses you wish to connect; then get five pounds of common iron stove pipe wire; make a loop in one end and put it through a hole in your cigar box and fasten it with a nail; then draw it tight to the other box, supporting it when necessary with a stout cord. You can easily run your line into the house by boring a hole through the glass. Support your boxes with slats nailed across the window, and your telephone is complete. The writer has one, two hundred yards long and cost 45 cents that will carry music when the organ is playing thirty feet away in another room.—[Rural Canadian.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—As you have entered upon the seventh year of newspaper life, and that with evidences of continued usefulness and prosperity, permit me to congratulate you on your past record, and the general tone of your excellent paper during the six years just ended. I am not sufficiently posted in the printing business to criticise the defects or land the excellent points in the mechanical part of the STANDARD, but, one, thing I can say, it is always clear and legible, and contains from week to week a good supply of useful and reliable, local and foreign news, and is conspicuous for its absence of bombast. May the STANDARD continue to flourish is the worst wish of your old subscriber.

ENTERTAISING A ROBBER.

A Wounded Man in the Backyard Fell into Good Hands.

One morning just at daylight a number of years ago, a farmer named Peter Rush, living in Ontario while on his way from the house to the barn to care for the stock, discovered a badly wounded man lying on the path. The stranger, as was afterward known, had been to the barn in the night, but failing to secure entrance had started for the house. Overcome by pain and weakness, he had fallen in a faint, and had been lying on the ground an hour when discovered by the farmer. The wounded man was at once removed to the house and placed on a bed, and he soon revived enough to tell his story. He said that he was a jewelry peddler, going about the country with a companion and partner. The two had quarrelled the previous evening, and Skelling, as he gave his name, had been shot and

He had a bullet in the shoulder and another in the calf of the leg. Both were still in the flesh, and when Rush announced that he would bring a doctor, Skelling begged him not to do so. His wounds were not dangerous, and he would run all the risks. His burning desire was that his partner should believe him dead. He would then be off his guard and Skilling's chances of over-hauling him would be good. A doctor would only spread the news around and give the would be murderer opportunity to escape.

The Rushes, man and wife, were simple people, and the stranger found ready believers in any story he told. He induced them to give him an up stairs bedroom, and to conceal from every one the fact of his presence in the house. It was in the fall, and the weather was much in favor of the patient, who got along remarkably well. He instructed them and, notwithstanding the presence of the lead in his body, there was neither fever nor blood poisoning. In two weeks he was able to be about, and at the end of the third he disappeared. The Rushes found him to be a well-educated, pleasant-spoken, and kind-hearted man. He not only passed much of his time reading the Bible, but was full of religious quotations and familiar with the writings of all the apostles. The Rushes were Christian people and Bible readers, but he seemed to know verses where they knew lines. He had visited all the principal cities in America, and the long evenings were spent in telling them of the sights he had seen and the adventures he had passed through. Nothing had been said as to pay, and the Rushes did not know whether he had money or was penniless. The secret of his presence was preserved from the neighbors, who were daily in and out, and as he grew better Skelling boasted that the man who tried to kill him in cold blood would soon be hunted down and justly punished.

One evening, as the three sat talking, there came a strange knock at the door. Skelling had time to get up stairs before it was answered. The traveller proved to be a detective from Toronto, on the track of a trio of criminals who had committed several robberies in and about that city. Their last exploit had been the belonging to a band of fifty Norwegian immigrants going to the States. The trunk had been taken from the midst of them as they sat in the depot, and had not been missed until the men were well off. They had been tracked to several places and it was believed they had cut across the country in a rig stolen from a farmer. The rig had subsequently been found abandoned by the roadside. The officer questioned the Rushes very closely as to what strangers had been seen in the neighborhood, and they answered all inquiries without giving their guest away. While they did not in the least suspect him of being one of the trio, they had passed their word not to reveal his presence. The detective was in the house about an hour, and when he was ready to depart he discovered that the horse and buggy which he had left at the gate had been stolen. Rush lent him a saddle horse, and, after a search up and down the country roads, the officer returned to town in no agreeable frame of mind. When Rush went up stairs to give his guest the news

THE MAN HAD DISAPPEARED,

having opened the window and climbed down on a shed. There was no question but he had taken the detective's rig, and, although the Rushes were rather slow-witted, it did not take them long to come to the conclusion that they had freely and generously entertained one of the criminals. They were, however, in no mood to betray the fact to the world, and in a few days the excitement subsided, and nothing further was said or done.

It was nearly five years after the stranger left the farm house that Rush one day received a letter from the prison at Joliet, Mich., asking him to come at once and ask for a convict named William O'Neill. He went, and he found the man in the hospital and dying of consumption. O'Neill proved to be Skelling. Further than that he acknowledged that he was one of the robbers who stole the treasure chest of the immigrants. They were proceeding across the country, and got into an altercation within about a mile of Rush's place, with the result that O'Neill was shot. After his escape from the farm house he visited various States, continuing his criminal career, and was finally jugged at Joliet on a fifteen years' sentence. He had not forgotten the kindness shown him at the farm house, and he was now ready to repay it. He gave Rush directions where to find a sum of money in Chicago, and Rush went there and got it—nearly $8,000 in gold and greenbacks. Inside of a fortnight O'Neill was dead. The money was no doubt the proceeds of a robbery or gain from a gambling table, but this suspicion did not prevent the old couple from making use of it, or from some of the neighbors exhibiting their envy by seeking to have them indicted.

THE WORLD OVER.

The eight members of the Fraser family in Pictou, N. S., are 507 years old. Their mother died recently at the age of 100 years.

Church mice carried matches into the attic of the church of the Sacred Heart at Bathurst, N. B; they were ignited and the building destroyed.

A California cow swallowed a stick twenty inches long and nearly an inch thick, and in due course of time it worked its way out of her side without doing her much damage.

Five Chinese stowaways were found on a Pacific mail steamer at San Francisco the other day. They were all young men, and had paid members of the crew from $150 to $200 to smuggle them ashore.

A small boy in Bangor, Me., thought it would be fun to tie paper and straw to his dog's tail and set them afire. The dog ran into the boy's father's barn, which, with an adjoining house, was burned to the ground. Loss, $4,000.

Henry Worthington of Geneseo, Ill., is a nice young man. During the long evenings of last winter, instead of feeling away his time in reading or studying, or sleighriding with the girls, he made a patchwork quilt. It contains 6,022 separate pieces. Henry is just 21 years old.

Joe Harris of New London found a fat pocketbook, and as soon as he could find the owner restored it to him. The man was delighted. "There was $90 in it," he said. "I'm awful glad you found it. Here, smoke this." The cigar was bad enough to almost make an honest man turn thief.

On the first Sunday in August one of the employees in a tannery at Dexter, Me., sharpened his razor on a strap on which the curriers sharpened their knives, and proceeded to shave. He cut his chin slightly, and a few days after his face began to swell, and on the following Saturday he died of blood poisoning.

A fine fish story comes from the Snoker State. It is that a Genesee man floating down the Illinois went to sleep, leaving a stout fish line dangling in the water. When he awoke his boat was fifteen miles further up stream than when he went to sleep. A monster catfish had swallowed the bait and towed the boat up the river.

Mary S. Martin of Philadelphia, a member of the Society of Friends, saw William C. Eisenhower beating his horse. She remonstrated, and he swore at her. She had him arrested, and the Justice looked over the statutes until he found an old law against swearing, and he then imposed the fine provided therefor. The fine was 67½ cents.

Continued dry weather near Danville, Ill., led Samuel White to dig a well. He bored twelve feet, and struck water that flowed so freely that the dry bed of a creek near by has been converted into a fine stream. Farmers come from long distances to see what seems to them very much like a miracle—a stream of cold water flowing through lands that are parched and brown with drought.

James Myer, Jr., of Kingston was raking hay with a wire horse rake drawn by a mule. The mule stepped into a bees' nest with the usual results. When the bees got through with the mule and the mule stopped running, Mr. Myer, who had been spending the most of the time with the hay among the rake teeth found himself nearly devoid of clothing, but quite covered with scratches and bruises.

While the Bushwick Rifles, a crack Georgia company, was drilling the other evening a despatch, apparently from Washington, was handed to the Captain, asking how many at his command could start at once for Mexico. He read it to the boys, who with one accord began to make excuses. They wished that they had talked more warlike when they learned that the despatch was a hoax.

Lee Feng, a Chinese woman, brought to California as a slave for base uses, and sold to Ah Kee for a wife, has brought suit against him for divorce. This is the first case of the kind known in California. She says that her husband forced her to live in a house of prostitution, whence she was taken on a writ of habeas corpus and removed to the Chinese Christian Mission at San Francisco, where she now is.

James Lyon of Elmira desired a photograph of his fine St. Bernard dog. When the dog saw the camera pointed at him he suspected that something was wrong and bolted out of the door. He was coaxed back and posed again. Again he took alarm, and, the door being shut, jumped out of a window, fell on an awning, broke through, fell on two young men, smashed a hat flat, and terribly scared a small colored bootblack. The dog weighs 150 pounds.

The great reputation of Briggs' Electric Oil is such that it has induced unprincipled persons to adopt other names as near like it as possible. The proprietors of Briggs' Electric Oil have the name and style of the Electric Oil registered both in Canada and the United States, and no one can use it but themselves.

Others hearing of the success of Briggs' Electric Oil have adopted other names similar such as "Eclectric Oil," "Electron Oil," &c., and are striving to induce the public to buy them instead of the genuine Electric Oil.

In fact so determined were they that they brought a suit at Law, in the High Court of Canada, to deprive Briggs & Sons of their right to control the same; but the Courts and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa fully sustained their registered trade mark.

Briggs' Electric Oil cures Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sprains and Bruses, complaints arising from Colds such as Sore Throat, Cough, Asthma, Bronchitis and difficult Breathing.

Curls and Crusts.

"I don't like crusts, and I won't eat them!" said Mamie Dolliber, pushing her plate away, while her red lips pouted mightily.

Mamma had been telling her how wasteful it was for her to leave so much good bread upon her plate, while many little girls had to go without any breakfast at all.

"I'd give 'em all my crusts, if they were nice," said Mamie, with a little chuckle.

But Mamma went on talking not seeming to notice.

"There is another reason," she said, "why I do not like the habit. It gives your face a very untidy appearance. What if Aunt Nannie and Uncle Ben and Aunt Nannie and Brother Will and I should each leave a little pile of crusts, with the soft bread nibbled out? How do you think it would look?"

Mamie laughed at the idea, and looking up archly into her mamma's face, she said,— "There'd be a lot for little hungry girls, wouldn't there?"

Mamma looked at her disapprovingly, while Uncle Ben said, addressing Mamie's mamma,—

"Did you ever hear that eating crusts would make the hair curl?"

"No, I never heard it," replied Mrs. Dolliber.

"Of course, I can't say positively that it is true," said Uncle Ben, with a sober face, "for I never needed to try it, for my hair curls naturally, though, to be sure, I've eaten crusts all my life, now I come to think of it."

He did not so much as look towards Mamie while he was talking, but the little girl listened, with her two pink ears very wide open indeed.

If there were any one thing that Mamie Dolliber longed for more than another, it was for curly hair. Hers was as straight as an Indian's, except when mamma did it up in curl papers, and then it never stayed curl over night. Could this suggestion of Uncle Ben's be true, she wondered? She had half a mind to try it. She hated crusts, but then she hated straight hair.

The next minute, when Uncle Ben looked across at Mamie's plate, not a crust was in sight. Then he was seized with a sudden fit of coughing, and Mamie patted him on the back; and the more she patted, the more he choked and coughed, till she asked mamma if somebody had not better go for the doctor. But Uncle Ben recovered after a time, and told an odd story, at which everybody laughed and laughed until the tears ran down their cheeks, though Mamie could not see why it was so very funny.

After this there never was a crust on Mamie's plate, and how the bread did vanish.

Said mamma one day,—

"Somebody must be eating more bread than usual. Last week I had to buy rolls twice or three times, and this week, although I made an extra loaf, I shall have to bake before Saturday."

"It is good bread," said Uncle Ben; and then they all laughed, and Mamie wondered what they were laughing at.

She knew where the bread went, but she did not think it was necessary to tell, and she was glad that nobody asked her about it. She thought it a little strange that not even mamma seemed to notice that she left no crusts nowadays.

Once, when she was taking the end slice of the loaf, which her sharp eyes now always spied out, she chanced to glance up at Uncle Ben, and she half thought he was laughing behind his napkin; but the next minute he was talking soberly enough, and she felt she had been mistaken.

Meantime, she watched her hair with great eagerness. It did not as yet show the least sign of a crinkle. So she tried to eat more bread, in order to get the crusts; but when there was plum-pudding, or fruit-cake, or ice-cream, or strawberries on the table, she was often tempted to give up the hope of curls altogether, for bread did fill up so that there was not much room for the goodies she liked so well.

At last, a brilliant idea possessed her. Nobody could like to eat crusts, she thought, though papa pretended to like them. So one day she took the big bread-knife and went into the store-room, where the bread was kept. She was there a good while, and a few minutes after she came out, Mamma went in, and what do you suppose she found?

Mamie had cut every particle of crust from two large loaves, and what a muss she had made on the nice clean shelf! But Mamma did not scold Mamie; no, she scolded Uncle Ben instead. And I think he deserved it.

And although Mamie did no more mischief with her mother's smooth, white loaves, she did continue to eat the crust on her slices of bread at the table; but she never had curly hair. Nor did she ever find out till years afterward that Uncle Ben was joking the day he told about curls and crusts.

The Death of Grace Darling's Sister.

On a recent Friday Grace Darling's only sister died in her little home under the shadow of Bamborough Castle, within sound of the wild waves that beat against Holy Island and the rock that wrecked the Forfarshire. The simple and pious old lady to the last, like the heroine herself, could not understand why so much had been said about the plain act of duty which made the family name immortal. She has been laid in the sea side churchyard, close to the sister who died so young forty years ago, and whose marble effigy lies in the sea wind and sun, with her ear upon the folded arm. A gray stone wall divides the thin grass of the holy ground from the bleached and pallid growth of the sand dunes. For the dark and strong basalt of this Northumbrian coast, into which is built the tremendous pile of the castle, is everywhere heaped with the sands of many storms.

If ever there was a "wide-watered shore" straight out of Milton's visionary mind, it is this. This is a clean sea, moreover, and when the late sun of the north catches the foam of the "league-long breaker," nothing could be more wildly beautiful. The keep of the castle is to be had for summer visitors, and is inhabited just now by the Bishop of Oxford.

ARSENIC IN THE GUM.

A Colored Lad Gives his Father Liberal Doses of Rat Poison.

A colored boy 14 years old was the other morning arraigned in a Boston Court on the charge of attempting to murder his father by administering rat poison. The little fellow glories in the fact that he almost killed his father, and confessed with evident satisfaction. The boy says he was incited by a woman who had a grievance against his father, but his chief motive was revenge because the father refused to gratify a whim.

The boy walked into Station 3 closely followed by his rheumatic father, Joseph Frewle, who keeps a newspaper stand and fruit store. Joseph's son John, according to the father's description, is "the smartest little nigger in the city, only he'll lie as fast as he can talk and steal everything he can lay his hands on." Frewle was a slave before the war. For a few weeks the boy has been at work in his father's fruit store. The father noticed that the receipts began to diminish from the first day and soon learned that the boy was helping himself to the change. He remonstrated but without avail. The boy kept on stealing. Then the father cut out all but one of the boy's pockets, and every night he searched that pocket for money stolen during the day.

About six weeks ago the father was suddenly taken ill and nearly died. The case puzzled his physician. He thought it looked like arsenical poisoning, but he could not learn that there had been arsenic around the house. The patient recovered and seemed to be regaining his strength, when he was again prostrated with the same symptoms. Again he rallied, and again he was taken ill.

All this time Mr. Frewle chewed gum and wondered what ailed him. There was no clue to the cause of the trouble until last Friday. That night Mr. Frewle found a lot of blue powder in the lad's handkerchief, and some large grains of the same substance in his pocket. Mr. Frewle called the boy and said to him:

"What are you going to do with that stuff?"

"I was goin' to put it in that food to poison you," was the reply, as the lad pointed to some food on the stove.

Then the boy confessed that he had taken rat poison and carried it in his pocket two days before he made up his mind to use it. "Then," said he, "I put it on your bread and in your gum. You thought the bread was mouldy, but it wasn't. It was the poison."

Frewle does not chew tobacco, but he is very fond of gum. When a customer entered the store he would lay the gum upon the most convenient spot, and then forget it for an hour or two. The boy would improve the opportunity to put poison in the gum. Frewle was greatly alarmed when he found that he had been swallowing arsenic. He sent for three doctors. They agreed that he had had a narrow escape, but that he was now out of danger.

At first Johnnie took all blame upon himself but when he was again called before Capt. Hurley, he said that a woman, whose name was withheld, had incited him to the crime. The woman once worked for Mr. Frewle and had had trouble with him. Johnnie has gone to jail, and the police are investigating the story about the woman.

It Wasn't a Sickly Country.

"Isn't this a sickly country?" said a stranger to an Arkansas man.

"No, sir."

"Then why is it that nearly every one I see is sick?"

"Oh, the people is sorter sickly, but the country never gets sick. Never heerd o' sich a thing all my life."

THE FARM.

Fowls—Keeping Large Numbers.

By careful feeding and proper care, a good laying hen may lay as many as one hundred and seventy-five eggs in a year, but when hundreds of hens are kept together on the farm, the average seldom reaches one hundred eggs per annum. A comparison of the treatment accorded large and small flocks shows that, as a rule, the smaller the flock the greater is the variety of food furnished to the individual, while the competition for existence is increased with the number of hens in the same flock. Division into families seems to be a natural and necessary condition of all animals, and though congregating and herding for mutual protection, they pair and separate during the breeding seasons. It is unnatural for poultry to be kept in large numbers together, especially during the times of laying and hatching. The small flock secures generally all the scraps from the kitchen and the table, and, as a rule, these contain a larger share of the nitrogenous elements (meat, etc.), than is generally fed to large numbers, which partially accounts for the greater production of eggs from the smaller flock. With a large number, the cost of labor is lessened proportionately, and as but few really estimate the labor of caring for a small flock, the keeping of strict accounts charging labor as an item would demonstrate, that there is not such a wide difference in the proportionate profit as may be imagined; yet, as the labor is of but little value until the flocks are large, it is safe to admit that small flocks are more profitable.

The capital necessary for keeping 1,000 hens need not exceed $3,000, and even less will answer, yet but few would be satisfied with a profit of only twenty-five cents a year from each hen, although it amounts to $250, or over eight per cent. Fifty cents per hen annually is not considered an extravagant profit, and it is conceded that a hen should pay one dollar. It depends, however, entirely upon the management, and not the amount of capital. If a large number be so managed, that eggs and chicks are marketed, and the expenses be brought to a minimum, the capital invested in poultry will bring a large dividend. If a small flock can be made to give a large profit, a number of small flocks should be managed in the same manner and with proportionate results. Properly managed poultry pays better profits than any other farm stock, but it is unreasonable to expect poultry to return in one year the entire capital invested.

Timely Suggestions.

It is reported as a common thing in open fields in the west to see in spring seed wheat near the fences while the rest is frozen out. At that rate it seems as if it might be profitable to have hedges for screens across the course of the prevailing winter wind, even but a few rods apart. They do good by sifting violent, tearing winds anywhere, for everywhere fierce winds are a most serious check to tender vegetation.

The economy of pushing on the growth of young animals from birth and fattening at an early age cannot be questioned—where market profit is the only object. But those who fatten an old animal have the compensation—especially if the meat is for home use—that each pound of it contains more of solid nutriment and more of appetizing flavor than can be found in the softer and more vapid young meat.

A French writer says: "Few colts are born with defective hocks, and if, in riper years, such appear the cause must be attributed to the farrier's vicious handiwork. It may arise from his ignorance in this respect. The first shoeing ought to be done by an experienced farrier, one not likely to coerce or torture the colt, and so have an unhappy influence on its temperament forever."

It is easier to keep an animal fat than to make it fat, and consequently it is the wisest plan to make a young animal fat as soon as possible after birth, and then never allow it to get poor.

If farmers would make it a rule to veal the poorest calves and raise only the best ones they would find their profits materially increased. Feed given to unworthy animals is largely thrown away.

Any farmer who pays 6 per cent interest disburses more than he can afford to pay out for legitimate purposes. If he pays more—and a large number do—he is doomed and might as well give up first as last. His downfall is inevitable. The spider money lender will hold him fast as long as there is a bit of substance left in him. Then he is mercilessly thrown aside as a financial corpse.

An Extraordinary Murder.

A murder has just been committed at Frontchristiann, near Briancon, telegraphs our Paris correspondent, under very extraordinary circumstances. Two sisters named Maria and Catherine Ollagnier, aged 45 and 47 respectively, lived together at that place. They were in comfortable circumstances and were most attached to each other. Much of their time was devoted to religious exercises and good works and they were esteemed far and wide. It seems that on Monday Catherine Ollagnier told her sister that the Lord had appeared to her in the night and had asked her to sacrifice her as a proof of her devotion. Maria Ollagnier saw nothing strange in this, and consented to be offered up as a victim. Accordingly, on the following day, after attending mass, the two sisters returned home, and after taking a cup of coffee, Catherine made a deep gash with a razor in Maria's arms and feet.

Catherine Ollagnier relates that as she was bleeding to death, her sister repeated, "Jesus, Mary, my hope, my Saviour!" while for her part she carefully collected the blood which flowed from her wounds as a precious relic. As soon as Maria had breathed her last Catherine laid her out, attiring her in a white robe. She then proceeded to a notary at Briancon with a copy of her sister's will. She assured the notary that God had bidden her to kill Maria, and to burn all the securities she possessed, and that she had obeyed his will in every particular. Catherine Ollagnier was, of course arrested on the spot, and she is to be examined by a medical expert with a view of ascertaining whether she is sane.

CRUEL, FAITHLESS EMILY.

A Young Wife Deserts her Old Husband and Elopes Disguised as a Nun.

A little over a month ago, in a small town near Parsons, Kan., Luke Moore and Emily —— were married. The groom was a man about 65 and the bride not yet 18. She was visiting from an Eastern city and he was a rich farmer. Taken by her city ways, he proposed matrimony, and the knot was tied. Mrs. Moore tired of her old spouse quickly, and, repenting her hasty marriage, with all the impetuosity of youth plunged into the wildest excesses, until her actions became the talk of the little town. She was on one of her freaks when she ran across a well known travelling hardware man from Chicago, giving his name as Pollock. She confided in him her troubles, and he easily induced her to run away. They came to Kansas city and concealed themselves, intending in the morning to take the train west.

When the Southern Kansas came in a man with a flowing white beard, and bearing every evidence of being a well-to-do farmer, jumped off the train and commenced a systematic search through the remaining trains at the depot. People wondered at the old fellow going through the trains and peering into every one's face. Going through the one in which the guilty pair were seated—the male companion several seats back of his guilty partner—he passed a quiet looking Sister of Charity, giving her a mere look. Something must have attracted his attention, for, as he reached the door, he turned round and gazed a few moments at the Sister's back. She turned around, evidently thinking he had left the car and she had escaped suspicion. He recognized the face, and, with a heartrending cry, "Oh, Emily!" rushed to her seat.

She repulsed him, but he tried to take her in his arms and carry her away. The passengers in the car, seeing the indignities the supposed Sister was undergoing, and thinking what the old fellow's wails of "my wife Emily" were those of a crank, they became indignant. One man, Pollock, who was sitting several seats behind, jumped up and attempted to eject the old man. The conductor ordered him to leave the car or an arrest would follow, as he believed him a crank.

"But, my God, sir," cried the aged farmer, "she is my wife. I married her not a month ago."

"Oh, get off the train, you crank, or I'll fire you off," said the conductor.

The old man was forcibly ejected from the train amid the indignation of many and cries of "Send the crank to an asylum," and his own cry, "My God, Emily, you're cruel!"

He left the depot hurriedly to invoke the law, but when he came back the train had pulled out and the bird had flown. As it pulled out Pollock came up and took a seat beside the fraudulent Sister. They chatted and smiled pleasantly together, while the remaining passengers commenced to smell a rat. It was these actions that subsequently gave credit to the story of the deserted old man, as he spoke feelingly of his child wife. She took considerable money.

Scotland and England.

Scotland was an independent kingdom from the earliest times. The first attempt to assert the supremacy of England was made by William the Conqueror, who, in return for predatory raids by the Scots over the border, invaded Scotland in 1072, and made King Malcolm acknowledge him as over-lord. This acknowledgment was the cause of much dissension, but the national interests of the two kingdoms were believed to be indissolubly united by the marriage of the daughter of Malcolm to Henry I., king of England. In 1286 the direct royal line in Scotland became extinct, and there were several claimants to the throne. These made King Edward I. of England the arbiter of their claims, and he decided in favor of John Baillol. In return for his favor Edward compelled King John to swear allegiance to him as his over-lord. John being forced by his subjects to disavow the allegiance, Edward resolved upon the conquest of Scotland. He invaded the country with a great army, deposed the king, and finally took possession of the kingdom. Then followed the twenty years' struggle for independence on the part of the Scots, headed first by William Wallace and after his death by Robert Bruce. Edward died in 1307, on the eve of his third invasion of Scotland, and his successor, Edward II., inherited neither his military ability nor his determined energy. The struggle ended with the complete overthrow of the English army at the battle of Bannockburn in 1314. England acknowledged the full independence of Scotland by treaty in 1328, and from that time the aggressions of the stronger kingdom were only those provoked by the Scots themselves. To gratify her antagonism to England, Scotland formed an alliance with France, and, whenever war was declared between these hereditary foes, hastened to invade England in behalf of her ally. The Stuarts came to the Scottish throne in 1376, in the person of Robert, a son of Marjorie, the daughter of the famous Robert Bruce. The two royal houses were united by the marriage of James IV. of Scotland to Margaret Tudor, daughter of Henry VII. of England. The great-grandson of this union, James VI. of Scotland, succeeded to the throne of England also as James I., in 1603, and the two kingdoms were peacefully united. The Scots continued to have a separate parliament until 1707, when the legislative union of the two kingdoms was accomplished.

The One Thing.

"If it wasn't for one thing, boys," said an old farmer, as he got down from his wagon, "I'd bet enny amount o' money on thet bay colt o' mine trottin' a mile in 2 16½. I'd bet a million dollars of I had it."

The crowd laughed derisively.

"What is the one thing?" asked one of the crowd.

"The distance is too fur for the time."

HEALTH.

The Sleeping Habit.

The ability to sleep well is one of the most excellent qualifications which can be possessed by a hard worker in any sphere of life. Sleeping is very much a matter of habit, and there is no doubt that the taking of sleep at regular hours is one of the most excellent means of preserving health; but there are many professions and provisions in life that do not admit of absolute regularity in respect to rest or sleep. Physicians, and in fact professional man generally, are called upon to discharge duties which necessitate long periods of severe labor and insufficient and irregular sleep. Such persons may to a large degree atone for the transgression of the physical law requiring regularity of sleep, by acquiring the habit of sleeping whenever opportunity affords, even though the hour may not be the one usually devoted to rest. Napoleon and Wellington have often been quoted as persons who took little sleep. It is said of both these men that they rarely slept more than four hours at night. This is unquestionably an insufficient amount to maintain the wear and tear of an active body, and numerous anecdotes support that belief that both Napoleon and Wellington really secured a much larger amount of sleep than is generally supposed.

For instance, it was reported of Wellington that it was not an infrequent thing for him to fall asleep at the dinner table in the midst of a meal. In one instance he fell into a profound slumber in the midst of a repast to which a number of his friends had been invited. Out of deference to the Iron Duke, all the guests suspended eating, and maintained the utmost silence until he awakened. On another occasion his son, while riding with him, was astonished to discover that his father was sound asleep. The horse, a fast trotter, was going at a high rate of speed, and the Duke held the lines. His son was obliged to awaken him to save a disastrous collision, but received no other recognition for his service than the angry exclamation, "Mind your own business, young man!"

Napoleon was famous for "taking forty winks" when riding in his carriage or whenever opportunity afforded. Both of these men probably managed to get nearly the average amount of sleep. For a man whose habits must necessarily be irregular, it is a valuable acquisition to be able to fall asleep at almost any time when opportunity affords—when riding on the cars, waiting in a railway station, or at any other time when necessarily disengaged, to improve the chance to put in the time in sleeping, providing nature has been defrauded of the necessary amount of time for repair and recuperation. By this means, one who would otherwise break down under a constant strain of mental activity, may be enabled to prolong his usefulness, when otherwise he might meet the expectations of his friends in a complete physical break down.

Cause of Short Life.

Dr. Hitchcock, the eminent professor of physical culture at Amherst, believes that the reason why the average length of life is only forty years, is that men and women live too fast. Their heads are prematurely bankrupt; their stomachs are worn out; their hearts, kidneys and muscles are overworked. If the use of tobacco increases the next as it has during the past twenty-five years we shall not only know of sudden death from heart and brain injuries consequent upon it, but we shall see in the Anglo-Saxon race, man emasculated and sorely deficient in muscular strength. A lack of control over our bodily and mental functions is one reason why we live forty instead of seventy years.

One of The Mysteries of Paris.

A very singular affair has just found its denouement at the Morgue in Paris. Some days ago the body of a little girl, between 4 and 5 years of age, enveloped in a sheet and lying on a pillow, was found on a staircase in a house on one of the minor streets of the city. The little creature was extremely pretty, she was neatly dressed, and had evidently been well tended and taken care of during her short life. The first idea naturally entertained by the press and the public, as well as the police, was that a crime had been committed, and that the child had been murdered, by some person or persons interested in getting rid of her. Yet a careful examination of the little corpse by skilled physicians failed to reveal any trace of violence. It was then subjected to a refrigerating process, and was exhibited for several days at the Morgue, but though thousands came to see the poor little creature, no one could recognize her. Finally a thorough post-mortem examination was undertaken, and the cause of her death was at once revealed. The case is an extremely rare and curious one. The little girl had been troubled with that very common infantile affection, worms in the stomach. One of these parasites of unusual size had forced its way into the child's throat, a fit of coughing had ensued, the worm had entered the windpipe and suffocation had terminated the life of the little sufferer. It is supposed that she was not with her parents, whoever they might be, but was under the care of a nurse, who, on witnessing the child's sudden death, had become terrified for fear of the consequences to herself, and who had then abandoned the body in the place where it was found. It was therefore thought that as soon as the real facts of the case were made known, the persons who had had charge of the child finding themselves thus relieved from all responsibility, would come forward and reveal the facts concerning her. Nothing of the kind took place. The little one thus strangely deserted by her relatives and guardians, had been quietly interred, and her name and identity must henceforth be cited among the undiscovered mysteries of Paris.

A widow owned a large gravel bank which a certain railroad company was very anxious to secure. Several propositions were made and rejected, and the president finally sent his private secretary down with instructions to offer up to $14,000. The young man returned after a couple of days and, when asked how the business had turned out, replied: "I will accept your offer." "You?" "Exactly, I married the widow and own the bank."

MARKDALE, SEPT. 9. 1886.

—AWFUL, destitution prevails in the drouthstricken region of Jones and Stonewall counties, Texas, no rain having fallen there for fourteen months. The region has been transformed into a desert. All the settlers who could leave have fled, but about three thousand families are threatened with death from starvation unless assistance is given them.

—The members of the Methodist Conference are to be congratulated upon their refusal to assert that the members of their church do not command that influence in public affairs to which their numbers and intelligence entitle them. The proposition to that effect was most injudicious. No church should seek to control political patronage, and no church is in less need of formally asserting such claims than the one represented by the members of the Methodist Conference. Methodists figure among our most active and most intelligent politicians, and it is to their credit that they are to be found working conscientiously on either side of the party line or cleavage. Neither oil and water nor religion and politic can be successfully mixed. One or other ingredient is bound to come to the top, and not the one that is the nicer to take, either. [World

The recent earth quake at Charleston, S. C. was the most severe ever known on this continent. The damage to property, and buildings in particular, is enormous, footing up to some $4,000,000. The residents are panicstricken and a number fatally wounded. One heave of the earth has made the proud city a mass of shattered ruins and there is hardly a building in the city, which, instead of being a protection, is not a danger to the citizens. A disaster so great cannot fail to cause wide distress among the people of the State. A continuation of shocks have occured almost daily since the first one, but not near so severe.

—Here is something important, if true, which comes to us from Montreal via Chicago. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the Allan Steamship Company have entered into a spirited competition for the English and Canadian trans-Atlantic mail contracts. This is the first step of the former company to absorb the Allan Line. Sir Donald Smith, who has recently returned from England, has made arrangements on behalf of the Pacific company for eight fast ocean steamers, the object to reduce the time not only between Liverpool and Canada, but between English ports and trains-Pacific points. The Pacific Company are determined to open up the fastest means of communication between England and the East through Canada that can be effected by skill and capital, and it is believed its management has the hearty cooperation of the Salisbury Government. Should the effort to capture the Atlantic mail contract succeed, the Canadian Pacific route will be one of the heaviest subsidized lines in the world. The company has already secured the Pacific mail contract, together with assurances of a $5,000,000 subsidy from the English Government, and a like amount from the Canadian Government to assist in opening up the route.—[World.

A HIGHWAY OF MIGRATION

It has been regarded as a certainty for some time that the British Government would subsidize a line of Canadian steamships on the Pacific, but the annoucement just made that it is the purpose of the Government to establish a mail line between Ireland and Canada is news. The Dominion Government is trying to make arrangements to secure the service of a fast line of steamers for the Atlantic mail service, and the Canadian Pacific Company are likely to tender. If the Company can secure from the British Government a subsidy for carrying the mails across the Atlantic as well as across the Pacific, there should be no difficulty in establishing a line of fast steamers in both oceans.

If such an arrangement is effected there can be no donbt that Canada will become a highway of travel to the East. The great tide of emigration to Australia will probably pass through Canada and many who set out from England with the intention of locating on the island continent may become so favorably impssed with Canada on the way as to decide to settle in the Dominion instead of going further. At all events those who go on to Australia will carry with them impressions of the Dominion that must help to stimulate trade between the two countries. Canada has suffered much in the past with miserpresentation. The popular impression in Europe has been that Canada is an arctic country with scarcely any Summer. With the tide of travel coming this way these false impressions are likely to be removed. Each traveller will help to disseminate the truth and the result must be greatly increased immigration of the most desirable kind.

A Trip to the West.

To the Editor of the Standard.

On the 14th of July we left Flesherton Station for the West. We boarded the S. S. Atabaska at 4 p. m. the same afternoon at Owen Sound for Port Arthur. We had a beautiful sail over the lakes. The weather was everything that could be desired until we got to our destination about 10 o'clock Friday morning. Port Arthur is a scattered town with some very good buildings, the greater number of which are hotels. At 15 o'clock we took train for Winnipeg where we arrived at 9 o'clock next morning. This is a beautiful city; the buildings in it would do credit to a city centuries old. The weather was very warm; in the evenings, however, it was quite cool. We spent the Sabbath in the historic settlement of Kildonan and attended service in the Presbyterian church. There was a very large congregation of fine looking and intelligent people. This is the centre of the late Dr. Black's labors. The country about Winnipeg is parched for want of rain. On Saturday 24th July, we left Winnipeg for Moosmin, 219 miles west. The country is an open prairie with here and there clusters of bush near by, and far distant on the banks of the streams appear more extensive woods. The trees are mostly poplar, mixed occasionally with white birch. One travelling over these prairies for the first time will be struck with the almost complete absence of fences. The country from Winnipeg to Portage La Prairie looks well; but, owing to the dry weather and heat, the crops are short and thin. Hay will be scarce this year. Stacks of old hay still in the fields, however, give evidence that the hay crop was abundant last year. Potatoes are nearly a complete failure all through the West except at Portage La Prairie, where everything looks well. On 25th July we drove out 15 miles from Moosomin to Welwyn. The crops look fair. At the little church were assembled a congregation of about 50 people, all farmers and their families, who had come from different parts of the eastern provinces. Though they had been settled here for two or three years they were nearly all strangers to one another, owing to the extent of the farms they occupy, and the consequent distance of their homes from each other. The system of surveying the land in large square blocks is going to prove a great hindrance to the social, religious and intellectual development of the people. Neighbors seldom meet or see each other. To maintain schools and churches will become burdensome, and social intercourse will be almost impracticable. The mennonite system of living in villages and attending to their farms at a distance seems, after all, to be the most scientific way of settling in such a country as the North-West. From Moosomin to Regina, Medicine Hat and on to Gleichen, 784 miles west of Winnipeg the country appears, from the railway, to be all burnt up with the heat. It must be remembered, however, that most of the settlements are 15 or 20 milss from the railway, so that a very imperfect idea of the developments of the country, the extent of settlement and the quality of crops can be obtained by one travelling over the road at the rate of 25 miles an hour. As we come to Gleichen and approach Calgary the appearance of the country is more promising. The prairie grass here seems a fair crop, but not what it would be had the season been favorable. The town of Calgary is beautifully situated on the banks of the Bow River, (839 miles from Winnipeg) on a sunken plain, surrounded by elevated prairie lands well covered with grass. The town seems to be flourishing. A great number of new houses have been built this summer and many are in course of erection. Workmen receive good wages, and many who came here a year or two ago have acquired wealth. Calgary will always remain a place of considerable importance, as it is surrounded by a beautiful ranching country. The hills about it notify the traveller that he is soon to see the Rockies. On Sabbath, the 1st August, we were at the Cochrane ranch. This place may become one of importance as there are extensive ranches, and a saw-mill, and a coal mine. At two minutes past midnight Monday morning we boarded the train for the Mountains. The ascent is steep and the snow peaks of the Rockies are soon in view. The scenery along the line is grand beyond description. Although it is night the scene is so varied and overwhelming in majestic grandure that sleep is out of the question. The weather at Cochrane on the previous day was very hot, but in the mountain two stoves well fired were hardly sufficient to keep a car warm. Shortly after daylight we arrived at the summit of the Rockies. One towering snow-capped peak, called Mount Stephen, about 7000 feet above the level of the track, seemed to follow us at the same distance from early morning till we descended far down along the course of the Kicking Horse River. The level of the track at the summit is just a mile above the sea level. Here there is a small lake and the water from it flows both east and west. It is therefore the source of the mighty rivers that take their rise here and empty in both the Atlantic and the Pacific. From the summit the descent to Donald is very rapid. Along the Kicking Horse the grade is 4 feet in 100 feet, and in one part for about 9 miles it is 4½ feet in 100. It requires two engines of immense size to guide the train and hold it from rushing at lightning speed to destruction. It requires four such engines to draw freight trains up the hill. One of these engines is said to be 90 tons in weight. Going down this rapid descent, now rushing through tunnels, now on the verge of deep gorges with the mad stream of the Kicking Horse dashing down over the rocks beneath us, and with a roar that can be heard above the crashing of the railway train, now turning sharp curves, now winding over curved bridges of airy height, and then crashing through deep cuts in rocks, produce in the helpless traveller a feeling of mingled awe and delight which can never be forgotten. We went west as far as Kamloops, 1230 miles from Winnipeg, and within 238 miles of the coast. From Cochrane to Kamloops there is no farming country, not even an acre of cultivated land, in a distance of 400 miles. The mountains are said to contain rich deposits of gold and silver.

Is taking time by the forlock and preparing for the coming season.

He has just received the following letter from his agent in England:

Manchester, August 4th, 1886.

My Dear McFarland:

Your letter with enclosures received. Having just completed a large order for a Montreal wholesale firm, I will commence here to-morrow to make our purchases, and have pleasure in telling you that I can place your order upon exactly same terms as I did for the wholesale house I bought for. There are some lovely DRESS GOODS, VELVETS and CASHMERES in this market which I will select for you, and then go on to LONDON for the SILKS, LACES, SATINS and other goods you order, as I can do better for you in London for those goods than here.

Was pleased to learn that business with you was good, and that you anticipated an increase in your fall and winter's business. I shall do my part to help the increase, by sending you goods bought on as good terms as any wholesale house in Canada.

I remain,

Yours faithfully.

J. SELWIN.

P. S.—I expect to make a shipment of your goods say in ten days.

Euphrasia Council.

The council met pursuant to adjournment at the new township hall on the 28th day of August, 1886. Members all present. Minutes of last session of council read and confirmed. The Taxes charged against William Gilroy, $2.59, to W. P. Carson $2.42 and to R. Robinson, $2.42, were struck off collector's role on account of age, affliction, and indigence. Joseph Manary appointed collector for current year. salary $110. James Falls, appointed janitor of township hall, salary $15.00, and ordered to make returns to treasurer of all money received for rent. The Reeve, Mr. Boyd, and Mr. Erskine, were appointed a financial committee to ascertain the assetts and liabilities, of the township, with a view to levying the rates for the current year. Said committee reported that 5½ mills in the dollar will be sufficient to cover all county and Township expences. except school trustees rates, and submitted a By-law accordingly. By-law No 372, to levy the rates for the current year was carried through the different stages and passed. The Reeves orders were issued on the treasurer, to pay as follows viz: George Logan, $15,00 work on 11th line; George Rickie, $10.00, funeral expences of indigent; Neil McDonald, $4.00, work on town line Collingwood; George Rickie, $1.50 repairing road scraper; John Raby, $34.50, work on townline Collingood; Robert Myles. $10.00, extra service rendered, to township; W. Hewgill, Esq., $6.57 repairing heathcote bridge; Yeomans & Little, $722.00, balance in full on erecting hall; Duncan McIntyre, $1.50, work on 11th line. Council adjourned until tho last Saturday in September next.

To the Editor of the STANDARD

SIR,—I notice by your last issue that you have passed another milstone in the printing business: I also notice that you take credit, in a very modest manner, for the harmonious relations which has existed between yourself and those with whom you have to do. I know there are those in our town who would, long e're this, have crushed you out of existence, if it were possible to do so, and that for their own black deeds, or at least because you had the audacity to allow them to be exposed throngn the columns of your paper, yet you treated their unjust and ungentlemanly opposition with a silent contempt which was indeed praiseworthy. It is certainly a blessing for a community to have one wielding such a power as that of the press, who possesses judgement and forbearance coupled with common sense and caution. Had I held your position, I would doubtless have acted very differently, "An eye for an eye" as it were, yet I can see how foolish that would have been, and would not only compliment you on your past course, but encourage you to continue in the same line.

Hints.

The following is the recipe for the original Spalding's liquid glue. To one pound of good glue put three pints of cold water and let it soak fifteen hours; then melt in a hot water bath; when melted and thoroughly mixed add one quart of crude acetic acid and three ounces of cheap glycerine and stir well together. If too thick, add more acetic acid. Vinegar in place of acid won't answer, as vinegar is three parts water at least and only one part acetic acid.

From half a dozen cool-sliters fastened together a very good fruit-dryer may be made. Place these over an oil stove having an iron plate laid above the flame to equalize the heat. Change the lower box to the top every now and then and be sure to dry the fruit, not to cook it. Fruit may thus be dried on a small scale with great satisfaction.

For felons and rusty nails hot water is said to be a specific. Immerse the part effected in water as hot as can be borne until the pain is gone. This is the cure employed by the Shakers.

Do not allow your little girls to freckle, for freckles are difficult to remove, and come early. They are caused by the oxygen in the air combining under the influence of sunshine; they may be prevented by shading the face with a hat or bonnet of proper dimensions. If the little face gets tanned, it will be well to wash it with elder-flower. And, in fact, in summer it is sometimes needed to cool the skin.

The secret of good manners is to forget one's self altogether. The people of really fine breeding are the ones who never think of themselves, but only of the pleasure they can give others. No adornment of beauty, of learning, or accomplishment goes so far in its power to attract as the gift of sympathy.

The Journal of Applied Chemistry recommends the use of a small quantity of carbolic acid in paste for laying paper-hangings and in whitewash, and states that it will repel cockroaches and all insects. It will also neutralize the disagreeable odor consequent upon the decomposition of the paste, which in newly papered walls is very offensive. The cheapest and best form of carbolic acid is crystal, which dissolves in water at an excess of temperature.

Quicksilver mixed with the white of an egg will cause the bedbugs to entirely disappear, if put in all the crevices and mattresses. A nickel's worth of quicksilver and the whites of two eggs will be sufficient for two or three beds.

Choice Recipes.

BEEF CROQUETTES.—Two cups of cold beef minced fine, half a cup of bread crumbs, two eggs, one tablespoonful of Worcestershire sauce, parsley, salt, and pepper. Mix the meat and bread together, add the [illegible] and melting [illegible]. If the mixture is still too dry work in a little melted butter. With floured hands form into croquettes, roll these first in egg, then in cracker crumbs, and fry to a good brown.

APPLE CUSTARD PIE.—Peel sour apples and stew until soft, then mash them fine, beat two eggs for each pie to be baked; put in at the rate of half cup of butter and one cup sugar for two pies. Line the pie-tins with paste; put in the apples, eggs, sugar, and butter and a grated nutmeg, after they have been mixed. For top crust put strips across in squares or triangles, and bake in a quick oven.

DANDY PUDDING.—Two quarts of sweet milk, one tablespoonful of corn starch dissolved in some of the cold milk, six eggs, beat the yolks with enough sugar to sweeten say three tablespoonfuls. Stir in the egg and sugar before the milk gets hot, then the corn starch. Let the mixture come to a boil, stirring all the time to prevent burning. Flavor with lemon. The pudding should be about the consistency of thick cream when done. Beat the whites with a little sugar, flavor, spread on the top and brown.

APPLE SLUMP.—Pare and slice one quart of apples, put them into a kettle with half teacup of water, half cup of molasses, half cup sugar, let them stew while preparing the crust. For the crust take one pint of flour, one teaspoonful of cream of tartar, half teaspoonful soda, a little salt, and milk to make it stiff enough to roll about an inch thick. Lay it on top the apples, cover close and let it cook in even half an hour with a moderate fire. Do not lift the cover until done. Serve hot with butter and cream.

FRENCH MUSTARD.—Put an onion to soak in a cup of vinegar, let stand three days, strain and add one teaspoonful each of salt, sugar, and cayenne pepper, mustard to thicken, boil five minutes.

Russia's Military Strength.

The growing disposition to compute the relative military forces of Germany and Russia finds more than usually candid utterance in an article quoted in some of the papers from the Berlin Post. After a detailed examination of the Russian reserves their numbers and the state of their organization, the following summary is given of the standing armies in the two countries: Russia: Infantry, 823 battalions; cavalry, 936 squadrons; artillery; 2,472 pieces; pioneers "and railway troops," 31 battalions. Germany: Infantry: 503 battalions; cavalry, 372 squadrons; artillery, 2,040 pieces; pioneers and railway troops, 21 battalions. Attention is called to the numerical superiority of the Russian establishment, particularly in the cavalry arm; and it is also remarked that the troops of the second reserve are more efficiently organized in Russia than in Germany. The Post winds up its article as follows:—"To judge the Russian army impartially, we should say that it exhibits signs of a new and wide-spread organization, with great attention to developing the strength; but the little homogeneity, little uniformity and consecutiveness—something about it that suggests the idea of jerks. In point of fact, the Russian character itself is clearly reflected in the army system as a whole, and the very same features can be distinguished in the political conditions of the empire."

It takes more courage sometimes to discharge a debt than it does to discharge a cannon.

FOREIGN WHIMS.

Bets Which Have Become Historical.

A gentleman of one of the London clubs made a wager of £100 that he could stand for an entire day on a plinth in London bridge with a tray of gold sovereigns, and offer them at a penny each without finding a purchaser. He won the wager, as the passers-by supposed the coins were brass and declined to invest.

The Master of the revels of George II. was regarded as the ugliest person in the kingdom, as none had been found who could successfully contend against him for this distinction. One of the noblemen of the court laid a wager that he could produce a person surpassing him in this respect. At the time appointed he caused a notoriously homely fishwoman that he had heard of to be brought, who stood by the side of the champion. With the approval of the present wearer of the belt, the palm was about to be awarded to her, when a bystander, probably interested also in the result of the decision, suggested that the champion put on the old lady's bonnet in order to make the conditions of the contest more equal. He did so, when the added ugliness was so emphatic and indescribable, that the victory was awarded to him.

Another wager, which is somewhat familiar owing to the extraordinary character of the feat, was that of Sir John Throckmorton, which was for one thousand guineas that he would wear a suit of clothes in the evening made from the wool taken from sheep the same day. At 5 o'clock on a Summer morning in 1811 two Southdown sheep were shorn, the wool was washed, roved, spun, carded and woven; the cloth was scoured, fulled, dyed and dressed; the measure taken, the suit cut and completely made and worn at a dinner given by Sir John at 6 o'clock in the evening.

The wagers made on the speed of horses are so common, and the terms and conditions so uniformly of a commonplace character, that they hardly command attention on the score of novelty. Donkeys have times been put on their speed, a quality that they have not been popularly supposed to possess. About twenty years ago a race (so-called) came off on the Newmarket course to decide a bet of £100 made by the owner of a donkey that he would go 100 miles in twenty-four hours. The meek-looking little chap not only let his master out in good form, but had fully three hours to spare.

After the battle of Gettysburg an officer in command of an infantry brigade made a wager with a staff officer in the cavalry that more than one-half the muskets captured would be found to have one or more charges still in them. This led to the discovery of a very singular fact. At that battle 28,000 muskets were taken, of which over 18,000 were found to be loaded. Some 12,000 contained two loads and 6,000 had from three to ten loads each. In many instances half-a-dozen balls were driven in on a single charge of powder, while in not a few instances the former possessor had reversed the usual order and put the ball in first.

Some ludicrous and amusing wagers were paid on the result of the Presidential election. A Meadville (Pa.) girl bet fifty kisses against a Winter wrap that Blaine would carry New York.

TERRIBLE DEATH OF A TEXAS BOY.

From the Bite of a Rabid Dog—The Mad Stone Proves Useless.

On the farm of W. K. Gandy, near Fort Worth, Kan., a rabid dog bit Walter Gandy, 4 years old, in the face. Several of the animal's teeth entered the flesh in the cheek and above the eye. The little boy did not suffer; except from the laceration, but the parents at once took him to Denton, where a mad stone was applied. It would not adhere, and it was said that no virus had entered the system. Not satisfied, the father took the boy to Mansfield, where a second mad stone was applied. It also refused to adhere. Saturday the little fellow said his throat was sore and refused to eat. He would cry when water was brought near him, and soon became frantic. Physicians went out from Fort Worth and exhausted their skill, but the boy grew worse, and greenish foam issued from his mouth. His piteous cries and contortions were simply horrible. A little playmate came to see him yesterday and Walter snapped at him, biting him slightly in the face. The physicians fear this boy has also been inoculated with the poison. In the evening the sufferer became quiet for awhile and slept for a few moments. He awoke with the tremor, barked like a dog, bent himself nearly double, gnashed his teeth, blood and foam gushed from his mouth, and he was dead. Mrs. Gandy, the mother of the boy, is prostrated with grief. It is feared she will die from the shock.

The Place of Honor.

A few days ago a fond mother gave a juvenile daughter a chocolate sweetie, which however, from maternal fear of bairnie's appetite, was not eaten at once, but was to be kept till the afternoon before being devoured. "Now, dolly, said the loving parent, "mind you have promised me on your honor not to eat the chocolate before tea time, haven't you?" "Yes, mother," answered the dutiful mite, and went on her way rejoicing. A very short time afterward the chocolate disappeared, all traces of it gone, save a sticky, brown mark round the little girl's rosy lips. "Dolly, Dolly," remonstrated her mother, "where was your honor when you ate the sweetie?" "In my 'tomach," was the profound and unanswerable reply.

"That was a mysterious disappearance of Smith, the teller of the Cash Bank." "How so? His accounts were all right." "Yes. That is where the mystery comes in."

Thefts of money from garments hanging in the clothes room of a Meriden factory led the electrician of the establishment to catch the hitherto undetected thief. He connected a pocketbook in the pocket of a pair of trousers with wires that terminated at a gong in a distant room, and so arranged the wires that the gong would ring when the pocketbook was moved. The pocketbook was moved, the gong sounded, and the thief was caught.

Mr. John McDonell, of Glenroy, a Glengary Province, has just died at the age of 71 years. He came to Canada in 1816 when an infant, and for a time lived in the township of Lochiel afterward removing to Charlottenburgh, where he resided until his death.

John and Michael Hickey have been fined $100 for operating an illicit still near Port Perry, and John and Michael Bowles for permitting the illegitimate business to be carried on upon their premises were convicted and will appear for sentence when called upon.

While mounted police in pursuit of the Edmonton stage robbers were passing the Sarcee camp of One Arm at Calgary, a brave ran at Inspector Moodie with a sword and the inspector, in self-defence, shot him through the arm. Four bottles of beer were found in the Indian's shirt.

When Ah Sing, now lying in the New Westminster gaol under sentence of death, was informed that he had been granted a reprieve for a month he was very angry and much disappointed. He is a believer in the transmigration of souls, and after execution he expected his soul to inhabit the body of a bird, and counted on getting even with those who had given evidence against him by picking their eyes out.

A vigorous fight is in progress between the School Board and the Council of Windsor. The Board want the Council to raise $16,500 for the building of a new High School. The Council voted on the question, and by a majority of only one decided not to make the desired appropriation. The School Board now propose taking legal measures to compel the Council to vote the money. The Council are against the appropriation because they are not pleased with the School Board's selection of a site.

Mr. Thomas Kittle, of Moore Township, while digging in a swamp for water, came upon the skeleton of a mastodon. The tusks or horns are over four feet long, and weigh about forty pounds each. The upper jaw and part of the head is three or four feet long, and is more than one man can lift. The ribs are of enormous size. The whole remains have not yet been excavated, but the process of exhumation is going on, and scores of visitors are going from all parts of Lambton to view the remarkable discovery.

School Teacher East, of Tyendidaga School Section No. 4, resigned his charge, but as he claimed his resignation was not acted upon he had two weeks to teach after vacation. On reaching the school on Monday last, however, he found Trustee Brown with a lady teacher in possession and was informed that his resignation had been accepted. He seems to have disputed this statement of the case and to have attempted to open the school whereupon trouble ensued and a magistrate has been called in as final arbiter in the premises.

There is a squabble in legal circles in Belleville. The story is told that while a prominent counsel was absent from the court room an attorney donned his gown and entered upon the defence of a couple of criminals in dock. When the owner of the gown returned he peremptorily ordered the removal of the garment, but the judge allowed the attorney to appear before him without a gown. Several members of the profession now threaten to bring a charge against the attorney. They claim that an attorney has no right to conduct a case at any criminal court except a police court.

Several Germans from Hay Township took the train at Clinton the other day. Near Sebringville the hat of one of the party blew off, and unconsciously he stepped off the train to recover it. The train was running at thirty miles an hour at the time, and it was taken for granted that he would be instantly killed. As soon as possible a stop was made and the train was backed toward the locality of the accident with the object of taking on the mangled remains. Soon, however, the corpse was found running along the track to catch up to the train. He had received a bad cut on the side of the face and a dislocated shoulder, but otherwise was uninjured.

A married woman of Portland, N. B., when proceeding homeward a few nights ago was attacked by an unknown man on a deserted street. Her screams were heard by three men ahead of her. They hurried to her assistance and captured her assailant. The woman hesitated about going to the police station to lay an information, and expressed a wish that he should be punished in some other way, whereupon two of the rescuers seized hold of the ruffian and held him, while the third beat him until he fell exhausted upon the street. They then kicked him until they were tired, and left him in a very badly used-up condition.

A young man near Brussels was employed to take the flax pickers home to that town. He had a lot of dry hay in his new hay-rack, and being anxious to see how quick about 25 men could get off his wagon he dropped a lighted match into the hay. Every man jumped for his life, the funny man included, and but for a farmer who jumped the line fence and caught the team there would have been a runaway. By a desperate effort the horses were detached from the wagon only slightly singed. The new hay-rack was destroyed, however, and considerable repairs had to be done to the wagon. The young man is not favorably impressed with his success as a humorist.

Fish is good brain-food, except in instances where it doesn't find anything to assimilate with.

A TRIAL UNPRECEDENTED.

A Scandalous Affair from the Monastery, Pelgrai Beheaded, and is Acquitted.

Bordeaux has been in a state of excitement about the trial before the Assize Court there of a Dominican named Pierre Brechard, a Doctor in Theology, and a remarkably fine-looking man of 35, with a long brown beard of exceptional luxuriance. The indictment sets forth that on the 31st of March last a malefactor entered the Dominican monastery at Lille and with the aid of false keys succeeded in opening the safe in which money, Stock Exchange securities, and other property were kept. He carried off twelve debentures of Austrian Rente worth 30,000 francs, and upward of 9,000 francs in bank notes and gold. This robbery must have been committed by a person familiar with the monastery, as no window was broken, nor was any noise heard by any one belonging to the house. Pierre Brochard, it was further set forth, left the building on the eve of the robbery, and on the 14th of May assumed the name of Berthier, went to the office of M. Molina, a money changer of, Bordeaux, and sought to get several Austrian debentures cashed.

As notice had been received by the money changers of Bordeaux not to pay the stolen bonds, M. Molina, finding the numbers were the same as those on the list sent by the Dominicans of Lille, caused Pierre Brechard to be arrested. The monk, on being interrogated, owned that he had been enabled by false keys which a Lille locksmith manufactured for him on the model of the real ones, to open the iron safe of the order. He committed the robbery the night after he left the monastery, when all the inmates were in bed, simply by unlocking every door that came in his way. On quitting Lille he decided to renounce an ecclesiastical life. He simulated suicide by leaving his monastic suit on the bank of a river, where they were found. He swam to the other side, and, as he had prepared the brotherhood for suicide, they concluded, when his frock and underclothing were found, that he had drowned himself. Then under the name of Berthier he proceeded to Bordeaux, and told every one he met about the suicide of the monk Brechard, so that he was never suspected of the robbery, and would not have been detected but for the money changer noticing the numbers of the Austrian debentures.

Nothing could be more full than the avowal. On the judge asking whether he had anything to add in extenuation of his offence, he said that he had a grave malady which science was powerless to cure, and that owing to its effects on his brain he was unable to preach. It was under the influence of this derangement that he planned and executed the robbery which, he owned, he went about in a cool and cautious manner that seemed incompatible with the mental state he described. His crime was abominable, and his repentance was deep and bitter. A Dominican brother was called by Brechard's counsel as a witness of the circumstances of the robbery. He knew nothing beyond what had been confessed, but he informed the jury that according to the civil law there had been no robbery, all things being in common in a monastery. Brechard had perhaps taken more than his share, and prematurely, out of a fund of which he was a co-proprietor, for under the decree for the expulsion of the religious orders this money was divided equally among the brethren, who were to be regarded as a religious family. The presiding Judge indignantly protested against this theory, but it went home to the jurors, who returned a unanimous verdict of acquittal.

Then her mother saw that she was pale, and wondered if the storm had shaken her.

"Don't look so anxious, mignon. As if I had not done it twenty times before! It is not a night to miss."

"Hark!" called Lady Keith, with uplifted hand. "Is not that a gun?"

"It is only the bursting of the tempest," Cynthia answered

"There is another—and another," Lady Keith persisted

"They are minute-guns!" Leonard exclaimed, rising hastily and meeting the butler at the door brimming over with tidings.

"My lady, there is a large vessel just beyond the Point in distress; she is firing and signalling; Griffiths saw her from the turret. She'll be on the rocks, my lady, with this wind, and the tide running in."

"Poor souls!" half sobbed Lady Keith.

"All the men to the shore at once!" Cynthia ordered, promptly and clearly. "Let Owens take the cart with blankets and brandy and as many hot-water bottles as Mrs. Price can send. Marshall will take down the landau and the wagonette. Tell the groom to bring round the horses instantly for Miss Daveton, Mr. Hope, and myself, and then let him ride for Mr. Marwood and the Mawr doctors. Mamma, see that Mrs. Price has beds prepared and fires lighted. There is not a moment to lose. Edith, are you ready? Leonard, will you come?"

For the first time in her life there was a little hesitation, a scarcely perceptible change in the old familiar confident tone towards her cousin—a change to be felt rather than heard.

Few words were spoken as the three rode rapidly through the park, where a giant elm, which had been wrested in its wrestle with the fierce wind, lay, with its spreading roots upreared and bared, right across their path. Showers of leaves fell at their horses' feet, and swept whirling into their faces. They pressed on, urging the animals to their utmost speed, and listening, through the bursts of the unconquered tempest, for the solemn repetition of the signal gun.

Presently flecks of snowy foam, mingled with dust and dead leaves, blew into their faces. And when they turned the shoulder of the hill which lay between them and the ocean their hearts seemed to stand still before one of the grandest, solemnest, saddest sights in this sorrowful world.

Close in upon the shore the snow-white breakers churned and dashed in a wild triumph of lawless might; and just beyond, showing blackly against their whiteness, lay the doomed vessel—a large steamer. She lay broadside on to the cruel rocks, so near the shore that the shrieks of the passengers crowding her deck could be heard above the din of the tempest and the roar of the breaking waters—so near that, but for that hissing barrier, a rope could have saved the feeblest amongst them. Wave after wave was breaking over her, sweeping each one its tale of victims into the white foaming gulf, to beat the life out of them there, although in merciless exultation over human impotence.

It was a lonely inhospitable coast—far from help; and only a few women huddled together under shelter of the cliff, and a few men scattered along the beach, looked helplessly on at the catastrophe. Into the midst of these Cynthia, who was foremost, dashed breathless, crying imperatively—

"A boat—a boat! Will none of you try to reach them? Men, can you stand by and see them perish?"

"There isn't a life-boat nearer than Mawr, and that would be too late—she's breaking up now. And what but the life-boat could live five seconds in such a sea?" one of the older men answered.

Even as he spoke a huge wave struck the vessel; she rolled ominously, and slid from the treacherous rocks; and, when the blinding spray cleared, the seething waters were strewn with black struggling figures.

At this sight Miss Daveton, with a great cry, covered her face with her hands; and Leonard Hope, catching at the dropped reins, turned her hastily back up the pebbly slope they had just descended.

And so it happened that neither of them saw what came next—how Cynthia, encouraging her gallant beast with word and touch, dashed down the beach and rode dauntlessly through the raging surf.

A hearse cheer burst upon the strand, and a shrill cry, "Heaven bless her!" pierced the air, as Cynthia rode up "out of the jaws of death," with a dozen desperate hands clinging to her horse and an infant lying across her knee.

"The woman sank as she handed it up to me. Take care of it," she said quietly, as she gave it to one of the women.

Then she dropped from her saddle down amongst those waifs rescued from Death's dread dominion, and busied herself straightway in ministering to them.

It was a scanty harvest, gleaned after the Great Reaper; but it was all that was gathered that day from that full field. A woman, wild-eyed, and well nigh spent; a young girl white as a lily; a little dark-haired boy, who cried out, as they set him on his feet, for his father and his mother; a couple of rough sailors in coarse serge and homely blue-striped shirts; and another man, of a different stamp, in fine linen and soft-woven tweed, who was bleeding from a ghastly wound over his temple. And this last had his fingers so tightly clenched in the horse's flowing mane that the men were forced to cut the long hair away to set him free.

"He's about done for. Pity a livelier one hadn't been in his place!" said one of the bystanders, as he helped to lay him down in the shelter of the cliff and tried to staunch the gaping wound. "The rocks have a'most battered the life out of him. He's a gentleman; and he couldn't stand it so well as the other chaps. But here comes the doctor, by good luck. He'll look to him."

The surgeon was bending over him when Leonard Hope, set free from his cares for the others, drew near. The man was still unconscious, lying in a deathlike stupor; the wound was bound with a large crimson handkerchief, the features were overspread with a ghastly pallor. Leonard looked down upon him with unrecognising eyes. The doctor drew him aside.

"It is a hopeless case, I fear," he said. "Perhaps you had better take charge of this"—offering him a pocket-book. "It may give some information as to his name or friends. He will presently be able to give it himself. In the meanwhile he must be removed at once. Is he to go to the Castle?"

"Yes; but the carriage has gone on with the rest."

"Then the men will carry him. We must improvise some sort of a litter. There, that will do. Gently, my men, gently!"

In the confusion which reigned at the Castle for hours after the rescued party were brought in, Leonard Hope found it impossible to speak to Cynthia—always the ruling spirit there—although burning with the excitement of a discovery. Late in the afternoon, and after favourable bulletins had been issued of all the patients save one, Mr. Hope found the three ladies of the house gathered together in Cynthia's boudoir, Miss Daveton sitting by the fire, with the infant saved from the wreck in her arms, and Lady Keith and Cynthia bending over the little waif as it smiled and stretched its arms towards them in its unconscious orphanhood.

"What is it?" Cynthia cried, starting up at Leonard's entrance. "Is he alive? Has he spoken?"

"No," answered Leonard; "but be prepared for a great surprise, Cynthia."

"Who is it, Leonard?" she cried, beginning to tremble.

"Oh, no one—nothing that need agitate you! But it is strange how that wedding at St. Sebastian's haunts us in some shape or other. Look at this."

He put the pocket-book which the surgeon had handed to him into her hands. On its first page was written the name "Percival Danvers."

"Hush!" whispered Cynthia quickly.

But it was too late.

"It is the bridegroom," Leonard said. "Why, Cynthia!"—as she caught at the back of the chair from which she had risen.

"What—what have you done?" she stammered.

"I?" he cried, astonished at her agitation. "I have telegraphed for Mrs. Delamaine."

At the same moment Miss Daveton rose to her feet, white as death; and Lady Keith drew the child from her arms to save it from falling.

"Let me see it," she whispered in a strange breathless voice, taking the book from Cynthia's hands.

A paper fluttered from it on to the table, and lay there spread out before her eyes. It was the register of the death of Marie Delorme Danvers, aged 23, on the 25th of June, 187—, at Bella Vista, St. Jerome.

The date seemed to burn itself into her brain. Then she had wronged him; she had been deceived, as he said, by a trick. And he lay there, close to her, cruelly wounded—dying, through her fault. Instantly she perceived that he had perished in bringing her this vindication of himself. Somebody had said, she remembered dimly, that the wrecked vessel was a large West Indian steamer with passengers. Dizzy and faint as she was, the whole story pieced itself together before her, and she was stricken with bitter self-reproach.

"Let me go to him—I must see him!" she exclaimed. "Take me to him!"

"You?" Leonard gasped.

"Yes," she answered, with a shudder; "I—I am his wife!"

* * * * * *

"Poor child! It has been a terrible blow. She is quite overwhelmed. If he could only have spoken to her once more!" Mrs. Delamaine was saying, with her handkerchief to her eyes. "Dear Lady Keith, it is a tragical ending to a most happy marriage. My poor daughter is completely overwhelmed!"

Lady Keith only bowed her head gently. Mrs. Delamaine was quite unconscious of the truth. No one had had time, in the confusion and distress when she arrived on the scene, to make any explanation, and now no one had any inclination to enlighten her. So she talked on of her dead son-in-law's virtues, of his devotion, and of her daughter's heavy loss, uncontradicted.

"After such brief happiness to be a widow at eighteen," the mother lamented—"a rich widow too, which is almost an additional trial. He has left her the whole of his fortune. Nothing could exceed his liberality, excepting his attachment to her.

"Poor child!" Lady Keith echoed with genuine sympathy, thinking how her riches came to the young widow weighted with a bitter load of self-reproach.

Mrs. Delamaine, unenlightened, quitted Penmawr Castle with many polite speeches to its hostesses, and took with her a pale silent widow, whose lips never opened in her own home on the subject of her husband. Society heard the story, after Mrs. Delamaine's version, and sympathised and was interested, especially as there was a large fortune concerned.

Cynthia was still staunch and true to her friend. When the Christmas festivities were over at Penmawr, she and Lady Keith would carry Eve Danvers away to sunny Italy to recruit her health and bring back her roses. And perhaps Leonard might join them there. Well, the wound could not be very deep, since Cynthia was planning thus, and delighting herself in her own plans!

But there was one person—and only one—in the drama who was not satisfied to cover up the memory of the man whose death had planted such a sting in the heart of Eve. Leonard Hope remembered another Marie Delorme Danvers—a spectator with him of that wedding procession which had played so strange a part in all their lives since. And, connecting that sad pathetic face and sudden death with the history Cynthia had confided to him, he found the clue to the truth.

It must have been a more than common interest which carried him, still on the track across to St. Jerome and brought him face to face with Cecile Lacroix.

"And my words followed him!" said the implacable Frenchwoman. "Now my darlings may rest in peace. They are avenged."

"So that timber will never be felled," Sir George Vivian said, as his wife laid down a letter she had been reading aloud to him.

It was from Cynthia Keith, and dated from a chalet in Tyrol, to which Lady Keith and her party had gone, after their winter in Italy.

"Danvers," Lady Vivian said; "that is the rich young widow whose husband was drowned last year! I thought Leonard Hope and Cynthia were intended for each other by will, or something of that sort; but Cynthia seems quite delighted at this match."

[THE END]

The Hundredth Anniversary of the First Successful Ascent.

Sunday, Aug. 8, was the one hundredth anniversary of the first successful ascent of Mont Blanc. The district now so famous, was first made known to the world through the celebrated Oriental traveller Pococke, who happened in 1741, to be in Geneva, and, hearing of the terrible grandeur of the Savoy Alps, set out to see for himself. He was accompanied by an adventurous fellow-countryman named Windham. They had a guard of soldiers. There were no roads, and they followed up the course of the Arve. A romantic account of the expedition is given in the Mercure de Suisse for May and June, 1743. In are described, its great rashness is descanted upon. But they went little beyond Chamouni, where they bivouacked, lighting watch fires, and firing off guns during the night to scare possible marauders. It is supposed they got as far as the Mer de Glace; but Pococke's Arabian experience were a poor preparation for trudging over a glacier—and such a one—and so he turned back, telling the polite society of Geneva of the wonders which were close to their doors, unknown to them.

It was after this time that the name "Mont Blanc" was given to the "monarch of mountains," hitherto a nameless unit of "Les Montagnes Maudits," the name by which the group was known. The imagination of the famous naturalist, Horace Benedict de Saussure was fired by the account of Pococke's adventure. His life from boyhood well on to mature age was occupied greatly by explorations of the High Alps, during which he made nearly twenty unsuccessful attempts to scale Mont Blanc. In 1760 he offered a considerable sum of money as a prize for whoever would FIND A WAY TO THE TOP.

Many, besides himself, tried in vain to scale it, and among them who tried were some whose names (Balmat, Cachet, Carrier) have become familiar as names of experienced and skilful guides who have won the confidence and esteem of Alpine climbers.

At last, on Aug. 8, 1786, Jaques Balmat, accompanied by a Dr. Paccard, gained the summit. He went by the Rochers Rouges; the route hitherto followed led to the Bosses du Dromadaire, which had proved utterly insurmountable. Dr. Paccard nearly lost his life from the consequence of this terrible expedition. Balmat became famous, receiving besides Saussure's prize, presents from the King of Sardinia and others. Next year de Saussure, with a suite of seventeen guides and porters, reached the top by Balmat's route and carried out successfully a series of most important meteorological observations. During forty-one years Balmat's route by the Rochers Rouge was followed, till in 1827 two Englishmen made their way by the Corridor and the Mur de la Cote. At last in 1859, Hudson succeeded in making his way over Les Bosses; successive layers of snow falling have established a way to the summit which is now the least difficult. But this single fact illustrates the precarious character of even the most favorable adjuncts of Alpine climbing.

In the period of 1786 to 1880 Mont Blanc was climbed by 869 visitors without taking into account guides, porters or local chasseurs. Of these only 49 ascended the mountain during the first 68 years between 1786 and 1854; the remaining 820 during the succeeding 26 years. Fewer lives comparatively, have been lost among the climbers of Mont Blanc than in other parts of the Alps. The fatal record down to 1880 included only 25 persons, 7 of whom were tourists.

In September, 1870 a party consisting of three tourists, three guides, and five porters were overtaken near the summit by a snow storm, which continued to rage with such violence that eight days passed before any search could be made. Five frozen corpses were found about 500 yards below the top, the remaining six are wrapped in perpetual snow. Several ascents have been made for scientific purposes since the time of de Saussure. Thus, Marcins, Bravais, and Le Pileur in 1849: Tyndall and Dr. Frankland in 1858, and Dr. Pitschner in 1859. In 1861 Photographer Bisson reached the top after one failure. He had the excellent guide, Auguste Balmat, with him and twenty-five porters. But the whole of the porters were quite overpowered with sleep, the result of fatigue and the rarefied air, so that he and Balmat had to do everything, naturally with imperfect results.

Thomas Moult's Predictions.

Seven months of the year 1886 have passed away, and the world still wags much as it did in 1885; but, according to an ancient prophecy which has been unearthed by the Petit Moniteur, very important events may be looked for ere next December comes to an end. One Thomas Moult, who flourished in the thirteenth century and who is alleged to have foretold the appearance of Napoleon I., the revolution of 1830, the Italian war and its consequences, the war of 1870, and other matters of moment, has left behind him several predictions for the present year. He promised us, for example, "bien des revolutions" in one of the great states of Christendom; a new form of government in a republic; a notable strife; and the ascent of a throne by a great prince. In addition to these prophecies, Thomas bequeathed a few precious words for the guidance of farmers and wine merchants. The harvest, he declares, will be fairly plentiful, yet prices will be high. The grape crop will be good only in a few districts, and wise men will stick to their gold stocks of wines and buy more. Thomas Moult was born—but no! Until these predictions have been fulfilled, we need not write his biography.

When a merchant takes an article of goods worth $4 and marks it at $7.50 he wants to be understood as selling "at regardless of cost." It is the purchaser who must regard it in that sense.

How Married Women Go to Sleep.

There is a certain action, the result, entitled "How the Girls Go to Sleep." The manner in which they go to sleep, according to the article, can't hold a candle to the way a married woman goes to sleep. Instead of thinking what she should have attended to before going to bed, she thinks of it afterward. While she is revolving these matters in her mind, and while snugly tucked up in bed; the old man is scratching his legs in front of the fire and wondering how he will pay the next month's rent. Suddenly she exclaims: "James, did you look the door?"

"Which door?" says James.

"The cellar door," says she.

"No," says James.

"Well, you had better go down and look it, for I heard some one in the back yard last night."

Accordingly James paddles down the stairs and locks the door. About the time James returns and is going to bed she remarks: "Did you shut the stair door?"

"No," says James.

"Well, if it is not shut the cat will get up into the chamber."

"Let her come up, then," says James, ill-naturedly.

"My goodness, no!" returns his wife; "she'd suck the baby's breath."

Then James paddles down-stairs again, and steps on a tack, and closes the stair door and curses the cat, and returns to the bedroom. Just as he begins to climb into his couch his wife observes: "I forget to bring up some water; suppose you bring up some in the big tin."

And so James with a muttered curse, goes down into the dark kitchen and falls over a chair, and raps all the tinware off the wall in search of the "big" tin, and then jerks the stair door open and howls: "Where the deuce are the matches?"

She gives him a minute direction where to find the matches, and adds that she would rather go and get the water herself than have the whole neighborhood raised about it. After which James finds the matches, procures the water, and comes upstairs and plunges into bed.

Presently his wife says: "James, let's have an understanding about money matters. Now, next week I've got to pay——"

"I don't know what you'll have to pay, and don't care!" shouts James, as he lurches around and jams his face against the wall; "all I want is sleep."

"That's all very well for you," snaps his wife, as she pulls the cover viciously; "you never think of the worry and trouble I have. And there is Araminta, who, I believe is taking the measles."

"Let her take 'em," says James.

Hereupon she begins to cry softly, but about the time James is falling into a gentle doze she punches him in the ribs with her elbow and says:

"Did you hear that scandal about Mrs. Jones?"

"Where?" says James, sleepily.

"Why, Mrs. Jones."

"Where?" inquires James.

"I declare," said his wife, "you are getting more stupid every day. You know Mrs. Jones, who lives at No. 21? Well, day before yesterday Susan Smith told Mrs. Thompson that Sam Barker had said that Mrs. Jones had——"

Here she paused and listened. James is snoring in profound slumber. With a snort of rage she pulls all the covers off him, wraps up in them, and lies awake until 2 A. M., thinking how badly used she is. And that is the way the married woman goes to sleep.

SUMMER SMILES.

"Mamma," said Bobby, "I have eaten my cake all up, and Charles hasn't touched his yet. Won't you make him share with me, so as to teach him to be generous?"

He stood under the window and sang "How Can I Leave Thee." But he did leave, and so suddenly that the dog went back of the house and wept.

A French duel has resulted in the death of one of the principals. It must have been an accident. We have long had a lingering suspicion that a Frenchman would get hurt some day in that apparently harmless pastime.

Corporal to Soldier—"Why is the blade of the sabre curved instead of straight?" Soldier—"It is curved in order to give more force to the blow." Corporal—"Humbug! The sabre is curved so as to fit the scabbard. If it was straight how would you get it into the crooked scabbard block-head?"

"Look at that fat fellow," remarked a man, addressing an old gentleman who stood near him; "he's so fat, that he must be a burden to himself." "I don't think that he is," the old gentleman rejoined; "upon the contrary, I think that he is a burden to me." A burden to you? How so sir?" "He married my daughter."

Editor (shivering in his night garments, and peering over the banisters into the gloom below)—"Who's there?" Voice below—"A burglar." Editor (with his teeth chattering)—"I thought so. Did you shut the door behind you when you came in?" Burglar—"I didn't." Editor—"I was sure you didn't The blast coming upstairs is half freezing me. Is it not enough that I am made the victim of such neglect all day at my office, without having you come around here in the dead of night and adding to my misery? Go back and shut the door." The conscience striken burglar at once retraced his steps, and shut the door from the outside leaving the editor's vaults unrifled.

A bartender in the back-room of a country store, in mixing a drink for a customer, accidentally poured in about two tablespoonfuls of turpentine. He discovered the mistake, but, saying nothing about it, he filled the glass with whisky. The man drank the mixture, smacked his lips and walked away. Pretty soon he returned and said: "Bill, haven't I allus been er good customer uv yourn?" "Yes." "An' allus took what yer set afore me without saying a word?" "Altus done the best I could fur yer, Bill." "Uv co'se, Andy; what's the matter with you?" "Well, it's just this: Why haven't you been givin' me that good liquor all the time; Been er drinkin' here ever-since you started, an' jus' now is the fust time you've ever give us your best licker. Hand me out another drink like the one you give me just now, and we'll call it squar."

CATARRH OF MANY YEARS STANDING CURED.
Dr. N. Washington, Throat and Lung Surgeon, Toronto and Halifax:
DEAR SIR,—I am pleased to express my extreme satisfaction at the results of your "NEW METHOD" of Inhalation which has cured me of Catarrh of a very troublesome character; in fact all the usual remedies failed to give me any relief, but your Treatment, from the first, gave great ease, and in a few months entirely cured me of a most annoying disease. I can honestly recommend any who may be suffering as I was to your skilful consideration.

Dr. Carson's Catarrh Cure; no cure no pay. Ask Stephen, your druggist about it.

Painful suspense—Hanging.

Thousands owe their recovery from Rheumatism to West's World Wonderer or Pain Liniment. It is conceded everywhere to be the best known remedy for Rheumatism, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains, Burns, Scalds, and all diseases requiring external application. Price 25 cents and 50 cents per bottle. Sold by A. Turner & Co., Druggists, Markdale.

If you add another syllable to short you will make it shorter.

A SURE THING.—A Sure Cure for Summer Complaint.—Procure from your Druggist a 37½ cent bottle of Dr. Fowlers Extract of Wild Strawberry and use according to directions. It is infallible for Diarrhœa, Cholera Morbus, Canker of the Stomach and Bowels and Cholera Infantum.

A cotemarary calls his items "Nits" to show that he gets them out of his own head.

GOOD VALUE.—Many suffers buying medicine have been disappointed, don't give up but buy a reliable article like Dr. Chase's Liver Cure, and with it you get a receipe book alone worth the money.

When is a lover like a tailor? when he presses his suit.

THE latest remedy for Coughs, Colds, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, etc., is McGregor's Lung Compound. There is no other remedy in existence containing any one of the active ingredients composing McGregor's Lung Compound, so do not say you have taken everything until you have tried this for your cold or cough, and your opinion will be the same as all who have used it, viz., that it is the best. Sold in 50c. and $1.00 bottles by R. L. Stephen, Druggists, Markdale.

A bad habit to get into—A coat that is not paid for.

TO THE RESCUE.—"When all other remedies fail," for Bowel Complaint, Colic Cramps, Dysentry, &c., "then Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry comes to the rescue." Thus writes W. H. Crocker, Druggist, Wroxeter, down, and adds that "its sales are large and increasing.

A genuine young shaver—A barber's baby.

A FREE GIFT.—Around each bottle of Dr. Chase's Liver Cure is a Medical Guide and Receipt Book containing useful information, over 200 receipes, and pronounced by Doctors and Druggists as worth ten times the cost of the medicine. Medicine and Book $1. Sold by A. Turner & Co.

A crying shame—Our neighbors baby.

"What is McGregor's Speedy Cure for? It is for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Indigestion, Biliousness, and it is the finest blood purifier in the known world to-day. "Does it give satisfaction?" We cannot point to one instance where it did not. "Where does it have the largest sale?" Right in the City of Hamilton, where it is manufactured, there has been over one thousand dollars' worth sold in the last year retail, and the great majority of the sales are by one recommending it to another. For sale at 50c. and $1.00 per bottle by R. L. Stephen, Druggist.

ARE YOU MADE miserable by Indigestion, Constipation, Dizziness, Loss of Appetite, Yellow Skin? Shiloh's Vitaliser is a positive cure. For sale by R. L. Stephen, Druggist, Markdale.

McGREGOR'S SPEEDY CURE.
When we say McGregor's Speedy Cure is the only perfect cure for Dyspepsia, Liver Complaints, Indigestion and Impure Blood, we are telling plain facts, of which hundreds upon hundreds can testify who have been restored to perfect health by its use. We would therefore advise you strongly, if you are a subject of any of the above troubles to give McGregor's Speedy Cure a trial, and be convinced. It is sold in 50c. and $1.00 bottles at R. L. Stephen's Drug Store.

Pains connot exist after the patient has taken a single dose of West's Pain King, the magic cure. Do not be induced to take a substitute but insist upon having West's Pain King. Genuine, sold by A. Turner & Co., Druggists.

WHEN you are in Markdale be sure and don't go away without calling at Wm. Mason's carrage works as he is deter- mined to sell the balance of his stock of Democrats, Buggies &c., at a great reduction in price.

WONDER why we were not favored with a copy of the prize list of East Grey Fall Show, or even a poster. We have always shown a spirit of good will and courtesy to that institution and the village where it is held, and have yet no desire to give it a cold shoulder, but would like they would reciprocate. It will certainly be to their advantage.

THE East Grey Conservative conven- tion will be held in Markdale on the 11th instead of the 8th as announced in some of the local papers. The change was made to a avoid collision with local Agricultural Fairs.

WM. MASON is busy making up cutters, sleighs &c., for the winter trade so now is the time to call and leave your order so as to have it out in good time. He will be glad to have you call in and learn his prices &c.; he is also giving great bargains in democrats &c.

W. MCLEOD has secured the services of two first class workmen, who have had experience in the best factories in the towns and cities in Canada and the United States, and he is now prepared to supply a class of work wh ich cannot be excelled.

WE exceedingly regret to learn that Mr. Alex Mercer, Sr., had the misfortune to have his leg broken last Friday. It appears he was passing behind the horse in the stable at home when the animal kicked him breaking the leg above the knee.

Miss Love has returned after spending a few weeks in Meaford, her parental home, and a few days in Toronto stock- ing up her Millinery department.

Fatal Accident.—Last Friday morn- ing Mrs. James Lawrence of Bentinck an old lady of over eighty years of age, went to the well and fell in, being drown- ed before assistance arrived. It is sup- posed that the extreme age of the de- ceased lady caused a sudden fit of faint- ness as the well was only a few feet deep. Her funeral, which took place last Sun- day was largely attended.[—Durhma Chronicle.

LAST week the heat was indeed op- pressive; this week a little fire is appreci- ated.

THE bills are out announcing the Glenelg Fall Show to be held in Mark- dale on the 30th September and 1st October. This gives promise to be the best exhibition ever held here.

OUR Mr. Jackman has been indisposed for three weeks, but we are glad to say he is again able to resume active duties.

W. A. Brown, Jeweller, is supplying his many customers with good goods at bottom prices. A splendid variety to select from. Read his advertisement and call on him.

WE regret to learn that the Rev. Geo. H. Cornish met with a serious accident after his arrival in Toronto, by stepping through an opened trap door in his Son's store on Yonge Street. He was seriously bruised and shaken, but fortunately no bones were broken. The fall was about eleven feet. It has been with consider- able personal suffering that he has at- tended to his Conference duties.

RUNAWAY.—On Monday morning as W M. Speer, baker of this place, was driv ing down Mill Street with his wife and young child, the horse bolted suddenly opposite the Revere Hotel throwing Mr. Spear out of the buggy; the horse then ran violently down the street and as the woman had her child to care for and the lines being down among the horses feet was entirely helpless, the animal again suddenly bolted near the Railroad House pitching Mrs. Speer and child violent- ly out on the sidewalk. The child was none the worse. Mrs. Speer was badly shook up but it is expected not seriously injured, Mr. Speer was not much the worse while the horse and buggy are safe with the exception of a broken shaft.

THE concert at Holland Centre under the auspices of the C. O. O. F. of that place, on Tuesday the 7th inst. was a fair success. Financially, it would pay but not add much to the treasury, as far as the programme is concerned it was of the first quality, comprising the best talent of Owen Sound and Markdale. A speech by Dr. Cameron on the orgin of the Order, was interesting and inst- ructive, two or three recitations from Mr. Calback of the same place were well received and a recitation by F. Porter of Markdale received applause. These were interspersed with soul stirring songs by J. R. Anderson and the noted Tim Benson both of Markdale and Mr. Mc- Laughlin of Owen Sound. We must not forget the Glee Club from Markdale led by Mr. A. Hill. They are hard to beat in their rendering of "Pretty little dark blue Eyes," also "Mary's lamb." After the concert was over the young people indulged in a quiet little dance.

A few Sundays ago a number of boys from Williamsford Berkeley and Mark- dale indulged in the harmless sport of breaking some 12 or 15 lights of glass in the public school here. Now they have to appear before the trustees and pay for the broken lights or appear be- fore the magistrate and pay a fine with the damages.

WE believe Mr. Robt. Mc Bride caught a beaver alive and has him on exhibition. It speaks well for the cunning of Mr. McB.

Don't forget the bargains offered in Dress Goods at J. G. Anderson's; its wonderful how we do it, but we do.

THE FARM.

Scissored and Penned.

Why should there be not as many grades and prices for milk as for butter. There certainly are as many qualities.

An exchange calls attention to the evils of bleaching evaporated fruit with sulphur, and also using hard, immature fruit for drying.

Working horses and working men are far less dangerous than the drones, equine or human. Work keeps the dangerous elements in both where they ought to be.

Fighting flies is about as hard work for the horses as plowing. Rub their legs lightly twice a day with a rag wrung out of water that smells strong of carbolic acid.

To oil an iron axle-tree, first wipe the spindle clean with a cloth wet with spirits of turpentine, and then apply a few drops of caster oil near the shoulder and end. One teaspoonful is sufficient for the whole.

Give the wheels a good coat of boiled linseed oil. This will fill the pores as well as water, swell the wood, tighten the tires, and is much more lasting in its effects, and at the same time is acting as a preservative of the wood.

Weeds on gravel walks may be destroyed and prevented from growing again by a copious dressing of the cheapest salt. This is a better method than hand pulling, which disturbs the gravel and renders constant raking and rolling necessary.

The Western Plowman gives the following hint which our readers would do well to heed: Farmers can get one valuable pointer from "plow jockeys"; they are always careful to have a sharp plow when showing up good work or light draft. Moral, always keep your plow sharp.

Put your skim milk and buttermilk into calves or pigs, supplementing them with cornmeal and a sprinkling of oil meal, says the United States Dairyman. Give both calves and pigs room to move around in and keep clean. Both will be benefited by having good grass to feed on in addition to what is carried them. It will keep them healthy and contented and promote growth. Plenty of clover is a good preventive of hog cholera.

One of the chief reasons why orchards should not be cropped is because it requires cultivation during the summer season. When roots are destroyed by deep working the ground it often results in permanent injury to the trees, especially if done late in season. Since the clearing of woodlands has given winds a free sweep the soil dries out much faster than formerly, and this makes trees more liable to injury from mutilation of their roots.

There's nothing like the agricultural fair to educate the farmer. When he sees the crowd tramp his big cucumber and overgrown spring chickens into the ground to pay twenty-five cents to get in the amphitheatre to see a horse race that was sold out the night before, he realizes the grandeur of his profession and takes his diploma and goes home so enthusiastic that he feels just like buying all the farms in the neighborhood, and going into the exclusive business of raising things to snatch diplomas from the grasp of fair committees.

There appears to me to be a possibility of our achieving much greater things with dairy cattle than we have done. The more stock the more crops. A maximum number of cattle on a minimum quantity of land necessitates artificial feeding, and this is just what makes the soil fertile, and so the ball set rolling by heavy stocking, heavy feeding, and heavy cropping, brings grist to the farmer's mill. High feeders almost always find it pays, and the extent of the purchases of a judicious farmer in artificial feed is often the measure of his success and the condition of his farm.

"If you should call upon us about seven o'clock some evening this summer, and see our young men all dressed up, you would hardly think we were farmers who had been at work in the dirt all day, perhaps. If you expected from the color of our hands and faces that we were farmers you would certainly think that we were 'expecting company.' Our boys visit the bath-room after work is done and sleek themselves up, often putting on clean clothes entirely, and then go in for a good time until nine or ten o'clock." So writes Mr. T. B. Terry to the Albany Cultivator. He insists that farmers may be just as neat and tidy, when the day's work is over, as though they lived in a town or city.

Harness Polish.

The Science News gives the following recipe for making a harness polish: Four ounces glue, a pint and a half of vinegar, two ounces gum arabic, a half pint of black ink, two drams isinglass. Break the glue in pieces in a basin, and pour over it about a pint of vinegar; let it stand until it becomes perfectly soft. Put the gum in another vessel, with the ink, until it is perfectly dissolved; melt the isinglass in as much water as will cover it, which may be easily done by placing the cup containing it near the fire about an hour before you want to use it. To mix them, pour the remaining vinegar with the softened glue into a sand-pan upon a gentle fire, stirring until it is perfectly dissolved, that it may not burn the bottom, being careful not to let it reach the boiling point; about 82 degrees C. is the best heat. Next add the gum; let it arrive at about the same heat again; add the isinglass. Take from the fire and pour it off for use. To use it, put as much as is required in a saucer, heat it sufficiently to make it fluid, and apply a thin coat with a piece of dry sponge. If the article is dried quickly, either in the sun or by fire, it will have the better polish.

They tell a story, said to be a true one, of a farm-hand in Ontario who was so smashed by the rosy cheeks and bright eyes of a of a school-ma'am boarding with his employer that he one day remarked with a sigh to the latter. "I would give a dollar to kiss her." "All right!" said the complaisant employer, "you may." When settling time came the man found his cash $1 short. "Why did you take out that dollar?' was asked. "Oh! that was for kissing the school-ma'am," was replied. "But I didn't kiss her," protested the man. "Well, if you didn't it was your own fault. I gave you leave."

THE CHARLESTON EARTHQUAKE.

Effect of the Shock on the Negroes.

It would be simply impossible to exaggerate or to depict in sufficiently descriptive language the effect of the visitation of that Tuesday night on the colored people of Charleston. A great deal has been written about these people and their actions under the strong feelings of sorrow or despair; but there was never, until within the past few days, an opportunity of noticing a public exhibition of superstitious fear to the degree that has existed among all classes of the colored people since the tremendous shock of that Tuesday night. Only a few minutes after the warning voice of the earthquake had passed away, the effect on the mind and imagination of every colored man, woman, and child in the city was complete. They fled from their homes, they knew not where, and as they ran hither and thither, through blinding clouds of pulverized mortar which was shaken from houses and arose again from the streets, they filled the air with and lamentations of terrified and terrifying distress. As usual with them in their funeral devotions, the name Jesus was most frequently used, and as though supplicating God face to face, they shrieked out in the very helplessness and pathos of despair such sentences as "Do, my Master, Jesus, have mercy on me!" "Oh, sweet Jesus, save me, save me!" "Let me live through this night, dear God, my Saviour!' "Hold me up once more, Thou blessed Christ, my Master!" and other tearful supplications, which intensified the horror of the situation, and went far toward demoralizing the white people, who were also rushing blindly and blinded hither and thither in the fitful glare of flickering lights, almost eclipsed by the shower of descending and ascending dust. As usual, the faces of the white man and white woman in the time of danger was a sight of sudden joy in the gloom to many a poor wandering colored boy or girl, who endeavored to stop their white friends as they ran by in the confusion to supplicate that they would remain with them until the "Judgment was done." In many an instance a trembling colored girl and seized with frantic energy the folds of some white lady's dress, and, failing to express their terror in words, with scarcely moving lips betokened that they wanted only the moral support of a friend in the hour of distress and agony. But the white faces were blanched a paler hue. There could be no stop or stay in the mad race away from tottering house tops and toppling parapets. The trembling suppliants were hastily thrust aside by those whom events have proved were powerless to save themselves. There was death in the air—nay, more, it was below and around and was expected none knew whence. Only the feeling was ever present that every body stood face to face with the menace of instant death.

DISMAL GROANS OF DESPAIR

SANK DOWN ON HER KNEES

SCENES IN THE STREETS ON TUESDAY NIGHT.

Certain scenes that were observed on the streets immediately after the first shock deserve to be described, and especially one that indicated the general feeling throughout the city. Further north on King street than the locality just mentioned there was a tremendous throng of citizens assembled. Nothing can account for the fact of the great crowd but the supposition that for some reason the people left the side streets and were poured like a stream into the principal thoroughfares. The remarkable instance referred to was the exhibition of joy and the voices of congratulation that were heard on every side, and all mingled with words of thanksgiving to the Divine Providence. People clung to each other like brothers and sisters. There were no strangers there.

They all knew each other as part and parcel of a community that had escaped a terrible fate. Some,

WITH TEARS OF REPENTANCE

and joy in their eyes, embraced each other. Women fell on each other's necks, and, with hearts too full to speak, rocked to and fro in the happy embrace, devoutly thanking God in silence for His blessing in the dreadful hour, and the children in arms and at their mother's knees lisped out they knew not what, but it was plain that they all realized that somebody had been killed, and immediate danger was over. Not so with the trembling and demoralized colored people. After the hand of Providence had been apparently removed they began to prophesy, and to recall all they knew in their confused way of Bible scenes and Bible history. "It's the night of Sodom and Gomorrah," shouted one in a frenzy of apparent delight. "The city of St. Michael is down to the ground," yelled another; "I told you so," cried a third; "Aha, how about my wife's dream now?" said a fourth; "Look for the rock of Horeb to split," said another; "Pray, my white people, why don't you pray?' Old women began crooning over snatches of negro religious melodies and frantically seizing each passer by and inviting them to join in the "song of praise to the Redeemer." After an hour or so prayer meetings were organized, and the singing and screaming were kept up until daylight. At that time the watchword was passed around. "The battle is over, but the soldiers must not rest;" and this order was carried out on Wednesday and Thursday nights.

FRENZIED NEGROES.

On Thursday night, however, on Marion square, the sights and scenes baffled description. The colored people were unrestrained and committed all manner of riotous and and frenzied excess. A report of their actions as they took place would perhaps be considered blasphemous in such a staid and conservative city as Charleston. The first object, and that one interested everybody's attention was an assemblage of colored boys, about a half dozen in number, who had fallen to the ground in a paroxysm of religious frenzy. They were grovelling with their faces down in the grass, and were singing a hymn in a loud voice. The hymn was, "The Angels a Rappin' at the Door," and the refrain, sung rapidly, was, "Oh, tell ole Noah to bill on de ark, to bill on de ark, to bill on de ark." This song they repeated over and over again until they were quite tired and ceased from utter exhaustion. In a few minutes they were fast asleep.

Near the boys was a large tent which had been gaily decorated for some festive occasion. In the door stood a very old colored woman swaying backward and forward, her lips only moving, but uttering no sound. The crowd in front of her watched with intense anxiety. Suddenly she burst out with the hymn, "Oh, Realin Jacob, Let Me Go," and the crowd joined in the mighty refrain. The crowd swayed their bodies forward to the right and to the left, alternately, just like a sacred dance, of emotion. Finally one man dropped to the ground "converted." The lamp was hastily brought from the tent, and he was surrounded by a crowd of women who held his hands. He cried aloud for mercy, and eventually swooned away and was almost as rigid as a corpse. The work of conversion then went on, and in less than a half hour about ten men and women succumbed to the emotional sensations of the occasion. Similar scenes were being enacted all over the square.

CLAPPING THEIR HANDS IN AN ECSTACY

The prayers which were offered up were simple in every sense of the word, but they evidently came from the bottom of hearts that were palsied with fear. One of these prayers was as follows:

Keep my brothers and sisters. What is the matter now? Oh, Lord look on last Tuesday night: some is dead and gone. Oh, my handsome God, dear sir, look down on us. We know what the little finger of the Lord can do. Sometimes the world can kick up in thunder, but de take care of our brothers. Ain't the black lamb and the white lien done lie down together in peace? Move along, my brothers, move along. God gimme grace to move along. Ain't I done promise to be baptize?

Just here the crowd took up the words "promise to be baptized," and sang it to the end with peculiar force and pathos. Then the exhorter proceeded.

"Fight the battle, fight the battle; fight out girl, fight it out boy! Oh, yes, ma'am, the time is come. Wake up, wake up, de last chance is come to save old Charleston. Oh, my Lord, don't touch my city any more I pray God to hold the world up. Ah, ah, I thank God. Take fort Is country people, fight for it people. Walk on brothers. Hip, hip, hip. Oh, Lord, take me in your charge to-night. Night before last I didn't expect to see Jesus. Oh, God look down at these dry bones in the valley. Didn't you hear Gabriel's horn blow? Oh! Gabriel, turn that horn to the land of Egypt on the the miserable sinners and not on we. Oh, Lord, we are here to-night. The birds have nests, but we are here to-night for mercy. Oh! Lord, have mercy."

After this hymn about a dozen people were converted, and the work was kept up in a similar strain until bread daylight. To the white people who were there the scenes of Thursday night can never be forgotten.

Taken From the Gibbet and Brought to Life.

There was a young man residing in Wake county by the name of Fitzgerald. Receiving information that his mother was lying at the point of death and wished to speak with him, he made immediate haste. His horse became exhausted when he arrived at the Catawba River. He applied for a fresh horse. By contract to return it in a special time he obtained one, leaving his own until his return. He found his mother still alive and conversed with her. She soon died and was buried, and he, remembering his appointed time to return his horse, being behind time found a State warrant against him for horse stealing, was arrested, committed to jail in Statesville, was prosecuted with all hatred, malice, and vengeance, convicted by the law, and executed by hanging, and pronounced dead. His friends obtained his body from the gibbet carried it a short distance from Statesville, to water, applied the proper remedies, restored the body to life, and returned with it to Tennessee. He there married and raised an interesting family, highly intelligent, wealthy, honest, and respectable.
